It is not a dry treatise on anatomy and physiology, but it explains in a highly inte manner the human body as it has never been explained before. It tells in a simple what you have always wanted to know about yourself. It will be to you a genuin lation and education. The knowledge which it imparts you cannot obtain elsewhere sum of money. It answers completely and plainly the question—"What is the body and how to make it strong, virile, full of vitality, and thoroughly healthy?" It also shows how to create super-adaptation of the organism. This book you will cherish for having given you the first real understanding of yourself. I have given facts, in this book, relating to the body and its evolution, which are considered, by men who know, far in advance of anything ever written by such men as Darwin, Spencer, Huxley, and other scientists. Moreover, the knowledge I impart is practical. It shows how you may profit through the application of the Swoboda principle to your organism. It also tells of the Dangers of Exercise and of Excessive Deep Breathing. It explains how The Swoboda System is making vigorous and strong men and women out of weak and poorly developed individuals. The evidence it offers is most convincing because it is true. Write for it and my complete guarantee today before it slips your mind. Address

$2100 Buys a Real Lozier
——Now's Your Time!

IT'S A REAL LOZIER—a real, honest, luxurious, aristocratic Lozier—and most important of all, it sells for just $2,100—no more—only think of it!—$2,100!

JUST IMAGINE, IF YOU CAN, Lozier, who has built a great reputation for high quality and high-priced cars, offering you a car—a real true Lozier, backed by the Lozier guarantee—at such a price!

THEY LAUGHED—YES, THEY DID—didn't believe it could be done—when we announced six months ago that we were going to spring a surprise on the public by marketing a $2,100 Lozier "Four."

IT SEEMED TOO GOOD TO BE TRUE and they had to be shown—they wanted to see this new Lozier before they would believe.

BUT NOW THE LAUGH'S ON THEM because—well, here it is—the car is produced, hundreds on hundreds are sold—and it is a real Lozier car—one we are proud to have our name plate on.

QUADRUPLING SALES and factory output in a year's time is an almost incredible accomplishment, yet it's just what we have done—and you get the benefit from the great reduction in manufacturing cost per car—get a real Lozier at a moderate price.

KNOW WHAT IT MEANS?—It means that this year you can own a Lozier—pay no more than you would pay for just a commonly good automobile—yet own a real Lozier.

1914's YOUR LUCKY YEAR—it's Lozier year for you and your family. Instead of viewing the big, clean Lozier from the wheel of a less able car, or from your front porch, this year you'll ride in one.

YOU'VE LONGED FOR ONE, of course you have. Why, it's simply human instinct asserting itself for you to crave the best. Every normal man wants a car like this Lozier.

YOU'VE OFTEN SAID TO YOUR WIFE, that if business broke right, some day you'd have a big, handsome car—well, NOW'S YOUR TIME—you can now buy a big, seven-passenger Lozier for $2,100. Just the car you have wanted—and priced just a little over $2,000.

IT'S SAFE AND SANE AND SENSIBLE—this new Lozier. In mechanical detail it is simplicity itself. It has the old-time Lozier factor of safety—and you know what it means to say "Lozier factor of safety."

IT'S ECONOMICAL to the last degree. Runs seventeen miles to a gallon of gasoline under favorable conditions. Science has at last discovered a way to build a motor so that it will give great power at small cost. Oil consumption is so low you'd probably overlook it entirely in figuring maintenance cost.

IT'S LIGHT WEIGHT—300 to 500 pounds lighter than most other cars selling around $2,000, and this means a big saving in tire bills. If you save only a set of tires in a year, it will mean about $150—or $37.50 per wheel per year.

IT'S A FOUR—a strong, reliable, steady-going Lozier Four. You know Lozier is not prejudiced to either fours or sixes. We build both—a Six at $3,250—a Four at $2,100. So we stand on neutral ground.

IT'S REFINED AND LUXURIOUS—this Light Four—but simple mechanically and inexpensive to operate—the kind of car you need if you enjoy driving your own automobile.

NO SUPERFLUOUS CYLINDERS or added complications. They haven't any place in a car selling around $2,000 or under. Simplicity is our watchword in building this Four.

JUST RUN DOWN THIS LIST of refinements and see if they do not explain why hundreds of "Men Who Know" are buying this Lozier Light Four.

THEN WRITE FOR CATALOG 84, which gives hundreds of interesting facts and details we are unable to print in this ad.

THE YEARS BETWEEN

"There is something in the atmosphere of a prison that invariably saddens me; not with the ephemeral, often sentimental sensation we are wont to call pity, but something very, very much deeper and more profound. It may be the primitive revolt against physical restraint, or, perhaps, that divine instinct that makes us shoulder the despair of another—I don't know. Anyway, I had this feeling as I walked through the long corridors and saw the men pacing like captured beasts in their cells or through the halls and grounds.

"Then another view of the thing came upon me, and I tried to remember their crimes—the desolation they had left in their wake, the human agonies. Now and then a brutal chin, a thick neck, a hanging lip or glaring eye bespoke the criminal and gave color to my silent arguments. I felt anew that old-world pain that stabs us when we confront conditions that set us wondering how "God can silence keep

While sin creeps grinning through his house of time.

"'There,' said my friend suddenly, 'is an example for you.' He jerked a quick thumb in the direction of the cell we were passing. 'Not for executive clemency,' he added, smiling, seeing me turn back interestedly, 'but of the "brute beast made to be taken." And yet—he isn't the typical criminal, by a long shot, and this is his first offense. Nobody seems to know anything about him, who he really is or where he came from—and he won't tell. Evidently the fellow has decent blood in his veins, and mentally he is brilliant. Why, there's every reason in the world why he should have made good. But he hasn't. Moreover, he has affirmed that it is his intention to go to the devil as quickly as possible—he wants no obstacles en route. He refuses to be reasoned with. When a man with brains wants to go to the devil he can do it much more expeditiously than your plodder. A pity!'

"I went over to the cell indicated. A man sat on the cot, his hands clasped between his knees, his shaven head bent. At the sound of footsteps he looked up. I saw a slight, nervous, violent face—

"Quickly I stepped back, and I give you my word for it I had the sort of feeling that takes possession of one when he dreams of encountering a being out of another sphere. I don't know why; he was only a slim, immature looking man of less than twenty-five, and there was nothing particularly noticeable in his appearance. And yet the prison corridor and cells and the sun glinting on the green trees outside the barred windows faded and left me standing there alone in the world with him.

"I never pretended to understand it. Perhaps it was the sharp, sudden glimpse through the man's countenance of a human soul, worn, through fretting, to visibility—a wonderful soul, simple and palpitant, dynamic, eager and alone, condemned and set apart by its very unlikeness to his fellows. The thread between success and failure is very slight; he had grasped at the first and tumbled into the abyss of the latter. The poetical, groping, manhandled spirit stood naked as a lightning-flash in that one miraculous instant.

"Then I recovered myself. I turned back to the corridor and walked on with my friend. But I was shaken to the depths.

"'His crime?' I found myself asking.

"'Forgery, I believe. The warden was regretting his incarceration only yesterday. He seems to have been particularly impressed that the man was on the wrong track. Of course, they're all that, but he thought this man had been gradually embittered by a misfortune that might have been prevented, or something of that sort. But he's incorrigible now. Sullen, defiant, silent—not a pleasant sort to know.'

"I went back to the executive mansion resolved to look up this singular person's case. I went into my library and hunted out the record of the People against Jim Brown. The case was clear enough—forgery. He had drifted into the West from no one seemed to know just where, secured employment, and, later, stolen from the rich man who had employed him. He was guilty—and I meant to pardon him!

"Even through the mist of the years I can remember my own horror of the thing I was about to do. Would I betray my oath, my allegiance to the law, the trust of the people—myself? But—there had come to me a flash-light picture of the man's past and future. He was one of those "Souls by nature pitched too high,

By suffering plunged too low.

"There had been a moment of temptation—the rich man's lot flung up in sharp contrast with his bitter poverty—rebellion—an hour of anarchy—then his fall. And now, the prison stripes. The light had been stricken out of the sensitive, strange nature; his self-respect, his manhood had come down under the shame of the iron bars. He would never recover himself. Hating God and man, without hope in this world or the next, he would plunge through the years and stagger into eternity.

"I put up my hands across my eyes to shut out that poignant vision. Words I had almost forgotten flashed in upon me: 'Is it nothing to you, O ye that pass by?' What the man might have been! What, by the help of God, he might yet be. . . .

"I seemed to see, above a terrible abyss, the soul of the man, suspended, like the Damoclean sword, upon a single hair—the governor's mercy. I had encountered the shock of a tremendous personality; of that I was certain. A poor, shaven-headed jailbird, in shameful stripes and sitting in a prison cell, there was yet in him that which struck fire from the soul of another. Not a word had been exchanged between us—but I knew. He was a force, and he had been directed the wrong way. The warden was right.

"I wrote out his pardon.

"Some one told me, afterward, that he had received it without a word; that he hadn't even expressed surprise—nor gratitude. I never heard of him again—never knew where he went or what became of him. I'd hoped he would write me about himself. Now and then I've come across men who for an instant reminded me of him, and I hoped to discover in some prosperous citizen, or, perhaps, some fiery-souled poet, the Jim Brown of the long dead years.

"But—we have never met. For all I know he may have gone to the dogs and died an outcast. My friend, who laughed to scorn that last pardon, the final act of my governorship, predicted as much. He said I'd only helped the man to make haste on his self-determined journey to the devil. He, of course, may have been right in his prediction. But I—I had hoped for a future for that poor hurt soul. . . . Yet I never knew."

A silence fell when he had finished speaking, and no one broke it for a time. They sat pondering his story, the unfinished episode, and wondering, like him, what strange paths afterward received the laggard feet of the prisoner.

The grandson was staring down at a church below the Capitol, with its eternal heavenward-pointing spire. He had clasped his slim hands about his knees, and his blond young face was thoughtful. On the parapet above, the new governor was looking down into the old man's face—looking at What and Why is the Internal Bath?

By C. Gilbert Percival, M.D.

THOUGH many articles have been written and much has been said recently about the Internal Bath, the fact remains that a great amount of ignorance and misunderstanding of this new system of Physical Hygiene still exists.

And inasmuch as it seems that Internal Bathing is even more essential to perfect health than External Bathing, I believe that every one should know its origin, its purpose and its action beyond the possibility of a misunderstanding.

Its great popularity started at about the same time as did what are probably the most encouraging signs of recent times—I refer to the appeal for Optimism, Cheerfulness, Efficiency, and those attributes which go with them and which, if steadily practiced, will make our race not only the despair of nations competitive to us in business, but establish us as a shining example to the rest of the world in our mode of living.

These new daily "Gospels," as it were, had as their inspiration the ever present unconquerable American Ambition, for it had been proven to the satisfaction of all real students of business that the most successful man is he who is sure of himself—who is optimistic, cheerful, and impresses the world with the fact that he is supremely confident always — for the world of business has every confidence in the man who has confidence in himself.

If our outlook is optimistic, and our confidence strong, it naturally follows that we inject enthusiasm, "ginger," and clear judgment into our work, and have a tremendous advantage over those who are at times more or less depressed, blue, and nervously fearful that their judgment may be wrong—who lack the confidence that comes with the right condition of mind and which counts so much for success.

Now the practice of Optimism and Confidence has made great strides in improving and advancing the general efficiency of the American, and if the mental attitude necessary to its accomplishment were easy to secure, complete success would be ours.

Unfortunately, however, our physical bodies have an influence on our mental attitude, and in this particular instance, because of a physical condition which is universal, these much-to-be-desired aids to success are impossible to consistently enjoy.

In other words, our trouble, to a great degree, is physical first and mental afterwards—this physical trouble is simple and very easily corrected. Yet it seriously affects our strength and energy, and if it is allowed to exist too long becomes chronic and then dangerous.

Nature is constantly demanding one thing of us, which, under our present mode of living and eating, it is impossible for us to give—that is, a constant care of our diet, and enough consistent physical work or exercise to eliminate all waste from the system.

If our work is confining, as it is in almost every instance, our systems cannot throw off the waste except according to our activity, and a clogging process immediately sets in.

This waste accumulates in the colon (lower intestine), and is more serious in its effects than you would think, because it is intensely poisonous, and the blood circulating through the colon absorbs these poisons, circulating them through the system and lowering our vitality generally.

That's the reason that biliousness and its kindred complaints make us ill "all over." It is also the reason that this waste, if permitted to remain a little too long, gives the destructive germs, which are always present in the blood, a chance to gain the upper hand, and we are not alone inefficient, but really ill—seriously sometimes, if there is a local weakness.

The accumulated waste has long been recognized as a menace, and Physi Physical Culturists, Dietitians, paths and others have been const laboring to perfect a method of rem it, and with partial and temp success.

It remained, however, for a new tional and perfectly natural proce finally and satisfactorily solve the lem of how to thoroughly eliminate waste from the colon without stra unnatural forcing—to keep it swee clean and healthy and keep us corres ingly bright and strong—clearing blood of the poisons which made i us sluggish and dull spirited, and m our entire organism work and a Nature intended it should.

That process is Internal Bathing warm water—and it now, by the way the endorsements of the most enligh Physicians, Physical Culturists, paths, etc., who have tried it and see results.

Heretofore it has been our habit, we have found, by disagreeable and times alarming symptoms, that this was getting much the better of u repair to the drugshop and obtain through drugging.

This is partly effectual, but there several vital reasons why it should be our practice as compared with Int Bathing.

Drugs force Nature instead of assi her—Internal Bathing assists Nature is just as simple and natural as wa one's hands.

Drugs, being taken through the ach, sap the vitality of other func before they reach the colon, which i called for—Internal Bathing washes the colon and reaches nothing else.

To keep the colon consistently drugs must be persisted in, and t effective the doses must be incre Internal Bathing is a consistent ment, and need never be altered in way to be continuously effective.

No less an authority than Prof Alonzo Clark, M.D., of the New College of Physicians and Surgeons, All of our curative agents are poi and as a consequence every dose d ishes the patient's vitality.

It is rather remarkable to find, at would seem so comparatively late a so great an improvement on the old ods of Internal Bathing as this process, for in a crude way it ha course, been practiced for years.

It is probably no more surprising, ever, than the tendency on the pa the Medical Profession to depart fu and further from the custom of drugs, and accomplish the same and ter results by more natural me causing less strain on the system leaving no evil after effects.

Doubtless you, as well as all Ame men and women, are interested in k ing all that may be learned about ke up to "concert pitch," and always fe bright and confident.

This improved system of Int Bathing is naturally a rather dif subject to cover in detail in the p press, but there is a Physician who made this his life's study and work, has written an interesting book on subject called "The What, The Why, Way of the Internal Bath." This he send on request to any one addre Charles A. Tyrrell, M.D., at 134 65th Street, New York, and mentio that they have read this in THE CH TIAN HERALD.

It is surprising how little is know the average person on this subject, v has so great an influence on the ge health and spirits.

My personal experience and my o vation make me very enthusiastic Internal Bathing, for I have seen it sults in sickness as well as in health, I firmly believe that everybody owes himself, if only for the information able, to read this little book by an au ity on the subject.—Advertisement.

him keenly, with steady, piercing glance.

"Your one 'act of impulse!'" he said. "Have you ever regretted it?"

The white-haired ex-governor shook his head.

"It was the proper thing to do—to give him his chance, whether he took it or not. We—never know. I believe in giving one's fellow man the benefit of the doubt. If Jim Brown wasn't grateful enough to pitch his life upon a higher plane after I had given him his freedom, I could not blame myself for that. I did all that I could and—I am glad I did it."

One of the men dropped a slow hand on his shoulder.

"I'm glad, too," he said. "One shouldn't regret making lighter the burden of a fellow creature. Better err on the side of too much humanism than not enough."

A young State senator, who had been hanging about, evidently waiting for the governor to come down, for now and then his restless glance went to the placid figure on the parapet as he paced in front of the Capitol patiently, a bundle of papers under his arm, caught the governor's glance downward. He lifted a saluting hand, and the governor rose. The other men, too, got to their feet and slowly moved away, with a few parting words. The young State senator came bounding up the steps.

"In a moment, Grayson," said the new governor.

His eyes followed Nathan Barrett's white head as the latter walked before him up the stairs and into one of the vacant ante-rooms. He left the senator on the steps, and passing the group of men with whom he had just been talking—one of them stood with his elbow upon the grandson's slender shoulder, laughing uproariously at some quip of the boy's—he went across the stone portico, in at the swinging doors, and on to the anteroom in the wake of the bent figure with its crown of white hair.

Nathan Barrett stood near the window, searching through a pile of circulars on a green-baize-topped table. As he glanced up, hearing the door open and close, he saw J. Bannington Browne, the new governor, crossing the floor. He started, stared, and the papers he had taken up fell with a soft rustle to the floor.

The lofty, imposing room in the Capitol faded from his view, and instead he saw a flagged prison corridor, a man with a shaven head, in prison stripes, sitting on the edge of his cot. And then this, too, faded, and he saw the new governor—but he was looking into the soul he had seen once before, a wonderful soul, simple and palpitant, dynamic, eager and alone.

"I have believed that some day you and I would meet," said the new governor brokenly, "that God would be good enough to let me hold your hand and thank you." He clasped the old man's hands close in his; his whole body shook with passion. "Amico mio—yes, yes, I was the Jim Brown you pardoned."

Nathan Barrett bowed his head. Tears were running down his old cheeks.

National Hymn of New China

[Tune, America. Translated from the Chinese by Pansy C. Mason. Put into verse by Alice J. Whittier.]

WE LOVE our happy land;
Strong midst the earth it stands,
My country grand!
Far let past glories shine:
Brought back to Han's great line,
Brethren in joy combine—
Our people's land!

Long may the flag wave high
O'er China far and nigh—
Our country's flag.
Now we on God depend:
Peace may he ever send;
O'er clouds this rainbow bend—
Our glorious flag!

Don't have worn spots on your floors

You won't have them—if you use a finish made especially to stand hard knocks. That is what Kyanize is. We want to send you some to try for yourself.

Cleaning won't make them tidy—they need new coats.

Will you refinish a chair if we give you the Kyanize?

Put it on your floor or stairs where the greatest wear comes. When it is dry, walk on it, jump on it, drag furniture across it—give it the hardest kind of tests. Then wipe it off with a damp cloth, and note the smooth, hard, uninjured surface.

Try it on a table or chair. Kyanize is the most beautiful, durable, sanitary finish made, for furniture and interior woodwork. Use it when house cleaning. Make your woodwork and old furniture look like new.

Kyanize requires no stirring—dries quickly and hard. Doesn't get sticky, peel or scratch white. Water easily keeps it clean.

Fill in the coupon below, mail it to us with 10 cents for a fine Chinese bristle brush with which to do the finishing, and we will send you, without charge, postpaid, a full quarter-pint can, containing enough Kyanize for a chair or table, or a floor border in a small room. If you are not perfectly delighted with the result, we'll return the 10 cents you paid for the brush. Same offer applies to Canada.

BIBLE SCHOOL IN INDIA

IN AMERICA we often hear of special meetings for specific classes in the community, such as meetings for street car conductors, for policemen, for business men, for soldiers and sailors. But in India, however, they have fairly eclipsed us, and now they have special Bible conferences for the mayors of villages and hamlets.

This meeting of village mayors is one of the outgrowths of the mass movement among the depressed classes in India. The people live in villages by themselves, with some specially forceful personality as their chaudhari, which may be rendered "village mayor" or "headman." Some of these village mayors, becoming interested in Christianity, sought special instruction in the Christian life, and the missionaries at Delhi, the new capital, agreed to meet those who might wish to come from villages in the immediate vicinity. It was expected that possibly fifty or sixty might attend. What was the missionaries' surprise when more than two hundred chaudharis presented themselves for instruction. They were accompanied by their wives and children, and remained in attendance about two weeks. Part of the time was devoted to study of the life and teachings of Christ, and part to the discussion of village problems, chiefly the abandoning of idolatrous and superstitious customs and the substituting of purely Christian customs. These mayors were all professing Christians, who desired their people to have the full benefit of Gospel teachings.

The great temptation to the average village Christian in India has been participation in heathen birthday rites, heathen wedding ceremonies, and special feast-day celebrations. After much prayerful consideration it was decided by the assembled mayors that as these customs are opposed to the teachings of Jesus, they must be banished from community life at any cost. Therefore they pledged themselves to use their best efforts to bring this to pass. As proof that progress is being made in this direction, the Rev. F. M. Wilson, superintendent of missionary work in the Delhi District, calls attention to the fact that the people are definitely abandoning the old heathen convivial and social customs. Referring to the gathering of village mayors, Mr. Wilson says: "So powerfully was the audience moved when listening to the story of the cross that many fell upon their faces, crying out: 'Hae! Hae!' (Alas! Alas!); and it was with difficulty that I restrained myself from joining in this Oriental grief."

Last year a chaudhari, who had been helping in his own and other nearby villages and had been greatly used in winning people, was so bitterly persecuted that he feared for his life and for the safety of his family. Leaving the house he had built with the savings of years, he removed his family to a distant village. Some time afterward Mr. Wilson learned that there were a multitude in the village to which this mayor had gone, and also in surrounding villages, who were asking for Christian teaching and baptism. He sent a worker to inquire, who returned with a petition from more than six hundred village people, requesting Mr. Wilson to give them a Christian teacher and to provide the instruction necessary to fit them for an effective Christian life.

Will You believe John Burroughs?

READ this letter from America's greatest living naturalist—one of the many hundreds written by distinguished authors, statesmen, clergymen and scientists who have wished to tell the world what the food-tonic Sanatogen has done for them. These letters have the ring of sincerity because they are the grateful letters of active workers in many professions who, after suffering the strain of nervous exhaustion, have felt the lifting, nourishing, reconstructive influence of Sanatogen.

Even more impressive are the letters from over 19,000 practicing physicians—conservative scientific men who have prescribed Sanatogen and, watching its effects in rebuilding and strengthening men and women who were "run down," have with this full knowledge praised its power to help.

Should you not believe that this help for which so many of the world's active workers are grateful may be a blessing to you?

Sanatogen is sold by good druggists everywhere, in three sizes, from $1.00.

Mr. Burroughs writes:

"I am sure I have been greatly benefitted by Sanatogen. My sleep is 50 percent. better than it was one year ago, and my mind and strength are much improved."

HIS TRUANTS

BY ROBERT SPARKS WALKER

OUR long passenger train pulled up at the way station and stopped. A few passengers climbed on, and one took a seat by me. I did not even glance at my unknown companion, for I had concerned myself in a wrinkled-faced gentleman, who was standing out on a bank. After scanning every car window, he looked wistfully up and down the track; then, as the engine puffed away and the grating sound of moving cars invaded the air, the old man, with tears in his eyes, shook his head and started feebly down a well-beaten path.

With sympathetic tears in my own eyes, I remarked that it is awful to be disappointed. "Poor old man!" I said.

"You do not understand it," kindly replied my seat-mate. "I live here, and know all about it. The old man who has aroused your sympathy has been meeting every passenger train for thirty-five years. He lives not far away, and his expectant form stands here, as it has done to-day, as regularly as clockwork."

"How strange!" I said, without comment or inquiry.

My new companion went on: "The old man is looking for his little boy and girl, whom he put on a train thirty-five years ago for a visit to their aunt up at another station. They promised him to return the following day. They never came back, but their mangled forms were returned, after the wreck, to the old man. He never recognized them. As you see him to-day, so has he patiently met each train daily for the last thirty-five years, confidently expecting his little boy and girl to fulfil their promise."

The noise from the engine had given way to low humming and whispering conversation among the passengers in the car. Every now and then a baby cooed and laughed, and a child chased fairies up and down the long aisle in the car.

For years, as I passed that way station, I saw the same old gentleman, his eyes expectantly surveying the trains and the few passengers as they made their exit. He was becoming more feeble, but he just had "to go meet John and Mary to-day." A little soap box for a stool on the bank afforded him a more comfortable place to wait on belated trains.

It was a cold, sleety winter. The old man's oldest child, with whom he was living, entreated him not to venture out that day. Such pleadings were in vain, for had he not promised his little boy and girl to meet them at the train? And he knew they were coming to-day.

With not even an umbrella, the old man walked away in the storm to watch and wait. The train was an hour late, and he perched his patient frame upon the little soapbox. He dropped off into slumber, and was again a young man with the two tots, a boy and girl. He ran to the gate as little John and Mary came up, their faces beaming, and their snowy arms encircled their father's neck, while he took two good hugs, and pressed his cheek to two rosy faces.

A stranger standing by, who had paid little attention to the old man, suddenly heard him murmur in his sleep, and then speak out clearly:

"Oh, how glad I am to see you! They tried to make me believe that my little boy and girl would never return, but here you are. I am happy, happy, for you did come at last."

A little later the ticket agent walked over and shook the old man, who was still sitting on the old soap box—but that was too good a dream from which to waken on this earth.

EFFICIENCY engineers say that the greatest item of cost that goes into an article today is the service — unnecessary time and labor in getting that article into your hands.

The BELL TAILORS of New York have a successful solution of the service problem in connection with the selling of made-to-measure clothes. Our system of selling is direct to the wearer by mail. We have no branches, no salesmen, no agents or representatives of any kind. Imagine now the wonderful value we deliver in made-to-measure suits at $13.50 by eliminating all these in-between service costs.

In buying clothes—when you are waited on in a store you pay for the salesman's service. When an agent takes your order, you pay for his service. When any representative waits on you, you must pay for the service he rendered. Our only representative is our catalog. It comes to you free and draws no pay from us.

WE GUARANTEE
$20.00 Suit to Your Measure for $13.50

Because we ask you to wait on yourself. We send you a complete style book, a selection of 64 liberal-sized cloth samples, and our simple measuring outfit with which any member of your family can take your measure as expertly as any tailor can. In fact, we guarantee this, because if the suit we make doesn't fit or please you, don't accept it.

"BEN HUR" Offered FREE

FOR NEW SUBSCRIPTIONS TO THE CHRISTIAN HERALD

BOOKS by the thousand are written every year, read, talked of and forgotten, but Ben Hur remains the most famous religious romance and only enduring novel of the past quarter of a century. Nearly two million copies of this book have been sold.

If you love books and have not read Ben Hur you have missed a wonderful treat. If you have a library Ben Hur should have a place in it. If you have children you should see that this marvelous book with its enlightening and inspiring story is read by them. So great, indeed, has been its popularity that, until this edition was brought out, the publishers have never felt impelled to cut the price below that first established, $1.50. It has sold for $1.50 a volume for over thirty years. But finally the publishers were persuaded to accept an order for one million copies, to be sold at a reduced price. The Christian Herald was enabled to secure a portion of this million edition and now offers its readers the opportunity to secure the book at nominal cost, or, if they prefer, free of all charge.

Our Proposition is as Follows:

Old subscribers who are about to renew may secure the volume with a year's subscription to The Christian Herald for $2.00.

Subscribers who have already renewed may secure the volume absolutely FREE of all charge by sending us One NEW yearly subscription accompanied by $1.50.

Author of "Ben Hur"

Extra Inducement

Furthermore, if this new subscription is sent in before March 10 we will send, also FREE of charge, a copy of the picture below full size, that is, 17½ inches high by 28 inches wide, rendered in all its gorgeous colors, on extra heavy white art paper, ready for framing. The cut pictured on this page gives but a very faint idea of what the real picture, in all its colors, is like. It will make a splendid ornament when hung on the wall at home, and it will prove an additional inspiration while you are reading Ben Hur.

This edition of Ben Hur is bound in handsomely decorated cloth. It is stamped in gold and contains a lifelike frontispiece portrait of the author, General Lew Wallace.

Friends who wish to make sure of securing a copy of Ben Hur and the Chariot Race should send in their orders at Once, as our supply of the books and pictures in the circumstances cannot last long.

The Christian Herald Almanac will also be sent to all new subscribers and to those renewing as long as the supply lasts.

THE CHARIOT RACE IN "BEN HUR"—This picture in full size, 17½ inches high by 28 inches wide, in all its gorgeous colors, will be sent FREE to you in addition to Ben Hur for sending us a NEW subscription by March 10

HOW TO OBTAIN "BEN HUR" AND THE ABOVE PICTURE

We will send you postpaid a copy of Ben Hur, bound in cloth. The Christian Herald Almanac for 1914 and THE CHRISTIAN HERALD for one full year, all THREE for only $2

OR:

We will send to old subscribers FREE, as a reward, a copy of Ben Hur, for sending us One New yearly subscription to THE CHRISTIAN HERALD for $1.50.

And, in addition, if the new subscription is sent in before March 10, we send you absolutely free of charge a copy of the above picture, 17½ inches high by 28 inches wide, rendered in all its gorgeous colors on extra heavy white art paper ready for framing.

WASHINGTON MEMORIAL PARK AT VALLEY FORGE

Presidents' Pew, given in memory of Washington and Monroe, the two men who were at Valley Forge and afterward became Presidents. This pew also commemorates the visit of President Roosevelt, the only President to visit Valley Forge during his term of office. He made an address in the temporary chapel to help arouse interest in this great undertaking.

The screen in front of the pew is in memory of Washington and the major generals at Valley Forge, while across the aisle is another in honor of the brigadier generals. The carving on these screens is exquisite. Twenty-six flags of the Revolution are represented, and the names of the generals are carved on shields.

The high stone pulpit bears the record of Washington's services as a church warden of Truro Parish, Virginia, and the lectern is the only monument of a British soldier at Valley Forge. Its inscription records the fact that Washington read the burial office at the interment of General Braddock. These, with the perclose (all the gift of Mrs. Alan Wood, Jr.), form a striking and artistic entrance to the choir. Unfortunately no part of this is completed, although on the framework of the temporary chancel are placed the casts for the tablets in memory of the signers of the Declaration of Independence and the framers of the Constitution. These are the work of Miss Martha Hovenden, the talented daughter of the great artist.

"Valley Forge," the bronze statuette by Franklin Simmons, and cast by Nisini, in Rome, occupies a niche in the noble choir arch. It represents Washington bearing the burden of those trying days of '77 and '78, when enemies plotted and friends failed, and when his only source of strength was his firm faith in the providence of God.

Adjoining the chapel is the Patriots' Hall, of which, unfortunately, only one room is completed. But this one room contains more relics of the Father of His Country and the Revolution than many a large museum. Here has been set up "Washington's Marquee," the linen tent used by him as his headquarters not only during the first week at Valley Forge but all through the Revolution. Mr. Burk purchased it from Miss May Custis Lee for $5,000. With it is shown the standard of the commander-in-chief—Washington's flag.

These relics are only the most notable exhibited in the Valley Forge Museum of American History, which was founded only five years ago. The growth of its collections has been little short of marvelous. The crying need is a building large enough to hold the constantly increasing treasure, and here is afforded a splendid opportunity for some rich American to show his patriotism in a practical way. It is planned that this museum shall tell the story of the nation which Washington fathered, that here its valor in war and its industry in peace shall be illustrated, to the end that the visitor may see what came from Valley Forge and her heroes.

Under Washington's Marquee are stored to-day boxes and boxes of valuable books. These belong to the Washington Memorial Library. Not a stone of the library is laid as yet, but it will rise to complete the group of noble buildings planned, and whose conception already challenges admiration, and whose completion will be not only a noble memorial of Washington but an inspiration for Americans for all time to come.

CANNOT DO WITHOUT THE CHRISTIAN HERALD

We appreciate your paper, in fact we cannot get along without it. It is an uplift to the soul. We enjoy every line in it, and then give it to the old soldiers who are on beds of sickness in the Home. I should dearly love to keep the papers to re-read, but I feel they need them also, and they cannot afford to subscribe for it.

DO YOU KNOW YOUR BIBLE?

ON ACCOUNT of the extra week allowed on the January Bible Questions the Honor Roll cannot appear until next week. The correct answers will be published in the same issue.

Bible Questions, List No. 2

Here are the February questions: [State Scripture reference with every answer.]

1. In answer to whose prayer was Samuel born, and in compliance with her promise what did she do with the boy?

2. (a) What was his father's name? (b) Who was priest at this time? (c) Where was the tabernacle [spoken of in some verses as the "temple," or the "house of the Lord"] set up?

3. What beautiful reply did the priest direct the boy Samuel to make when he heard God's voice calling him?

4. (a) What verse states expressly that the Lord was with Samuel as he was growing up? (b) What did the people of Israel come to understand about him? (c) How and where did the Lord reveal himself to him? (d) To whom did Samuel's words come?

5. (a) What great treasure did the Israelites lose, and under what circumstances? (b) In what town and in whose house was it first kept on its recovery? (c) What name and meaning did Samuel give to the stone he set up between Mizpeh and Shen?

6. (a) What was Samuel's occupation after this? (b) Where did he live? (c) What did he build there? (d) In what other place is he subsequently said to have offered sacrifice?

7. (a) Why did Samuel try to dissuade the people from having a king? (b) Who was finally chosen? (c) What place was then made the capital of Israel?

8. (a) What passage tells of Samuel's challenge to the people to find any flaw in his integrity, and their agreement that he was blameless? (b) What promise from the Lord did he give them at the end of his address on this occasion? (c) What did he himself promise to continue to do for them? (d) What would be the penalty of their disobedience?

9. (a) What two errors of Saul are mentioned as the causes of his loss of the kingdom? (b) How did Samuel show his grief when God told him that Saul was to be dethroned? (c) What great epigrammatic remark did he make to Saul about obedience?

10. (a) Where did Samuel anoint David to be Saul's successor? (b) On what occasion did Samuel shelter David in his home? (c) On what occasion did Samuel speak after his death?

Answers to the Bible questions must reach us within two weeks of the date of the issue in which the questions appear. There are no formalities about enrolling in the class. Just hunt out the answers and send them in. Do not include your answering in letter to any other department of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD. Mark them plainly on envelope and letter: "For Bible Question Department."

Answered Prayers

the wonderful answer to prayer for my sister. She was very sick and we (she and I) agreed to pray every day at a certain hour for her recovery. Several weeks passed in which many thought she would die, but we kept on praying. All at once she began to gain. The first week she gained nine pounds, and kept on gaining until she is now a healthy, happy woman."

Mrs. H. W. P. writes from Geneseo, Ill.: "I prayed earnestly that my little boy would recover from a sickness that might prove fatal. God heard my prayer and answered the all-consuming desire of my heart."

Mrs. K. J. K., of Wilmington, Del., writes: "I passed my eighty-third milestone recently. Truly, the Word of God standeth sure: 'With long life will I satisfy him and show him my salvation.'"

AFRAID TO EAT
Girl Starving on Poorly Selected Food

"Several years ago I was actually star ing," writes a Me. girl, "yet dared not e for fear of the consequences.

"I had suffered indigestion from ov work, irregular meals and improper foo until at last my stomach became so we I could eat scarcely any food witho great distress.

"Many kinds of food were tried, all wi the same discouraging effects. I steadi lost health and strength until I was but wreck of my former self.

"Having heard of Grape-Nuts and great merits, I purchased a package, b with little hope that it would help me—was so discouraged.

"I found it not only appetizing but th I could eat it as I liked and that it sat fied the craving for food without causi distress, and if I may use the expressio 'it filled the bill.'

"For months Grape-Nuts was my pri cipal article of diet. I felt from the ve first that I had found the right way health and happiness, and my anticip tions were fully realized.

"With its continued use I regained r usual health and strength. Today I a well and can eat anything I like, yet Gra Nuts food forms a part of my bill fare."

"IN THE TRACK OF THE TRADE WINDS"

THE painter of the picture reproduced upon our front cover, Schnars-Alquist, early in life found himself surrounded by many adverse circumstances. He was born in Hamburg in 1855. His father, a merchant, died when the boy was still small. He was obliged to support his mother, and though wealthy relations could have made easy the attainment of his ambition, they insisted on trying to force him to become a merchant.

It was only after many years of such drudgery, and with almost no opportunities to develop his great talent, that he was able to surmount these obstacles to his career. He had made progress, however, by not sparing himself, and was able even during his uncongenial work to produce some pictures which sold at once. His favorite themes were marine views.

The artist, as soon as he was freed from mercantile restrictions, traveled extensively for the purpose of study. He became the master pupil of the late Professor Hans Gude of Berlin. Professor Schnars-Alquist, as he had now become, traveled throughout the world, visiting the United States a half score of times, and studied in practically every country of the globe. His chief object in his travels was to obtain an accurate knowledge of the character of the different ocean bodies, and, in consequence, his pictures now take on the reality of truth, and are impressive because of their faithfulness to the moods and colors of the sea.

Our cover this week contains an excellent reproduction of one of Schnars-Alquist's most popular paintings, "In the Track of the Trade Winds." The naturalness and simplicity of his style are here seen; the deep blue of the Southern seas, the white crest of the waves, the sun-swept sky with its galleons of clouds will be recognized by every traveler who has been upon those waters. The great ship, with most of her sails straining before the wind, completes the picture and starts the imagination, and gives the scene a breezy, fragrant, romantic reality.

THE CHRISTIAN HERALD has already reproduced three of this artist's paintings: "Eight Bells in the Tropics," October 1, 1913; "Racing the Storm," February 26, 1913; and "Ships That Pass in the Night," January 14, 1914. These covers have elicited a great many grateful letters from our readers.

Hidden Values in Seeds

Some automobile makers boast the hidden values of their cars—values invisible and impossible of laboratory analysis. "Under the Hood" is their summary. In the case of SEEDS, hidden values far greater lie dormant beneath the seed coats, qualities definite and potential. still not to be estimated in the laboratory or without; values to be seen in the maturing crop only, after a season's time and labor is spent—then what differences are manifest? The difference between pleasure and disappointment, and for the professional, success and failure.

POULTRY AND EGGS FOR HOME USE

FRESH eggs are a luxury, and a good chicken stew makes a good dish to spread before anybody. Both may be had by those who live in the country or suburbs—if the business is attended to in a practical manner.

My experience may be of interest and practical use to some who are in a locality suitable for raising enough fowls for occasional eating, and for furnishing a plentiful supply of eggs for table use. The accompanying table shows the fowl house I made from a piano box:

Piano box	$1.00
Piano box delivered	.50
Wire netting and tacks for window	.15
Hinges and hasp for door	.22
Ready-made window complete	.60
Laths and window boards	.32
One pound of wire nails	.04
Heavy tarred building paper for roof and back	.55
Unslacked lime (¼ peck) for inside	.05
Total expense	$3.43

This house was painted red, and a stout removable roost was put in it lengthwise, also a box for two nests near the door. Over this nest box and under the roosting-pole there was a wide board fixed to catch the droppings, which were cleaned off every morning and the board spread with sifted ashes afterwards. The droppings were scraped off with a hoe and placed in a pile to save for the garden. The window was made to slide horizontally on the outside of the house, while inside this window wire netting was nailed.

By day the fowls were kept in runs which were moved from place to place, instead of in a fixed chicken yard from which every spear of grass would so shortly be banished. The runs measured 4x8 feet by 28 inches in height. At one end of each run a nest box was placed for laying, when the runs were away from the main house. The fowls were fed very sparingly at evening, so they would go readily into their various runs in the morning. As the runs were moved to fresh places daily, and clean water was always at hand in hanging cans attached to the screening, the fowls kept very well all the time. The total cost of the three runs, for lumber, netting and tacks, was $5.57.

The breed selected was the Barred Plymouth Rocks, which were good layers and good for table use. I bought five pullets, some hens, and a thoroughbred rooster. The next year I had seven laying hens on hand and a careful record was kept of the laying of each.

The feeding was as follows: boiled oats in the morning; at noontime, cracked corn with table scraps. Chopped meat was given occasionally and grass was always to be had in the runs. Crushed granite and oyster shells, ground, were supplied in little boxes hanging inside the runs. The feed was scattered over the grass in the runs so the fowls had to exercise to get it. When young chicks came, they were fed oats, boiled until soft enough to manage well, cracked corn, meat and table scraps. I added another laying hen to the lot, and from my eight hens I got 126 eggs in my best months. The highest record laid by one hen in one month was twenty-three eggs, and four of the eight hens laid just that number in April. We had much more than our family could use, so the remainder were sold at thirty-five cents per dozen. I never charged more for them.

The first year of my experience I set eighty-seven eggs, some "special" and some ordinary eggs, and got fifty-six hatched from the lot, with hens as incubators. Some neighbors lost over 50 per cent. of their chicks—from improper care, I think. The income from our eggs and fowls sold at market prices much more than covered all their feed and all other expenses. HARRY B. BRADFORD.

A Life of Lincoln

By NORMAN HAPGOOD

THIS is an opportunity for our readers to secure a wonderful Life of Lincoln, written by the well-known editor and author Norman Hapgood. This biography is not a history of the Civil War; it is not an argument for emancipation or reconstruction. It is solely and simply a personal history of Lincoln as it appears to one of his countrymen, who is capable of seeing the great and simple soul of a man of the people. The narrative is vivid, full of anecdote and incident, and told with simple unaffected truthfulness that does not apologize, minimize, or magnify. The final chapter, which Mr. Hapgood calls a Last Word, is a most eloquent oration.

We do not know where one will find a more lifelike, interesting, and satisfactory biography of the great American. It is nicely bound in cloth and contains 433 pages.

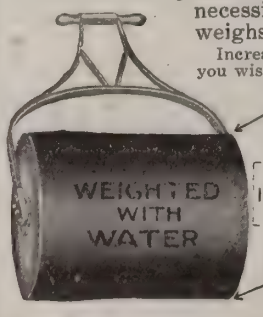
"ANY-WEIGHT" WATER-BALLAST-ROLLERS MAKE BEAUTIFUL LAWNS

A LAWN results from frequently rolling a patch of grass with machine of the many weights it demands in its various moods. One fixed weight roller is incompetent—a dozen impossible—the "ANYWEIGHT" a positive necessity. This, with its acetylene welded hollow steel shell weighs 100 lbs. without ballast—just right for wet Spring lawn.

Increase the weight by filling hollow shell with water, drop by drop as you wish, to the half-ton pressure demanded by dry summer lawn, drive or tennis court. It's filled or emptied in a jiffy—the machine fits the job; the price an pocketbook.



One or two sections of hardened and rust proofed steel—roller bearings—steel handles—adjustable counterpoise weights if ordered. Fills and empties at either end of drum near its end, without upending.

AMONG THE WORKERS

—REV. C. W. GRAY, of Adrian, Mich., writes to THE CHRISTIAN HERALD that he has gone exclusively into Salvation Army work and united with that organization.

—THE BIBLE INSTITUTE COLPORTAGE ASSOCIATION of Chicago, founded by D. L. Moody, has published since 1894 more than six million of the Moody Colportage Library books alone; 242,114 copies were put out during 1913; 522,350 tracts, Gospel and otherwise, were printed last year. The circulation of the Emphasized Gospel of John has attained the remarkable figure of 2,287,000 copies.

—IN AN ALMSHOUSE is a life cripple, deserted by his wife, who refuses to care for him, a man of thirty years who was baptized by Rev. G. M. Smiley, of Lowell, Mass. The young man is trying to lead a Christian life despite his surroundings. Readers can cheer and encourage him by sending books and other help through Mr. Smiley, Box 906, Lowell, Mass.

—DR. CARLOS F. SECORD, Chichicastenango, Guatemala, Central America, writes: "There is special interest in the Gospel in this land, and several new districts have been recently opened to the Word, and many are enquiring the way of Truth. I have recently baptized twenty-two believers. On the whole there is much to encourage in this republic."

—MR. ELMER E. HUBBARD writes from Cardenas, Cuba, that an American family in that city have opened their home to over fifty Cuban children. The national government has begun placing children in this home, allowing $12 a month apiece for their support. In Cuba, as elsewhere in the world, the cause of helpless childhood is one to attract the practical sympathy of good-hearted people.

—R. A. LONG, a wealthy lumberman of Kansas City, Mo., has given $1,000,000 as the foundation of a world-evangelization movement to be led by the Disciples of Christ. It is intended to raise $6,000,000, and to have the general plan of operations in charge of a committee of one hundred missionaries, college presidents and church workers.

—VALLEJO, CALIF., has been attended with unusual blessing during recent evangelistic services there. This place is known as the Mare Island City—thousands of men thronging the streets from the navy and the yards. In service after service, the "Boys in Blue" came forward for Christ right along with the returning backsliders or the new converts from among the townspeople. Many are joining the evangelical churches. The evangelistic leader in this work was Henry Ostrom, who was ably assisted by Paul Benedict and Albert Reitz.

Homes—Not Houses!

You want your home to be livable.

You want to keep for years the same thrill of pride, the same "that's mine" satisfaction, that you felt the first time you stood out in front and looked it over. In other words, your home must be permanent. Then build the walls, both inside and out, on a base of

Expanded Metal Lath

Kno-Burn Expanded Metal Lath has a mesh construction that becomes an actual part of the wall as soon as the plaster has set around it,—as the illustration shows. It never fails to "grip." It can't rot away. It expands and contracts to exactly the same extent as the plaster that covers it. Its features of excellence are protected by patent. Whether for outside stucco or inside plaster, Kno-Burn makes the plaster stick. Ask your architect.

"Practical Home-building" will tell you a great many interesting things about how and where to build. It is not merely an advertising booklet. It is a treatise on house construction that will hold your interest from cover to cover. It contains plans, comparative costs and many interesting photographs.

Send for Free Samples of Vulcanite Rock Surfaced Roofing and Shingles

Guaranteed Natural Colors

HERE is a marvelous improvement in roofings. Another Vulcanite fire-resisting specialty that can be bought at a surprisingly reasonable price of dealers in every locality.

Read the facts about this splendid roof and then send to us for samples. Shipped free anywhere.

Granite Surfaced Vulcanite Roofing is guaranteed to last at least 10 years, no matter where laid. It will not wear out nor dry out nor blister, nor leak if properly laid.

We produce it by first manufacturing an extra heavy felt roofing fabric.

This alone is fire-resisting, waterproof and a tested non-conductor of heat or cold. The fabric is highly saturated with asphalt. The face is pure asphalt.

Then into this high quality roofing is crushed a top surface of Garnet or Emerald Rock—the colors are a beautiful red and green.

This rock is natural colored granite. Thus the surface exposed to the weather is as imperishable as everlasting stone. When laid, the roof is one continuous Garnet or Emerald surface, fire-resisting and weather-proof.

By covering the asphalt with this imbedded veneer of granite we add years to the roof durability. We guarantee it for 10 years. It will last far longer under average conditions.

VULCANITE

ORNAMENTAL FIRE RESISTING ROOFINGS

For Houses, Bungalows, Churches, Public Buildings

GRANITE SURFACED ROOFING has another patented feature. Patterns or designs shaped like tile, shingle and French squares are imbedded in the surface. In fact, the designs are made a permanently fixed part of the roofing. Refer to designs below.

Thus we can sell this ornamental line in rolls. And the saving is great, while the appearance is like a hand laid tile or French square of surprising beauty.

You can readily see the saving in time and expense to lay this over roof boards or old shingles.

You can get Vulcanite Roofing Specialties no matter where you live. Thousands of dealers sell this famous brand. Many have in stock only the standard rubber surfaced Vulcanite for barns, factories and warehouses. The Care of Mahogany MAHOGANY, as every housekeeper knows, has such an affinity for dust and finger marks that it requires more than ordinary treatment to keep it like new.

But it is a mistake to try to give it a new finish by applying polish over the old. This merely sets the dirt and produces an uneven, sticky surface which grows worse with successive coats.

The furniture expert, on the contrary, aims to restore the beauty of the original finish by freeing it from the obscuring film of dirt. Taking a soft sponge, he goes over a small portion at a time with lukewarm Ivory Soap suds. Then he rinses with as little water as possible, dries with cheese cloth and polishes with a chamois. If the piece is badly soiled, he adds a few drops of kerosene to the suds.

This treatment cannot possibly injure the varnish because Ivory Soap contains no harmful ingredients—no free alkali, no grit, no harsh materials of any kind. And it does not leave a greasy film upon the surface because Ivory Soap contains no unsaponified oil to stick to the varnish. All that is necessary is to work quickly so as not to leave streaks.

MOHAMMEDANS PRAYING IN THE STREETS OF CALCUTTA

THE CRUSADE AGAINST ISLAM

BY WILLARD PRICE

WE PLACIDLY think of Christianity as conquering the world. It is only a matter of time, we imagine, before the whole great world brotherhood will be Christian. The idea that Christianity may be permanently resisted by any nation does not seem to occur to us. And it is unquestionably true that the religion of Jesus is making wonderful progress throughout the world—progress that is real.

A NORTH AFRICAN DOORWAY

Yet there are certain lands in which the march of Christianity is by no means so rapid as in others. There is an active and amazingly successful rival in the field. Its name is Mohammedanism, and it too is making real progress. In Africa, so the most experienced missionaries assure us, Mohammedanism is spreading three times as rapidly as Christianity! For every thirty-three persons who become Christians, a hundred become Mohammedans. They view the laymen's missionary movement of Islam as vastly more resultful than that of Christendom. Moslem traders, penetrating to every nook and corner of the Dark Continent, are enlisting new adherents by the hundred thousand. Christian mission stations in Moslem communities sometimes gain hardly a single convert in a year. There is no comparison in such extremes.

"Islam is spreading, spreading with the certainty and resistlessness of a rising tide," writes a missionary on the Gold Coast. "The question is whether it will be possible for missions to organize Christian churches as breakwaters to resist the flood and outweather it, or whether everything will be carried away headlong."

One-seventh of the whole human race is Moslem. The really significant fact is that the proportion is not at a standstill; it is increasing yearly. There are sixty million Mohammedans in India and the number is steadily growing. During the last decade, the Moslem population of India increased by nine per cent., while the total population in India increased by only two per cent. Many more natives are becoming Mohammedans every year than are turning to Christianity. There are twenty-four million Mohammedans in Java. Mohammedanism is absolutely dominant in Persia. Today, nearly all the sacred places named in the Bible are under Mohammedan rule. It is a striking fact that there are five million more Moslems than Christians in the British Empire. These are but a few instances out of many, showing the onsweep of Islam.

What are we going to do about it? The Christian Church has awakened to the necessity of doing something—something thoroughgoing and aggressive. Long experience has shown it to be almost impossible to turn adult Mohammedans from their faith. So now, the emphasis is to be placed on capturing the children. First, a scientific study of the conditions among the eighty million children of the Moslem world will be conducted by the Continuation Committee on Mohammedan Lands of the World's Sunday School Convention, which was held at Zürich last summer. The needs of this great host of children are only vaguely known at present; they will be scientifically known when the survey is completed.

On the committee back of this great investigation are such men as Bishop Joseph C. Hartzell, Dr. S. M. Zwemer of Egypt, Dr. E. F. Freese of North Africa, and Dr. Charles T. Erickson of Albania. It is planned that special secretaries be appointed to conduct the study—a general secretary, with headquarters in Cairo, and field secretaries for Egypt, Turkey, and Albania. A tour of a dozen important American cities was made from February 2 to 10 to enlist public support for the enterprise.

Illiteracy and ignorance are the chief bulwarks of Mohammedanism. This appears from the fact that the Moslem world expands most readily among the pagans, and it inevitably loses power and prestige among civilized nations. With the enlightenment of education, it is hoped, will come the rejection of Mohammedanism. Such, at least, is the philosophy of the present movement. Investigation will therefore be focused on devising ways and means of introducing modern educational methods, under Christian direction, in Moslem countries. The survey's experts will co-operate on interdenominational lines with representatives of different mission boards in Moslem lands, and with government officials. They will endeavor to arrive at the most effective methods of teaching, the best types of childhood literature, picture tracts and simple text-books. The survey will not be narrowly religious, nor will it merely concern the problem of the Sunday school. It will include the whole consideration of the child. The results of this significant investigation will be placed at the disposal of all the mission forces and public authorities. The completed findings will be reported at the World's Sunday School Convention to be held in Tokyo in 1916. The results given in that report will be available to all the missionary boards as the basis for a modern crusade upon Islam.

AUTHORIZED LETTER WRITERS AT POSTOFFICE STEPS, CONSTANTINOPLE

REV. PERCY SMITH AND ARAB SCHOOL, CONSTANTINE, NORTH AFRICA

Few crusades compare in scope and sweep with this great crusade of the twentieth century, if the Christian Church rises to its opportunity. The crusade will be conducted not by the sword, but by primer and blackboard. Day schools and Sunday schools, systematically adapted to Moslem needs, will slowly lift the black cloud of Mohammedanism—two-thirds composed of ignorance—which now hangs over Asia and Africa.

The "education" now current in Moslem lands is largely devoid of the name. In the Moslem schools, children begin by learning the Koran. As it is in Arabic, they understand none of it, except in countries where Arabic is the native tongue. The teacher makes no explanation. The girls leave school at eight or nine, the boys a little later. In most cases they have not even learned to read and write.

The Azhar, or "Moslem University" at Cairo, represents the highest reach of Mohammedan education. How exalted that reach is may be judged from the fact that this school, Islam's greatest institution of learning, still clings to the Ptolemaic theory of the universe, which makes the earth the center of the solar system, around which the sun and stars revolve!

A graduate of the Azhar, who had spent twelve years within its walls, heard a missionary speak of Asia. "Where is Asia?" he asked; "is it in Europe?" It was difficult to convince him that the earth was round. If American college graduates are sometimes judged to be immature, what must be said of the products of Islam's greatest university!

To be sure, the progress of Western education in the conservative East will not be accomplished without opposition. Prejudice is strong. When a group of Mohammedan children asked permission to attend the Christian school their guardian said: "If you attend that school, you will be hewn in half from your head to your feet. When you die, the one-half which knows how to recite the Koran will go to heaven; the other half, which has gone to a Christian school, will go to hell." But in spite of resistance, Christian education is having greater success among Moslems than strictly religious work is meeting.

The modern passion for learning is probing even into the fastnesses of Africa. Young Islam especially is eager to learn, to know. Mission schools and colleges are even now numerously attended. Such institutions in Egypt scatter fifteen thousand graduates throughout the country every year, who are quickened by Western ideas of life and thought. Lord Cromer said: "I have no hesitation in testifying as to the result of more than twenty-three years of experience, that the American mission schools, and notably the college at Assiut, have done much good to forward the cause of education and civilization in Egypt."

The problem of Moslem childhood has never before been seriously approached. The vast majority of these children are stunted in mind and body as a result of the ignorance, superstitious practices, early marriage and licensed immorality which are incident to the Mohammedan religion wherever it has prevailed. Infant mortality is enormous—ranging from fifty per cent. in Sierra Leone to seventy-five per cent. in Morocco. Seventy-four thousand children were born in Egypt during the year 1911. In that same year, twenty-two thousand, or nearly one-third, died at less than twelve years of age. It is estimated that in Persia only one child out of ten reaches the age of twenty. Statistics of illiteracy are alarming, too. From seventy-five to ninety-five per cent. of the Mohammedans in Asia and Africa are unable to read or write. There is indeed a marvelous opportunity for just such a movement as the one now being set forward.

"The missionary boards and societies are taking up the challenge of Islam," writes Dr. S. M. Zwemer in his famous book, Islam, a Challenge to Faith. "Will the colleges and universities furnish the men for the work to-day? The time is ripe for a world-wide spiritual crusade for the conquest of Islam. The new century of American foreign missions calls for a new vision of the Moslem world in its strength, its weakness, its needs, its accessibility, its promise, as well as in its antagonism to Christ, the Son of God. Christ's rightful glory has been given to Mohammed for many ages in these many lands and in millions of hearts. Surely, our Saviour himself is waiting to see the travail of his soul for the Moslem world. God wills it. That was the battle-cry of the old Crusaders. Yet there was a thousandfold more enthusiasm in the dark ages to wrest an empty sepulcher from the Saracens than there is in our day to bring them the knowledge of the Saviour. Shall we take up that cry in a nobler crusade with the sword of the Spirit?"

THE MEN AND MILLIONS MOVEMENT

BY S. T. WILLIS, LL.D.

IN THIS age of tremendous undertakings in the Kingdom of God none perhaps is fraught with more significance than the one launched at St. Louis known as "the Men and Millions Movement." More than three hundred men and women of the Disciples of Christ met in a two days' conference for counsel and prayer. Perhaps a word about the origin of this great company will be in place just here. At the annual convention of the Disciples at Toronto last October Mr. E. A. Long, a millionaire lumberman of Kansas City, was approached by Mr. A. L. Corey, who had just successfully completed a campaign for a million dollars for the entertainment of the foreign missionary operations. Mr. Long was solicited for a gift on a new proposition to raise $7,500,000 for home and foreign work. The amount to be appropriated as follows: Home Missions, $500,000; Foreign Missions, $1,000,000; Christian Women's Board, $500,000; Ministerial Relief Board, $500,000; Church Extension Board, $500,000; Education Board, $500,000; and the Ministerial Relief Board, $500,000. This was thought to be a comprehensive plan, and one that could inspire the confidence of all. But Mr. Long, a shrewd business man and a consecrated Christian, said no.

But he kept revolving the matter in his mind until finally one day after an early morning prayer meeting he said to Mr. Corey: "You plan does not include any provision for our colleges." To Mr. Corey said: "If you will give one million we will appropriate $3,500,000 to the colleges, and will ask the Disciples to raise $5,000,000 in addition to your donation." Mr. Long went home and took his family into council, and after several days' deliberation finally, on October 18, wrote to Mr. Corey, saying he would give $1,000,000 on the conditions mentioned.

Late in December a board of business men met in Chicago, canvassed the claims of the colleges, and made a tentative appropriation to each to be paid upon the completion of the task. Then a committee of two hundred was appointed in the several States to be known as the Committee of Direction. On this committee the leading pastors, missionary secretaries, and college men, with many of the strongest business men of the church, took counsel together on ways and means. This committee was in session in St. Louis for two days and nights, and all agreed that it was the most deeply spiritual of any sessions ever held by the Disciples of Christ. When called upon to pray the whole company got down on their knees and strong men sobbed like little children as they poured out their souls to God in prayer.

In Mr. Long's simple story, he took us all into his confidence, opening his heart, and telling us how he came to promise so much. He said: "I shall have to make this or most of it; but even if the extra anxiety should shorten my life ten years, I am willing for it to be so, if thereby I can only advance the kingdom of God in the earth, and promote the glory and honor of my Lord, to whom I owe all." He told how he and his good wife had in their early married days struggled against poverty; how he piled up lumber with his own hands and how she, in a plain calico dress and sunbonnet, helped him straighten out the boards in the lumber shed. This little view into the sacred precincts of their private lives touched all hearts and brought tears to all eyes.

Mr. J. Campbell White, one of the speakers, declared that Mr. Long's gift would do more to open up the fountains of generosity than anything that had occurred in a hundred years. He told the conference he had been praying God that some rich man might be led to give a million dollars to missions and Christian education, and when he heard that Mr. Long had done so he fell upon his knees and thanked God. Mr. White declared that his gift will call out fifty millions more in all the churches of this country within the next five years.

But the best of it all is yet to be said. It is this: The campaign is not to lay stress on the getting of money as the supreme thing, but upon the enlistment of one thousand new recruits for the mission fields at home and abroad. This is the vital thing—the deeply spiritual side to the enterprise. The giving of money may be a perfunctory exercise, but in the consecration of a thousand new men and women to the task of world evangelism there will be of necessity much prayer in the churches and much real heart-breaking sacrifice in many homes, as mothers and fathers will give their children to the missionary service, and this will enrich the kingdom far beyond all money value of which we can think.

THE WINTER'S ZERO WAVE

IN A SIXTY-MILE-AN-HOUR BLAST

IT WAS Saturday morning, February 14, that New York City proper and her vast day-time population of commuters awoke to find themselves facing blizzard conditions. The storm swept in the night before, and already the very poor had realized its terrors. Hundreds of homeless men had sought shelter at every hospitable place. The municipal lodging-houses and the various charities were overcrowded. Nearly four hundred men had slept in the seats of the Bowery Mission, and the Bread Line was overtaxed.

This proved to be a record snowstorm for New York. Suburban train service was badly demoralized for a time, but managed to establish and maintain a fairly satisfactory schedule. Some lines had snow plows out continually. Ferry boats had to contend with almost a solid floe of ice moving with the tides. Ocean liners were delayed as much as two days in making port, often proceeding at freighters' speed, and in some cases were from two to five hours getting up to their piers, though aided by nearly a score of straining tugs. Heavy weather was experienced by all ocean craft, frequently with damage. One liner picked up a dory in which was a fisherman frozen to his boat, but still alive. The United States naval tug Potomac was abandoned in the Gulf of St. Lawrence, to be carried to sea amidst drift ice that threatened to crush her. On Tuesday an Italian ship was discovered breaking up off the Massachusetts coast, and eight sailors were rescued from her, too numb to speak, and the captain and three men were found frozen to death lashed to the rigging. A tow of four barges was torn loose from the tug boat taking them up Long Island Sound, and five men, four women and two little boys were at the mercy of the storm all one night. They were rescued at the point of death, tossing about in a small boat, the barges having sunk.

The huge population and the incalculable traffic and business of New York City make it the point of greatest interest in the case of phenomenal weather. The ordinary street cleaning force of the city is eight thousand men; this number was promptly doubled to meet the emergency, and yet on Tuesday, the fourth day of the storm, only one short street was reported clear of snow, and at least ten days' work was estimated to be ahead for the army of shovelers. It costs approximately $40,000 per inch of snowfall to remove the snow from all New York, but this record fall of nearly fifteen inches is expected to cost about a million dollars. Several hundred thousand men had been declared to be out of work just before the storm, and efforts were made to employ as many of that host as possible. One hundred and sixteen gangs were out in shifts from five A.M., some all night. Sixty snow plows, in addition to the sweepers used by the car lines, were put to work. Altogether about 25,000 men were employed.

The surface car lines of the city were practically at a standstill for a time. Eight hundred men were employed at clearing the clogged channel of the Broadway Cable Line. The subways carried 1,278,780 passengers on February 16, the elevated 1,079,174; both record performances.

AN UNINTENDED CARGO OF ICE

The continued cold, together with the restricted supply of milk and other food and of coal, due to delayed trains and congested streets, made the condition of the poor exceedingly pitiable. The host of unemployed homeless men were especial objects of concern. Every charitable organization was reported as doing noble service for this class. Each night, throughout the duration of the storm and the cold wave, the Bowery Mission opened its auditorium as a sleeping room, where about 350 men spent the night asleep on the benches. By invitation of Mrs. Stephen Wise, in charge of the Hebrew Settlement House on Clinton Street, the mission sent forty men there each night, and about three hundred to the University Settlement; and all these men returned to the mission in the early morning for a breakfast. All told, in addition to the Bread Line service, which fed over a thousand men at one o'clock every morning, about eight hundred extra meals were provided by the Bowery Mission.

THE BOWERY MISSION TURNED INTO A SLEEPING APARTMENT

Many deaths occurred in the city as well as in other parts of the country from exposure, and babies were amongst the number. Intense suffering was widespread. Straining, struggling, stumbling and fallen horses were a common sight. Stalled automobiles and trucks were commoner. The business air of many harassed and delayed pedestrians and the sportive view of things taken by others failed to brighten the general effect.

The storm was a dreary experience. The romance of the battle with the elements was reserved for the high seas; in the cities of the land, and specially in New York, the fight was grim and colorless. Where it began and where it ended nobody knows; but where it struck it will long be remembered as the belated zero wave of the winter of 1913-14.

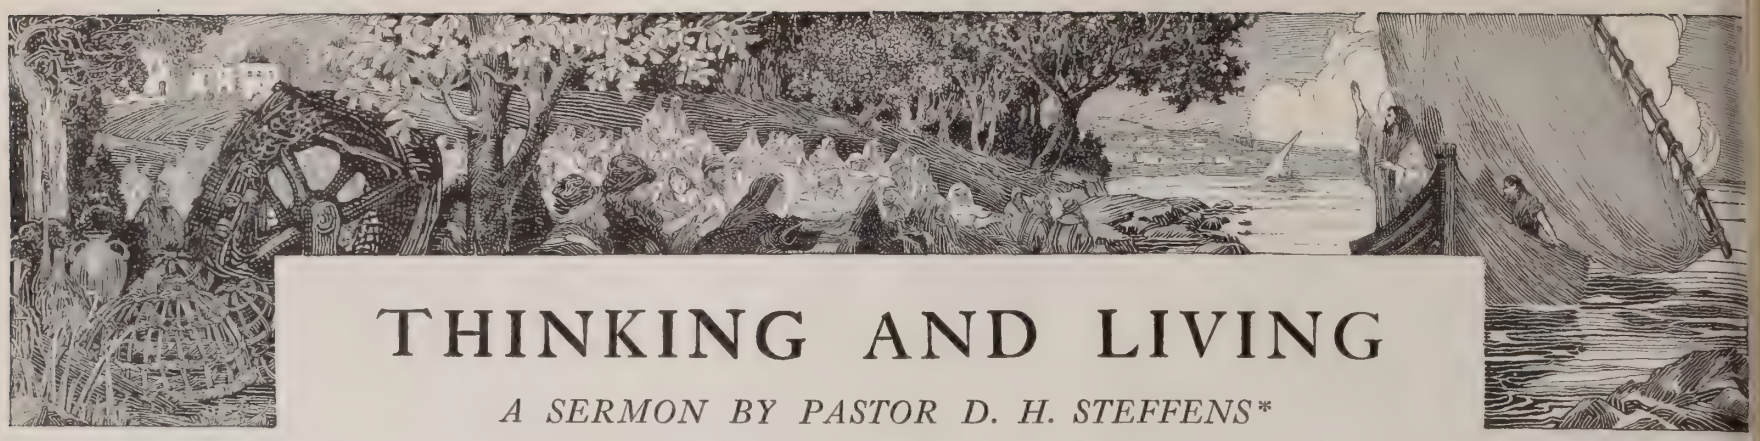
TIRED OUT IN THE STRUGGLE THROUGH THE "ICE SAND" ROADS

WHERE THE TRAFFIC SQUAD CEASED TO BE SUPREME



THINKING AND LIVING

*A SERMON BY PASTOR D. H. STEFFENS

TEXT: "Let this mind be in you, which was also in Christ Jesus." Phil. 2: 5

HOW is it, in the face of this text, that people constantly ask: "What would Jesus do?" or "How would Jesus live?" without first asking themselves: "How did Jesus think?" "As he thinketh in his heart, so is he," says the wise man. (Prov. 23: 7.) Thought is supreme. Life varies with circumstances, but true thought is always essentially the same. The man who merely lives right (without thinking right) needs watching; but the man who thinks right will live right without being watched. And that, I take it, is one of the reasons why St. Paul urges: "Let this mind be in you, which was also in Christ Jesus."

Try to think as Jesus thought. I notice that most men manage somehow to persuade themselves that Jesus would live and do exactly as they choose to live and do. Thus the Socialists claim him as a Socialist, and every social reformer points to him as the first of his kind. Are they not in danger of making Jesus do and live as they wish to do and live—as they think, rather than as Jesus thinks?

The Outward Life

The fact is that no one knows and no one can know just how Jesus would do and live to-day. The answer to these questions cannot be given by a paragraph in a catechism or book of discipline. Nor is it essential that it should. It is, however, supremely essential that we should try to think as Jesus thought. St. Paul, speaking of the law of Christian conscience, therefore says: "Let every man be fully persuaded in his own mind." Then he urges: "Let this mind be in you, which was also in Christ Jesus." Thought is supreme. Christ's Christians must be of Christ's mind. They must think Christ's thoughts. For "as he thinketh in his heart, so is he."

It is not only utterly impossible for a man to do as Jesus did or live as Jesus lived without first thinking as Jesus thought, but it may be positively dangerous and sinful for him to attempt such a thing. Jesus, during his ministry of love upon earth, had no fixed place of abode, "no place where to lay his head." He lived upon the free gifts of his faithful followers, who ministered to him of their substance. He gave himself entirely to his ministry of mercy and love.

In the exercise of this ministry, Jesus associated openly with publicans and sinners. He entered into familiar and intimate conversation with the woman of Samaria, who, by her own confession, was living in open sin. He publicly defended the woman taken in adultery against her accusers. He sat down at meat with his enemies and gave them opportunity to try to entangle him in his talk. He flagrantly disregarded some of the customs and conventions of his day respecting the observance of the Sabbath. He openly rebuked the leading men of his nation and called them hypocrites, whited sepulchers, and a generation of vipers. He went out alone and spent entire nights upon a lonely mountain in prayer. He laid his hands upon a man afflicted with the most loathsome leprosy.

The Inner Motive

We admire and reverence these acts, for they are all evidences of the "mind which was in Christ Jesus." They show us how he thought. We know them to have been inspired by his unselfish love, his boundless mercy and his perfect truth. But do you think that it would be wise and prudent for us to blindly do these things and imitate the blessed Saviour's mode of life to-day? You answer: No! And why not? I ask. Because it would be both wrong and sinful for us to even attempt such a thing without first thinking as Jesus thought.

How important, how absolutely essential it is that we should try to discover what mind was in Christ Jesus, the God man; that we should more and more know his mind and think his thoughts; that we should grow in grace and the knowledge of the Lord Jesus Christ; that we should be Christ-minded!

But can we in any wise know the mind of Christ Jesus? Thank God, we may answer, yes. His teaching and life are recorded for us in the Scriptures. St. Paul sums it all up in one great trait of character: self-humiliating, self-sacrificing love. "Who, being in the form of God, thought it not robbery to be equal with God: but made himself of no reputation and took upon him the form of a servant, and was made in the likeness of man; and being found in fashion as a man, he humbled himself and became obedient unto death, even the death of the cross."

This, then, was the mind of Jesus. His whole life on earth, with its every thought and word and deed, was but a showing forth of this mind. For in him thought and word, mind and deed, were perfectly blended. He could not think one thing and do another. Nor could he do one thing and think another. Whether we read of what he did or what he said, it all comes to one thing: self-humiliating, self-sacrificing love.

There was in him no thought of self. He looked not upon his own things, but upon the things of others. All his thoughts, all his deeds were for us. Our salvation was all his mind. He thus became poor that we might be rich. He sorrowed that we might rejoice. He suffered that we might be spared suffering. He died that we might live. His making himself of no reputation; his taking on him the form of a servant; his being made in the likeness of man; his humbling himself to become obedient unto death, even the death of the cross, was all for us.

Can you comprehend such love, such humility, such self-abnegation? Then you can comprehend the mind of Christ Jesus. But you cannot, for such love passes all understanding. No man can fully comprehend "what is the breadth, and length, and height, and depth" of his all-surpassing love.

As One Thinketh in His Heart

If this be true, as it undoubtedly is, how can St. Paul say: "Let this mind be in you, which was also in Christ Jesus?" How, if no man can comprehend his love, can his mind be in us? How can we think his thoughts? Let us frankly admit that this is utterly impossible for the unregenerate sinner. "The natural man receiveth not the things of the Spirit of God, for they are foolishness unto him: neither can he know them," says St. Paul. His mind is carnal, sold under sin. It is all of self, bent only upon setting itself against God. "The carnal mind is enmity against God, for it is not subject to the law of God, neither indeed can it be."

He may think that he knows the mind of Jesus. He may persuade himself that he is thinking Jesus' thoughts. But not knowing him by faith to be the Son of God and Redeemer of the world, not humbly knowing himself to be a poor, lost creature and Jesus to be his salvation, he knows neither himself nor his Saviour. He cannot know him, for the "preaching of the cross is to them that perish foolishness."

To such a man Jesus may be a great philosopher, thinking deep thoughts on the riddle of life. Or he may be a great moral teacher, uttering wise precepts, and laying down prudent rules of conduct. Or he may be a great reformer, seeking through just and equitable laws so to order society as to add to the well-being of his fellow men. Or he may be a great healer, bringing health and strength to the afflicted. Such a man will make Jesus to be anything and everything but what he really is: the Eternal Son of God becoming man to sacifice himself upon the cross for guilty sinners. He therefore cannot know the mind of Jesus, for this was all his thought. In him all virtues and graces were perfectly poised and balanced. All together aimed to glorify the Father through the salvation of man. It was his meat and drink to do the will of the Father who sent him. He is the one perfect man, ever perfectly minded to glorify God.

How, then, can a carnal-minded sinner know the mind of Jesus? Is it not the meat and drink of such a man to do his own selfish will, to promote and protect his own selfish interests, to advance his own glory? Is not his every thought of self diametrically opposed to the thought of him who knew no selfish interest?

Plainly, this text is spoken to Christ's people, for it is impossible that any man should have his mind unless he be in communion with him. Only that man who by humble, sincere faith is in Christ can have the mind of Christ. "I live," says Paul, "yet not I, but Christ liveth in me; and the life which I now live in the flesh, I live by the faith of the Son of God, who loved me and gave himself for me.' Being able to truthfully say that, he might also have said: "I think, yet not I, but Christ thinketh in me; and the thought which I now think in the flesh, I think by the faith of the Son of God who loved me and gave himself for me." If he lived in Christ and Christ in him, he could not but say to himself and to us: "Let this mind be in you, which was also in Christ Jesus." Having the Spirit of Christ, he must be Christ-minded.

Not perfectly and fully, for the same apostle says: "Not as though I had already attained or were already perfect; but I follow after, if that I may apprehend that for which I am apprehended of Christ." By reason of the weakness of our flesh, our apprehension of "this mind which was also in Christ Jesus" will in this world be partial and imperfect. We know only in part. We "see through a glass darkly." But in the life to come "we shall see face to face"; "we shall know even as we are known." "It doth not yet appear what we shall be, but we know that when he shall appear, we shall be like him, for we shall see him as he is." We shall fully and perfectly live his life, thinking his thoughts and doing the will of the Father. Thus shall he "be glorified in his saints and admired in them that believe."

The Test of Worth

Nevertheless, the admonition, "Let this mind be in you, which also was in Christ Jesus," applies to this present life. Eternity is not a change of character but a change of state. The angel in Revelation, showing John the final consummation, therefore said: "He that is unjust, let him be unjust still: and he which is filthy, let him be filthy still: and he that is righteous, let him be righteous still: and he that is holy, let him be holy still." What we would think and live in the world to come, we must, by the grace of God, at least begin and strive to think and live here.

Everybody knows that it is much easier to work and live by precept than by principle. It requires no thought. Consequently it is much easier to outwardly live right than to think right. But what does it amount to? "As he thinketh in his heart, so is he." Consequently, thought is supreme. The man who merely lives right without thinking right needs watching. But the man who thinks right will live right without being watched.

Let us, therefore, ask ourselves: "How did Jesus think?" We can answer that question. We cannot answer the other. We have a Scriptural warrant for asking it: "Let this mind be in you, which also was in Christ Jesus." As we in the power of the Holy Spirit give answer to that by growing in grace and the knowledge of the Lord Jesus Christ, we can let the living take care of itself. For if the mind of Christ Jesus be in us, then our doing and living will ever be directed to the glory of him who looketh not upon the outward appearance but upon the heart.

FROM DARK TO LIGHT

THE late Dr. Weir Mitchell, besides being famous as a physician, was a poet and novelist. His Christian character is nowhere better indicated than in these verses, written several years ago:

"I know the night is near at hand,
The mists lie low on hill and bay,
The autumn sheaves are dewless, dry,
But I have had the day.

"Yes, I have had, dear Lord, the day;
When at the call I have the night,
Brief be the twilight as I pass
From light to dark, from dark to light."

DAILY MEDITATION

FOR EVERY DAY IN THE YEAR, BASED ON THE WORDS OF JESUS

BY PROFESSOR W. H. T. DAU

SUNDAY, March 8. Matthew 12: 39, 40. "An evil and adulterous generation seeketh after a sign; and there shall no sign be given to it, but the sign of the prophet Jonas: for as Jonas was three days and three nights in the whale's belly; so shall the Son of man be three days and three nights in the heart of the earth." If in an argument we had brought a proof which our opponent could not answer, would we not feel amazed at our opponent's effrontery if he were to demand a new and greater proof? Just such were the tactics of the enemies of our Lord during his ministry on earth. They were blind and deaf to his words and works, and wearied him with their protestations that they would gladly acknowledge his divine mission, if he would only prove it to them. Our Lord calls them "an evil and adulterous generation." They were faithless people, faithless in their social relations, and still more faithless in their spiritual relations to Jehovah whom they pretended to worship, and who had now sent his Son among them for the greatest "sign" that he proposed to show them. All the miracles which Christ performed do not equal the majesty of his life, death, and resurrection. His sojourn among men, his miraculous birth and equally miraculous rising are themselves the greatest sign from heaven and the strongest appeal that God can make to men to repent and believe the Gospel. The miracle which Christ holds out to his insincere opponents as the last one which will be given them will dismay and disconcert them utterly. They are fighting against the conviction which his present miracles are threatening to produce in them: they will madly fight the conviction which shall result from his resurrection, viz., that he was true in all that he said and did.

MONDAY, March 9. Matthew 12: 41. "The men of Nineveh shall rise in judgment with this generation, and shall condemn it: because they repented at the preaching of Jonas; and, behold, a greater than Jonas is here." The sign of the prophet Jonah made a profound impression upon the Ninevites. In sackcloth and ashes king and people humbled themselves in heartfelt penitence before God, and turned his anger into mercy for them by their prayer for forgiveness. The prophet had himself experienced the sorrows of death in the depths of the ocean, and knew what anguish waywardness and self-will bring upon those who resist God. He could picture to the Ninevites both the pains of remorse and the joy of forgiveness. God has cast his own Son into the jaws of death to show men his abhorrence of their sin, and has brought him forth again on the third day to declare that in the death of Christ his justice has received an atonement for the guilt of the world and is now free to dispense pardon to sinners. If the spectacle of Jonah and his preaching could so stir the Ninevites that they were moved to repentance and faith in God's mercy, how much more should the tragedy of Calvary and the glorious event in the garden of Joseph of Arimathea on Easter morning humble men in contrition and raise them again in the confidence of faith that God has buried their sin when he buried his Son? Therefore the Ninevites will be accusing witnesses against the men who reject the death and resurrection of Christ as being of any value to sinners for the removal of their sin.

TUESDAY, March 10. Luke 11: 31. "The queen of the South shall rise up in the judgment with this generation, and condemn them: for she came from the utmost parts of the earth to hear the wisdom of Solomon; and, behold, a greater than Solomon is here." The visit of the Queen of Sheba to the court of Solomon has made a powerful and lasting impression on the nations of Arabia and the surrounding countries. Reminiscences of that visit of the Queen of the South can be traced in the religious writings of the Mohammedans and in the Jewish Talmud. For ages after, the Jews prided themselves on the wisdom of the illustrious son of David. "The wisdom of Solomon" became a proverbial saying among them. In the days of Christ a reference to Solomon's wisdom was readily understood by all the people. Christ arrays the eagerness to hear a mere man utter wise saws, which attracted people hundreds of years ago to the palace of Israel's king, against the stupidity of the greatest men of the nation in his day, who, though crowds of the common people flocked to Christ and hung upon his lips as the bee clings to the linden blossom, would not acknowledge that "never man spake like this man." A greater than Solomon was in their midst. The eternal Wisdom of God has appeared in human form, and on the surging tide of his sublime discourse carried men upward to the very bosom of their Father in heaven, made them look into the very heart of God, and into the uncovered reality of the profoundest truths which it has ever been given the poor mind of man to embrace. And they refused him credence and acceptation. Therefore, the poor woman who ruled a pagan kingdom in her day will rise up against them in the judgment, and say: "If the Wisdom that you are privileged to hear had made its appearance on earth in my lifetime, I should have traveled to the utmost confines of the earth to hear him." "How shall we escape, if we neglect so great a salvation, which at first began to be spoken by the Lord, and was confirmed unto us by them that heard him?"

WEDNESDAY, March 11. Luke 11: 33. "No man, when he hath lighted a candle, putteth it in a secret place, neither under a bushel, but on a candlestick, that they which come in may see the light." Any act by which God manifests his truth, his righteousness, his might, his mercy and goodness, must be so constituted as to carry the power to convince in itself, and must be readily accessible to all. A hidden revelation would be as palpable a self-contradiction as acid sugar or a calm cyclone. The Jews had asked for a sign, and the Lord had declared himself to be that sign. His teaching and living is such that he that runneth may read the divine will concerning this world of sinners in them. The sign is of a self-evidencing nature. He is the Light of the world, and God has provided ample opportunities for seeing the Light. In secret Christ spoke nothing. He taught and labored before the eyes, not only of admiring clients of his wisdom and mercy who might have been regarded as prejudiced in his favor, but also under the constant scrutiny of keen-eyed critics, whose hostile bias caused them to turn any questionable circumstance in his conduct against him, and who even set traps for catching him in his words. The great miracle of his resurrection, too, was rendered incontrovertible by the attending circumstances. Friend and foe received ample testimony regarding its reality. The light was there, and also the candlestick of the witnesses had been supplied. It is still here. Christianity need not fear an honest investigation of any of its claims. Nor need Christians worry that men will not understand the message of God through Christ. The light of the saving truth is everywhere on the candlesticks of thousands of opportunities for seeing it.

THURSDAY, March 12. Luke 11: 34-36. "The light of the body is the eye: therefore when thine eye is single, thy whole body also is full of light; but when thine eye is evil, thy body also is full of darkness. Take heed therefore that the light which is in thee be not darkness. If thy whole body therefore be full of light, having no part dark, the whole shall be full of light, as when the bright shining of a candle doth give thee light." Failure to see a truth may be accounted for in two ways: either there is no truth to see, or there is no organ to see it with. It is impossible to make a blind man, or one who wilfully shuts his eyes, see anything. It is impossible to make a person who has a distorted vision, or squints, see correctly. It is impossible for a person with good eyes to see all he ought to see, if he lets his eyes rove carelessly in all directions, never holding still long enough to receive the full impression of what is exhibited for his inspection. If God has given us no revelation of his mind and will, even the eye of an eagle would be strained in vain to discover anything concerning him. But if God has made a satisfactory revelation of himself, one that is adequate to the purposes of men's salvation, and men still receive no impression at all, or false or insufficient impressions, the fault must lie with them. Their eyes are evil, and as a consequence they remain full of darkness, though all around them is resplendent with the brightness of heaven's truth. "Open Thou mine eyes," prayed the ancient singer, "that I may behold wondrous things out of thy law." We all have reason to continue asking the Physician of our souls to cure our diseased eyes, to remove the blindness of unbelief, the specks of doubt, the distortions of bias, the cataracts of prejudice, when we begin studying the Word of God, and to pray: "Lord, what is dark in me, illumine."

FRIDAY, March 13. Matthew 12: 48, 50. "Who is my mother? and who are my brethren? Behold my mother and my brethren! For whosoever shall do the will of my Father which is in heaven, the same is my brother, and sister, and mother." "He is not ashamed to call them brethren," wonderingly the writer to the Hebrews records this fact of the Lord Jesus. Not only did he in the days of Old Testament prophecy vow to God: "I will declare thy name unto my brethren," not only did he after the completion of his task of redemption send the women at his open tomb on Easter morning away with the message: "Go, tell my brethren," but in the very center of his merciful ministration we have, in the words before us, a sweeping declaration of his kinship with every obedient, that is, believing and active, child of God. To be kith and kin with God's own Son made manifest in the flesh, to know and speak of the great and loving Jesus as our exalted Brother, who is now at the right hand of God and maketh intercession for us—is not this glory superabundant for us who were castaways from God because of our sin? And does not this fact furnish us comfort and cheer and strength to wrestle with every sin that still besets us and to cope with every temptation that has been designed for our overthrow? Let the brotherhood of faith put the kinship which Christ here professes for them to any test: this great Brother of ours will never fail us in any need. He is not ashamed to call the lowest his brother, if the tie that binds is there, obedience to the will of the Father.

SATURDAY, March 14. Mark 4: 3 and Luke 8: 11: "Hearken; Behold, there went out a sower to sow." "Now the parable is this: The seed is the Word of God." The parable of the sower portrays the fortunes of those who "labor in the word and doctrine"—the prophets of old, Christ himself, and all who have after him ministered to men the truth as it is in Christ Jesus. The Word which God sends to men by one of his chosen ministers is seed that he wishes to bestow on human hearts. It has germinating power, and is to sprout and bud and grow to fruitage under his spiritual husbandry. The barren wastes of sinful hearts are to be turned into a garden of the Lord, and men shall some day come bringing in their sheaves rejoicing. It is an event worthy to be taken notice of when a preacher or missionary starts out to cast the seed of saving truth into the hearts of those who are gathered to hear him. "Hearken; Behold!" our Lord cries; "there went a sower out to sow." Eternal issues hang upon the brief hour which men spend hearing a preacher expound to them the hidden wisdom which God ordained before the world for our glory. Both the speaker and his listeners should rise to a full appreciation of the solemnity of that hour: the former that he may come provided with good seed; the latter, that they may receive the Word, "not as the word of men, but as it is in truth, the Word of God, which effectually worketh in them that believe."

ACROSS VENEZUELA WITH THE BIBLE

BY A. R. STARK, Valparaiso, Chile

VENEZUELA is one of our nearest South American neighbors. All travelers are agreed that it is a country with a future before it. At present it has less than three million people scattered over an area four times as large as Great Britain. The universal cry is "faltamos brazos" (we need laborers). Its future development needs the co-operation of the capitalist, the skill of the engineer, and honest statesmanship. To-day its industries are in their infancy, and the republic is only beginning to emerge from its chaotic and bankrupt condition—a legacy of internal anarchy and frequent revolutions.

Roads are practically non-existent in the country. A few railways near the coast have been opened up by British and German engineers. Between the island of Trinidad and the vast basin of the Orinoco considerable navigation is carried on, as there is an extensive interchange of commerce in the form of rubber, feathers, hides, and gold. Indeed, the commercial contrast between Port of Spain, Trinidad, and Caracas, the capital of Venezuela, is very striking.

Roughly speaking, Venezuela is divided by its mountain ranges into three zones. The first zone is the most accessible, and is the dry and comparatively healthy uplands and beautiful valleys overshadowed by mountains. Caracas, Valencia and La Victoria are all found in this region. The second region is the llanos, stretching away to the south, embracing the extensive plains and forests of the Orinoco basin, with its hundreds of affluents. This enormous territory comprises about four-fifths of the whole republic. It is a vast, unexplored, undeveloped, and almost impenetrable region. While in Caracas, I met a Venezuelan who was lost in this forest for two years before he found his way out.

THE AUTHOR

The third zone comprises the eastern range of the Andes, running through the western section of Venezuela. The mountain ranges in this district rise to a height of 15,000 feet. The country abounds with extensive pasture lands, with large herds of cattle and varied products, but it is sparsely populated.

Caracas is reached from the port of La Guaira or Puerto Cabello. The railroads from La Guaira to Caracas and from Puerto Cabello, Valencia, and Caracas pass through some of the most charming scenery that could be found anywhere. From La Guaira to Caracas, as the crow flies, is about eight miles, but winding around mountains to reach the summit of the coast range, the road traverses some twenty-eight miles. Caracas, beautifully situated, lies on the southern slope of the coast range, about four thousand feet above sea level.

AN INTERESTED WOMAN OF BARRANQUILLA

In Venezuela, every one turns toward the capital as the goal of his aspiration, as the country lad from some Western State turns toward Chicago or New York. It is the capital of the country. It is the Athens of Venezuela, where whatever culture is found is always centralized. The Caraqueños, as they are called, consider their city an earthly paradise, and one of its districts is actually called "El Paraiso" (Paradise). The climate is certainly very fine. The first question directed to the visitor is "Qué le parece de Caracas?" (What do you think of Caracas?) As a matter of fact, the visitor would like to see both Caracas and La Guaira invaded by Colonel Gorgas and an army of sanitary engineers, armed with unlimited power to pull down and renovate, as he did on the Isthmus of Panama. Then the city would be an earthly paradise for situation, climate and pleasure.

The charm of Caracas lies in the fact that it is a fine old Spanish city. There is an air of Spanish colonial life about it. The discordant bells of the old cathedral ring out the hours day and night, much to the annoyance of the visitors at the Klindt Hotel. Devout women draped in black mantas, with downcast mien and solemn expression, wend their way while it is still early morning to pay their devotions to the Virgin. The market place is thronged with buyers, and a busy scene it is. The voices of the panadero (baker) and the lechero (milkman) ring out along the street. Lottery-ticket boys thrust their wares in your face and think the Gringo a strange one if he does not purchase one. Loafers and beggars lounge about the historic plaza the whole day. In the afternoon "all the world" is out "paseando."

In La Guaira and Caracas the traveler treads historic ground. Both places are mentioned in that great Protestant book by Kingsley, Westward Ho. Caracas itself is the birthplace of Simon Bolivar, the Washington of South America. His name is enshrined in the hearts of his countrymen. Everywhere in the city we are reminded of him. The National Museum is full of relics of the hero and his campaigns—pictures, weapons and uniforms. Letters are treasured. The hammock and mosquito net he used on the field are still to the fore. A sword, the work of the Lima goldsmiths, presented by the new-born republic of Peru to its emancipator, is cherished. Yet one wonders why true patriotism is so rare on the soil of Simon Bolivar.

Venezuela is proverbial for planting obstacles in the way of the foreigner. We are not surprised to find that recently the attitude of the government toward foreign missions and Bible colportage has been of a menacing character. Under priestly influence the authorities endeavored to set the work of the Gospel within bounds, which, if they had been rigorously enforced, would have meant its total destruction. The Roman Church and priesthood, thus encouraged, opened a general campaign against Bible colporteurs. This agitated and excited the people to such an extent that the presence of the colporteurs in the streets, with their Bible cargo, was a sign for men of the baser sort to gather around and molest and hinder them in their work.

But difficulties at the hands of the authorities and the church are only part of the trials of the Gospel worker in Venezuela. Distances are great. Villages are inaccessible. The local fevers in the interior are deadly and difficult to treat. One Bible man was attacked by a malignant fever in a village. He quickly lost consciousness, and when he came to himself he found his bed surrounded by a group of people who were discussing the dividing of his goods. The local doctor greeted him with: "Señor, you may thank God you are not selling Bibles in hell."

How little do our friends at home realize all the persecution, suffering and hardships that cross the path of the Bible wayfaring man! In one town Colporteur Schilliani sold twenty Bibles to a Freemasons' lodge after being refused permission to sell Bibles elsewhere in the town.

Among the evangelical workers of Venezuela special reference must be made to our beloved friends, Rev. T. and Mrs. Pond of the American Presbyterian Mission. Quite recently a fine new church within two blocks of the central plaza has been erected, and is attracting good congregations. Mr. G. Bailly, of the Christian Alliance and the American Bible Society, has also an important center of evangelical operations. An interesting feature of his work is a training home for native evangelists and preachers. A more recent worker in Caracas is Mr. Stephen Adams, who is laying a foundation for an earnest Gospel mission. In the extreme west of the republic, in the Maracaibo district, the Scandinavian Alliance has an aggressive and successful mission. Other centers occupied are La Victoria, Valencia and La Guaira. The Bible is the one book destined to break the bondage and pierce the veil of superstition and gloom that hangs over Venezuela.

A POSSIBLE BUYER IN CARACAS

COLPORTEUR SCHILLIANI GETS A HEARING

Pitiable Conditions in Japan

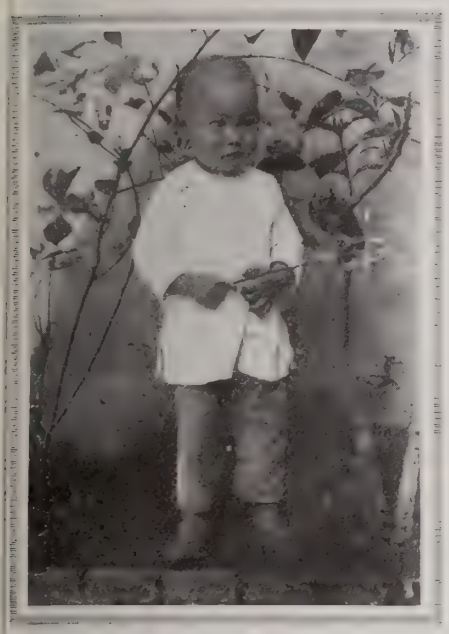
THE CHRISTIAN HERALD is in receipt of the following urgent letter, signed by the executive committee, Sendai (Japan) Christian Orphanage.

"The northeast portion of Japan is afflicted with a famine more acute than that of the winter of 1905-1906. Storms in August sent the ocean in at a height unknown to the oldest inhabitants, destroying thousands of acres of rice along the coast line; the rain at the same time so swelling the rivers as to break the levees, the swift currents tearing out the crops and ruining the fields so badly that they will hardly be usable for crops in the future.

"So acute is the condition and so gloomy the outlook that several of the leading Tokyo and Yokohama newspapers have opened subscriptions for relief funds; and moneyed men of Tokyo, Baron Shibusawa, Count Okuma, and others of like repute, have formed themselves into a relief organization and have brought the matter before the National Parliament.

"The Conference of Federal Missions has resolved to bring the matter before the Christian world at large. The call to take in children from the famine district is already growing more and more insistent, and by March, when the distress will be at its height, we shall be simply overwhelmed, for children in great numbers will be at the point of starvation."

GIFTS AND PRAYERS FOR THE ORPHANS



DOES NOBODY WANT ME?

GOD is raising up friends for the orphans of China. In response to the appeal of the missionaries for the support of the 1,005 little ones now in their care at twenty stations, noble-hearted Christian men and women are responding daily, and their letters afford hope that the great need will yet be met. We could wish that every reader of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD might take the case of the orphan children of China to heart and help them with a gift from their abundance.

Following are a few extracts from some of the letters received during the past week:

G. F. E., Tropic, Fla., writes: "Enclosed please find my check for $5 for the little Chinese orphans. Before the end of three months I may send another five dollars. It may not be uninteresting for you to learn how God directly led me to send this. In the first place, I am a married man with five children, and I am in poor health, and my income not certain. I saw the pictures of the orphans, and I started to read your editorial, but the thought of so many poor, ragged children in our own large cities was with me, and that 'charity should begin at home,' and I had not patience to conclude your appeal, as I was disgusted at the fact of your diverting money and tender care from our own poor, neglected waifs of a Christian heritage to those little foreigners.

"In continuing to read your invaluable paper, I came to the article about the visit of the Japanese statesman who you state was a graduate of Harvard and a beautiful Christian character, and I read his strong assurances that Japan would become a Christian nation, and that she would not war with us. Then God opened up my mind to see how much good this Christian Japanese had, no doubt, done to prevent a bloody war, and that but for him and other Christian Japanese, a war might have raged between the two nations, and directly God brought those orphans before my mind, and your assurances that many of them would, doubtless, grow up to be most active and effective agents to Christianize China. I saw that the influence of these very orphans might in future cement a Christian love and friendship between China and our beloved country, and, therefore, the money sent to educate, support, and train them might in future save the lives of thousands of our own sons, and avert the awful and unspeakable miseries of war."

"Three Friends," West Bridgewater, Pa., write: "Enclosed you will find $3 for the China Orphan Fund. We are interested in foreign missions, and would like to help in this cause. I wish I could send more, but we have so many places to give, and we want to help, even if it is a small amount. May God's blessing go with it."

Mrs. M. R. R., Le Roy, N. Y., writes: "Last week I received the booklet, The Abused Leaf. My heart was touched with sympathy for the little waifs who are so sadly misused. Please accept $1 for the Orphan Fund."

Mr. G. Y., Pittsburg, writes: "Enclosed find $2 for the China Orphan Fund. We give this small amount with great pleasure, and pray that it may do much good for these orphan children, and that the Lord will bless them. This is from the Junior Luther League of North Side, Pittsburg."

Mrs. T. P. K., Woodbine, Iowa, writes: "Enclosed find $5 to help the China orphans. I wish it might be more. I am a widow with a small income. My heart is with them, knowing they are China's future Christian workers."

Mrs. H. M. P., Prescott, Ontario, Canada, writes: "Find enclosed $2 for the China Orphan waifs. I wish it were twenty, but as it cannot be, I will just send my mite, hoping it will help the good work a little. May God's blessing rest upon the work."

PERHAPS SOME ONE WILL NOW

H. T., New Oxford, Pa. ($1), writes: "I cannot let this opportunity pass without contributing something to a cause fraught with such vast possibilities for good for the future. With a prayer for God's blessing."

Julia L. M., Cornwall, Vt., writes: "Enclosed you will find $1, which I wish forwarded to the orphans in China. I only wish it were much more, but as I am an orphan myself and without any home, I cannot do much for others, but gladly give my mite. I would like to have this spent for some little girl."

WHEN BETH CAME HOME

BY ELEANOR H. PORTER

IT WAS a stately white-pillared, green-blinded old mansion set well back in the midst of velvety, tree-shaded lawns. In spite of its unmistakable air of dignified elegance and prim sobriety, the whole place wore to-day an air of almost eager excitement. Windows were open and doors stood wide-flung; immaculate but elderly maids flitted hurriedly about, and a grizzled gardener was tramping the lawn from end to end in a fruitless search for twigs, fallen leaves, or bits of paper.

Within the house a sweet-faced old woman and a kindly-eyed old man tripped happily about the rooms, nodding, smiling, and talking—of Beth. Always of Beth, the child of their old age.

Beth was coming home. She had been home before, of course—for vacations. But this was no vacation. This was for permanency. Vacations were a whirl of dressmaking, dentistry, and gayeties crowded into a limited, fast-flying number of days or weeks. Permanency was the restful, happy intimacy of everyday life, with no dreaded "time to go" looming just ahead. In mother's eyes was a vision of a loving daughter, gradually taking over into her capable, graceful hands all the wearisome, worrisome details of home and church affairs that were so dear, but that were becoming so burdensome now. In father's eyes was just his daughter Beth, always to be there with her smile, her gay banter, and her kiss to welcome him. Beth was coming home.

Miles away, but speeding nearer, Beth was, indeed, coming home. In Beth's eyes, too, were visions, in which the past and the future were hopefully entangled, but always capitalized: Commencement, Valedictory, Fame, Good-bys, Flowers, Applause, Career, Life. Beth drew a long breath and settled herself more comfortably, her dreamy eyes out the window. Life! After all, that was what was before her now—Life. And she must look forward, not backward. Life, real life was ahead of her, not behind her. Life!

At four o'clock that afternoon Beth reached home. Father met her at the station, mother on the veranda steps. Back by the side door the elderly maids watched for a chance to courtesy their greetings. Beyond them the grizzled gardener ducked his head in respectful jubilation.

"Oh, Beth, we're so glad and thankful," quavered mother. "Just think, we've got you home, dear!"

"Yes, home," echoed father, in a voice deep with feeling.

"Oh, yes, I'm here, all right," laughed Beth, tossing a nod and a smile to the old gardener and the courtesying maids. "But I came near not being. One of the girls had a farewell spread to-night and wanted me to stay; but I told her I'd simply got to go home."

"Oh, but, my dear, of course, if you'd wished to stay one more day," began Mrs. Gray, in quick distress.

"Nonsense! I didn't. I wanted to come home," interposed her daughter, briskly.

"Oh, all right, dear," murmured Mrs. Gray, with a little sigh of content, as she led the way into the house.

It was some time later at the supper table that Beth laughingly threw up her hands.

"'Beth,' 'Beth,' 'Beth'!" she mimicked despairingly. "Dear me, people, you'll just have to begin to learn to stop calling me 'Beth.' You see, I'm going to be 'Elizabeth,' now."

"Oh, but, Beth," began her mother—then stopped in confusion.

"Nonsense!" spoke up her father, sharply.

"Oh, but it isn't nonsense," protested the girl, lifting her chin a little. "Elizabeth is my name, and I just wish to be called by it; that's all. You don't suppose I'm going to sign a silly-looking 'Beth' to my pictures, do you?"

"Your pictures!" stammered Mrs. Gray.

"Surely, mother dear! That's what I've decided to be, you know—an illustrator," nodded Miss Elizabeth Gray.

"'To be'!" echoed her father, with a puzzled frown.

"Yes; draw pictures, you know, for books and

The Church and World-Peace

THESE are the days of high ideals. In every department of human effort and research we see this fact emphasized. World-wide philanthropy, international friendship, arbitration, popular education, the advance in scientific hygiene, even the regulation of the trusts, must all be included among the ideals toward which we have been reaching of late years. There is still another—remote, elusive, but finer than all else—the vision of world-peace. To tempt this angel of the skies down to earth is the dream of the modern prophet, the bright hope of the enthusiast, the ambition of the few rich who have consecrated their wealth to noble aims. Edwin Ginn's million-dollar Peace Foundation, the pioneer of its kind, has helped. So has Mr. Carnegie's $10,000,000 peace endowment, which he has now augmented with two millions more. And the strangest thing about it is that the old ironmaster has put the burden of spreading the Gospel of Peace squarely upon the churches, which should have taken it up long ago.

There are, doubtless, many who do not admire Mr. Carnegie, and to whom a modern Crœsus who makes a display of benevolence is a distasteful picture. But let us be just. It is not a small matter to bring the church squarely face to face with its long-neglected duty as an agency for the promotion of world-peace. United, the churches could set afoot a propaganda that would prove irresistible. The far-flung influence of such a movement would speedily make itself felt. Were the Gospel of peace preached with eloquent persistence in the pulpits of America, it would soon appear that we had lighted a beacon to illumine the world. If one strong, earnest, fearless nation leads, others will surely follow.

The Jewish Bible in English

FEW events in the history of religion have been of more striking interest than the celebration of the completion of the task of translating the Hebrew Bible into English. A dinner was recently given at the Jewish Theological Seminary at New York to members of the Bible Translation Committee who have just now finished their six years' task.

The first point of importance in this great task is that it will go far to save the younger generations of Jews from drifting away from religion. In this new land, cut off from the traditions of their people, forgetting, or never learning, the speech of their fathers, surrounded with an atmosphere of activity and ambition, mastering and putting to daily use the language of the New World, it has been an easy thing for multitudes of young Hebrews to drift away from the God of their fathers. To have a Bible in the new language in the New World will go far to stop this drift. Jacob H. Schiff, in addressing the gathering, declared: "Even if we want our children to understand the language of our forefathers that has been ours from time immemorial, we want before all else that they shall understand our Bible, our great heritage, our great Book, in the language of our country in which we bring them up as Americans and as English-speaking Jews." Dr. Kaufman Kohler declared the Bible to be "the greatest unifier and democratizer of man's spirit." Dr. Solomon Schechter said: "Judaism can have no other basic principle than the Bible. The Bible," he declared, "is our fatherland. Through this translation we have opened for you the gates to your fatherland."

But the second point of interest is the fact that this event in Jewish history gives fresh ground for faith that the prophecy is to be fulfilled for the return of God's ancient people to the fold of which his only begotten Son Jesus is the Shepherd. When Christian and Jewish people are studying the same Old Testament, both versions couched largely in identical language, a long step will have been taken toward their final meeting at the feet of the world's Messiah. High tribute was paid to Christian Biblical scholarship by Dr. Schechter, who, after acknowledging that Christian scholarship had preceded that of the Jews in the work of commenting upon the Scriptures, declared: "Christian commentators have done a wonderful thing in interpreting many of those passages in the Bible that must otherwise remain a sealed book to English-speaking people." The text and phraseology of the King James Version are utilized. Also use is made of the improved accuracies of the Christian Revised Version.

With this generous spirit shown on the part of Jewish scholars and the actual message of the Old Testament before them in the words they think and speak, the younger Jews must come to have a truer appreciation of the Christ, himself a Jew, who came in accordance with the prophecies of their books, and who brought to the Jewish race its crowning glory.

When Silence Falls

IN a village on the east bank of a river some one began to notice that the town clock of a larger village on the other side of the river could be heard distinctly at night, though he never heard it in the day-time. The clock struck no louder at night than in the day. But the day noises drowned the tones so that in the smaller village they could not be heard. At night this was changed. All the street sounds of the larger town, all the milder noises of the smaller village, all sounds along the fields and roads between, were hushed—and then the bell could be heard, tolling out the hours of the night.

After the recent heavy snowfall in New York, residents not far from the great Metropolitan tower noticed that all through the day they could hear the wonderful chimes striking the quarter hours. On other days they could be heard only occasionally, and then the sounds were not distinct and clear. What had happened? Had the chimes taken on a new strength, or the ear a new acuteness? Not at all. Bell and ear were precisely as before. But the jarring sounds of the city had been hushed by the mantle of snow. Wheel and hoof were muffled. Other things that ordinarily were noisy could not make their accustomed clatter. And through the new stillness wrought by the snow came the old music of the chimes.

We wonder why we do not oftener hear God's voice. We recall times when he spoke to us clearly, tenderly, beautifully. Why are we not hearing him now? Because we have allowed the noises of the world, noises of other thoughts and other words and other hopes, noises of our work and noises of our play, noises of our tangled obligations and responsibilities, noises of our griefs and our joys, our expectations, our struggles, our determinations, to drown the voice of the Eternal Friend.

There is need of some sudden change, like the falling of night, or the falling of the snow, to deaden those earth-born sounds. Sometimes a calamity, a grief, an illness, does this for us. We wonder at first, and fret, and chafe—till at length our souls are silent, and then we hear God's voi and understand. We need not wait for any exte nal change like this. But we do need to take tin to make an occasional silence in our own mind It is there that the clamor is. And it is there tha we can enforce, now and then, the rule of silence.

It may not be always possible to heed his inv tation: "Come ye yourselves apart into a dese place, and rest awhile." But even in the clamor a city street or the whirr of a factory, the hurry an office or the hum of a schoolroom, we can put mantle of silence over our minds. And in that m ment of silence we shall hear again the voice of Go

Rome and the Literacy Test

SOME interesting revelations have come to th surface in the general discussion of the literac test provision in the Burnett-Dillingham Immigra tion Bill. Always alert for any supposed invasio of its interests, the Vatican is thoroughly arouse in opposition to the test, which it interprets as a anti-Catholic measure. In a Berlin cable despatc of February 16, the New York Times correspon dent learns by telegraph from Rome that the utmost indignation prevails in Vatican circles in Ron over the Burnett Immigration Bill. The papal authorities mak no secret of their conviction that the bill was conceived fro deliberately anti-Catholic motives, and it is sincerely hoped tha the United States Senate will kill it. Cabled reports of Pres dent Wilson's opposition to the literacy test evoke much sati faction at the Vatican, which has been given to understand tha the American Order of Junior Mechanics was mainly respon sible for the Burnett measure. Italian, Austrian, and Hungar rian Catholic immigrants would be those mainly affected by th bill, it is stated, and at least 55 per cent. of Italians would b excluded by the literacy test and 40 per cent. of Austro-Hun garians. There is reason to believe that the Vatican is exer ing such influence as it commands at Washington to brin pressure to bear in the direction of annihilating the bill, o the "anti-Catholic" clause, as the literacy provision is terme

It is not wholly unexpected to find that "th Vatican is exerting influence in Washington" t kill the bill, or, failing this, to eliminate the liter acy test. The Catholic organs in this country, tak ing their cue from Rome, are bitterly inveighin against the bill. According to the Catholic Citize of February 7, Cardinal Gibbons, Archbishop Glen non and other Catholic prelates have addressed let ters to congressmen against the test, and hope t secure a veto from the President should the bil pass.

Aside altogether from the desirability of the lit eracy test—which is to us extremely doubtful as means of estimating the worth of a man as a American citizen—we have the assurance of Mr Underwood, the Democratic leader in the House that "the proposed test is not directed against an nation or any race." Yet, in the face of this fran disclaimer, Rome reaches across the sea to kill it Isn't it about time for the "princes of the Pa pacy" to issue another point-blank denial that th church is in politics?

The Travel of the Future

IS THE conquest of the air even now within meas urable distance? Rudyard Kipling, in a lectur before the Royal Geographical Society of Lon don, gives a prophetic forecast of the coming vic tory, which he believes is destined to revolutioniz travel throughout the globe. "The time is not fa off," he says, "when the traveler will know and car just as little whether he be on sea or land, as w to-day know and care whether our steamer is ove forty fathoms or not. Then we shall hear the los ports of New York and Bombay howling like Tar shish and Tyre. Incidentally, as we shall chang all our mental pictures of travel, at present we ar already scouting and reporting along the fantasti skyline of the future. The men of the presen have begun the discovery of the new world with th same devoutly careless passion as their predeces sors completed the discovery of the old."

Heavy as has been the toll of human lives paid t aerial adventure, it is far outweighed by a singl ocean disaster. The sky fleets of the nations ar growing apace, and the time seems to be near whe the international shipping of cloudland will equa that upon the sea. That day may bring a worl transformation the extent of which none can fore see. All the nations will be drawn more closely to gether; old antagonisms will die out, and there may come—let us trust there will—a sense o brotherhood and related interests such as the worl has never yet known.

India's Thirsty Sands Watered

IN MANY parts of India the work of irrigation is being rapidly pushed by governmental and private instrumentality to lessen the terrible effects of the frequently recurring famines. Convoluted tube wells designed to meet the difficulty experienced in many parts of India in obtaining a sufficient supply of water from ordinary wells are being sunk by the government in large numbers. Mr. Henry D. Baker, the United States consul at Bombay, quotes the report of famine operations in the Baroda State for 1911-12 to the effect that in that official year 3,300 wells were constructed with the aid of the Baroda government loans, and 2,400 wells with private capital. A special grant of $6,500 was allowed by the government for boring wells in several villages where no water was obtainable, and $12,200 additional was allowed for boring sets from Cawnpore, and another $2,000 for purchasing small chain pumps, and to induce cultivators to get such pumps with the help of government loans if necessary. Many local boards in Baroda voted funds for sinking new wells, and for repairing and deepening old wells throughout the villages. As a provision against famine, the Maharaja of Baroda reduced the interest on loans for the boring of wells to only 3½ per cent. What a blessed, heaven-born thought is that of modern science: to take the water flowing so freely below the surface and with it quench the fevered thirst of the multitudes that have been perishing without it, and moisten the burning sands and make them yield fruitful harvests! Water is not more necessary to vegetable and physical life than love is necessary to the life of the soul, than the love of Christ is necessary to its salvation. In the realm of nature and grace these words of the Psalmist are fulfilled:

He turneth the wilderness into a standing water, and dry ground into water springs. (Ps. 107: 35.)

Auto Racer Hits Crowd

LOUIS G. SMITH, a Civil War veteran, was killed and five others were injured the other day on the Vanderbilt race course at Santa Monica, Calif., by an automobile which got out from under control and ran into a crowd of spectators in front of the Soldiers' Home. The car was going almost a mile a minute when rounding a curve the steering knuckle broke, and the automobile skidded over the curb into the crowd and toppled over. Accidents at the great auto races are usually due to reprehensible recklessness on the part of excited contestants. Good sport is proper, but reckless car driving on the race course and on the highways has gotten to be a slaughter which many of the States are punishing with imprisonment. The twenty-one-year-old son of a leading judge of the Circuit Court of New Jersey was the other day sent to prison for from five to ten years for running down with his car and killing a fourteen-year-old boy in Orange on Christmas Day, 1911. The young man and two male companions had made the rounds of the saloons of East Orange and Newark prior to the tragedy, and after fighting the case through all the courts he was put behind the bars as a felon. Those who by recklessness or intemperance have killed their fellows with their cars have broken the commandment:

Thou shalt not kill. (Ex. 20: 13.)

Missionary Returns to Marry

MISS MABEL SKELTON, who for several years has been doing mission work in Bombay, returned to this country on a furlough, and made addresses in different places. Her address at Newark, N. J., greatly pleased a physician of that city. He soon made his avowal of love, which was reciprocated. She promised to marry him if the missionary authorities under whose auspices she was working would release her. This the society hesitated to do, and she started on her long journey back to the field. The doctor pleaded with the authorities so earnestly that they consented, and now she is on her way back to become a bride. Work in the foreign field is beautiful, heroic, divine; not more so, however, than obedience to the demands of human love, as the foundation of both church and state.

Therefore shall a man leave his father and his mother, and shall cleave unto his wife. (Gen. 2: 24.)

Foundation for Industrial School

THE establishment and maintenance of an industrial school in Minneapolis, Minn., is provided for in the will of the late William Hood Dunwoody, a prominent miller of that city. One-third of his estate has been bequeathed for this purpose, and it is believed that it will amount to $3,000,000. According to the provision of the will, especial attention is to be given in the proposed school to the different handicrafts and useful arts, and emphasis is laid on the provision requiring instruction in milling and the construction of milling machinery. Mr. Dunwoody had observed the tendency of young men to enter offices after completing their schooling, and to assure the future of the milling industries he determined they should have their chance to learn the groundwork of the industry. The grinding of grain into flour is a primal industry. The grinding of grain between stones was the method in use for thousands of years till about a hundred years ago or less, when new processes of making flour were discovered and used. It is a wise thing to found such a school for those making their living in the industrial world, and especially for those who shall manufacture the flour for bread. The importance of the milling industry to the Hebrews is thus referred to:

No man shall take the nether or the upper millstone to pledge; for he taketh a man's life to pledge. (Deut. 24: 6.)

ESTABLISHED SCHOOLS ON BATTLESHIPS

ABOARD every ship in the United States navy there is now an ample and well-equipped schoolroom. Every enlisted man and every officer is compelled by the strictest rules to attend the classes. There are classes in reading, writing, arithmetic, advanced literature, and history. There are classes including the same studies one would take in an academic or college course. The men have the opportunity of a lifetime to acquire knowledge out of reach of many others. Secretary of the Navy Daniels originated the school system aboard the battleships, and is delighted at the manner in which the men have availed themselves of this privilege of securing a better education. This systematic mental improvement of the men in the navy is a blessing to the men personally and a benefit to the country they serve so loyally. Many of the men in the army and navy have a high moral and religious standard. The institution of these schools on the sea calls to mind the words of the wise man: "Wisdom is the principal thing; therefore get wisdom; and with all thy getting get understanding." (Prov. 4: 7.)

Peruvian Explorer's Tragical Report

CAPTAIN J. C. BEASLEY, of the English army, with three companions who left New York last summer on an exploration expedition, returned to that city a few days ago with a most tragical report of their journey. They started out to explore the uncharted districts of the Peruvian Andes and the headwaters of the Amazon. At Lima they left eight of the original party of twelve, who, from fever or fear of the perils of the trip, halted. In the savage wilds of the Andes they found the bones of two men and camp utensils, which Captain Beasley claims belonged to the American O'Higgins and the Seljan expedition, although no scientific society or newspaper editors seem to have been able to recall such an expedition. Captain Beasley reports that his party found Machu Picchu, the lost city of the Incas discovered by Professor Bingham of Yale. The explorers say they had a terrible time going the length of the Amazon on a raft, in getting through the rapids and whirlpools, and in escaping the poisoned arrows of the savage Indians who constantly attacked them. There are difficulties everywhere in the material and spiritual world, deadly fevers, impassable forests, savage enemies, and treacherous rivers. They can be overcome with persistency and with faith. The incessant perils reported by the explorers remind us of those of the voyage Paul took and his words concerning them:

Sirs, I perceive that this voyage will be with hurt and much damage, not only of the lading and ship, but also of our lives. (Acts 27: 10.)

Jail for Poultry Dealers

THIRTEEN men of the Poultry Trust, some wealthy and influential, who were convicted more than two years ago in the Court of General Sessions in New York, were the other day sentenced to serve terms of three months in the penitentiary and pay a fine of $500 each, according to the unanimous decision of the Appellate Division of the Supreme Court. They were guilty of a conspiracy in restraint of trade; to run up the price of poultry and run out of business their independent rivals. The anti-trust law under which these men were convicted has been on the statute books of New York State for nearly fifty years, but this is the first time a jail sentence has been pronounced, settling the law that members of illegal trusts can be charged with and punished for personal guilt.

The law is not made for a righteous man, but for the lawless and disobedient. (I Tim. 1: 9.)

Inter-British Tunnel

IT IS PROPOSED to join Ireland and Scotland with a submerged iron tube railway between the two countries. A Chicago engineer suggests that a tube containing a double railway track could be constructed between Black Head and Port Patrick for $30,000,000. This tube would have a length of twenty miles. It would not be drilled through the rock beneath the water owing to the expense and also to the engineering difficulties which would be created by the mid-channel depression known as Beaufort's Dike, but it would lie in quiet water, free from the effect of wind and wave, and would be supported securely. It is no new thing to tunnel mountains for trains or run them under rivers and bays. The proposed tube would be a trifling undertaking in engineering and expense when compared with the Panama Canal, the New York Aqueduct, or the hundred million dollar terminals of the Pennsylvania and New York Central Railroads. Such a submarine railroad would be good for both Ireland and Great Britain. It would promote a closer communication with and more intimate knowledge of each other, and would tend to bring about that spirit of harmony and justice so necessary to the happiness and prosperity of both. In times of national unrest it is well to heed this divine command:

Speak ye every man the truth to his neighbor: execute the judgment of truth and peace in your gates; and let none of you imagine evil in your hearts against his neighbor. (Zech. 8: 16, 17.)

A CHURCH BUILT FROM ONE TRE

IN SANTA ROSA, Calif., is a Baptist church building, the product of a single giant redwood tree which grew in the neighborhood of Guerneville, a few miles distant from where it now stands. Not only is the main structure built from the one tree, but the interior finishings—except the floor, which is of pine—are of the same wood, beams, pulpit and seatings, not a particle of plaster or other similar material being used in this remarkable building.

The tree when sawed yielded 78,000 feet of lumber, and after the building was finished in every particular, enough material was left to manufacture several thousand shingles, besides a quantity of scantlings, joists and other dimension stuff. So carefully were the details planned, and so skilfully was the framework put together, that the builders of this one-tree church declared it might be as enduring as the old Saxon churches of England built centuries ago out of native timber and still in use. It is Gothic in style, finished with massive buttresses outside and heavy beams inside. A tower seventy feet high was built on the southwest corner, but it came down at the time of the great earthquake in 1906.

The history of the organization of this church dates back to a time when there were only three Baptist churches in the State. The first meeting was held in a log house, the home of Deacon Martin Hudson, a few miles from the present site of Santa Rosa, in 1852, and the organization perfected with seven members. Soon services were held out of doors under a large live oak tree, until in the second year the seven had grown to eighty. In the fall of 1853 was built and dedicated a little meeting-house in what is now known as the old town of Franklin, the first town established in that part of the State. As the entire community assisted in its erection the Baptists on their part agreed that other denominations might use it when appointments did not conflict. It was in this little pioneer church the Rev. J. McCorcle, since a prominent Christian minister, preached his first sermon, and where Bishop O. P. Fitzgerald of the Methodist Church held his first services in Sanoma County. When the Baptist State Convention of Northern and Central California held its initial session in San Francisco in 1852, Santa Rosa was not yet on the map. To the meetings of this association the Franklin church faithfully sent her delegates, until in 1857 the Pacific Association (the one to which it now belongs) was organized. Since that time it has been one of the prominent churches in the district.

THE CHURCH THAT WAS BUILT FROM A REDWOOD TREE

In 1856, after a somewhat uneasy career in which trouble and division played a part, the little church was put on wheels and six strong yoke of oxen hauled it from the Franklin oaks to the new town of Santa Rosa, where it served as sanctu for seventeen years, and where it still stands Third Street in useful service as a dwelling-ho It was abandoned as a church in 1873, the con gation having outgrown its capacity. Then a f thousand-dollar church was erected on the co of B and Ross Streets, and it is church that was constructed from wood of one tree.

A refutation to this claim found way into the columns of one of our l ing church papers some years ago, this led Rev. W. L. Gaston, soon a taking the pastorate of the church 1897, to begin an investigation as to truth or falsity of the claim, for s were skeptical in the belief that so l a church could have been built from timber of a single tree. In 1902—golden jubilee of the church—this pa published a souvenir booklet in wh he fully substantiated the claim. J. T. Butts, a reputable attorney Santa Rosa, made affidavit that he at the time of the building of church in the employ of the late R Murphy, who sawed the tree into l ber, and was knowing to all the f concerning the order of lumber pla by the church, and the filling of sam Mr. Murphy's direction from the t ber of one redwood tree, which felled the very day the order from church was received. Mr. Butts's davit is corroborated by others ployed in the mill at the time, and old settlers in Guerneville.

"One Sunday morning," says Gaston, "the affidavit was read f the pulpit, and the testimony was cepted by the most incredulous, now no one disputes the statement that the chu was built entire, excepting floor, from the woo one tree." So it stands to-day probably the c church in the world that can make and substant such a claim. It has now become necessary to large the church by adding two small wings, ing the building in the form of a cross, but in particular will the original one-tree part of it disturbed or changed.

MRS. S. M. WRIGH

BY LOVE

MARGARET E. SANGSTER, JR.

I OPENED the thin letter with the interesting handwriting — opened it with a jerk. For my mail had not been exciting and my mind was a blank as far as copy was concerned. Then, as I read the words carelessly, a wonderful idea jumped from the pages and took me by the hand. This is the idea:

"I am sending you a few lines," read the letter, "about an object lesson I saw enacted one afternoon on the street, thinking that perhaps you might be able to use it in a story.

"A young mother, nicely dressed, was standing in a store entrance, with a child some three years old. I noticed her slight agitation at the time, and passing again about ten minutes later, I saw her urging the small lad away, telling him that he 'must come.' The little fellow was hatless, and threw himself down on the pavement. His white stockings were smeared with the mud, and his face was streaked with tears.

"As I passed down the street, I saw another little tot of about the same size, frolicking with his mother. As I watched the happy pair, I heard her say: 'Take mother's hand, darling; we must go now.' And after a moment's hesitation the child came.

"I have thought much about it—the influence of the training of those two little lives—the one mother forcing her child; the other ruling by love."

I told you that the idea reached out and took me by the hand. Don't you agree with me about its being a wonderful little idea—that people do not think enough about?

I know of a tiny girl, whose mother is bringing her up in the right way. When the child, who has a rather unyielding disposition, is bad, she is given toys to quiet her. A few days ago the little girl grew angry about some trifle, and the mother, with a set face, handed her a toy, which she promptly threw across the room. With the expression of a figure carved in wood, the mother returned the toy to the naughty little fingers, which quickly, and with a nearly remarkable strength, broke it in two. It was then that the mother lost her patience. With the wooden expression completely lost from her face, she shook her small daughter—shook her hard.

"You are a hateful child, Alice," she said.

A few days later the mother went into the playroom where her daughter was entertaining a small guest. Pausing on the threshold, she waited to hear the baby conversation. And imagine her dismay when she heard her well brought-up daughter calling the visitor names!

After the usual period of meditation and prayer, she took the child on her knee and tried to reason with her:

"Baby," she asked, "why did you call Louise names? Tell me!"

To her surprise the little one answered, with the face of a cherub just down from heaven.

"Why, muvver—you called me a 'hateful child.' Isn't dat right?"

The one time that the mother lost her temper was the very time the child remembered.

I met a girl not long ago—a girl with a beautiful face and an old family name and plenty of money. A girl who was very conventional and very good. Somehow we got talking about different girls that we knew:

"I know a young lady—I can't call her a girl," said my companion, "who was once mighty nice. She went to school with me, and as she grew up tall and graceful and beautiful, I admired her a good deal. Then I went away to college and she lost her money. I did not hear much about her for some years, not until I came back to town. Then I found her a dancing teacher, with her wonderful, tall body in graceful draperies, and her wonderful beauty helped along by a make-up box. Sometimes I saw her name in the yellow newspapers."

"Did she remember the old friendship?" I asked, tactlessly, perhaps.

"Oh, yes!" responded the girl nonchalantly, "she did. But I couldn't! I have a reputation to keep up and a name to remember. I couldn't go out walking with her the way I used to, and I couldn't have her at my home. People might have seen us together—and talked. Perhaps my dropping her will make her realize just what she is. Perhaps it will do her some good."

"But," I asked, again tactlessly, "don't you feel a little—responsible?"

The girl's big brown eyes opened very wide, and her happy, carefree laugh rang out.

"Responsible?" she asked gaily. "I don't know exactly what you mean. I had nothing to do with her when she was becoming so—tough. I was away at college."

I didn't say anything—but I thought. And as I thought, I saw the picture of a girl brought up in society, with no talents except a small stock of fa dancing. I saw her painting her l and penciling her eyebrows to loo part. I saw her going to a ch hood's friend to renew a friendship happier days. And I saw the tri ignore an appeal in the eyes shrug her pretty shoulders and of the weather.

Perhaps it is best to let a girl k just how far down she has gone dropping her. But perhaps if sh made to understand by a smile comradeship and a friendly hand a helping heart; perhaps if she made to understand by love, she turn around and walk up the st hill of her own making.

Girls, dear, it's a funny world t buzzes around on its axis. A w that is full of strange people strange customs and strange exp sions. Two of the strangest exp sions are "by force" and "by lo" You saw how force worked with baby boy—it brought out the s bornness in his nature. You can agine how force will work with girl. You can see her looking f a friend that she cannot find, and k ing on, with many sad looks b ward, along the down-going p Somehow, force does not seem to the desired results.

The earth keeps on whirling aro Sometimes I think that tears h worn the furrows in it, and care wrinkled up the mountains. But w the sun comes out at the close o bitter day and smiles over the rowed, wrinkled place, the whole th becomes a scene of marvelous bea For God rules the world by love.

A WEEK IN THE WORLD'S NEWS

Startling Effects of Graft Hunt

DISTRICT ATTORNEY WHITMAN, of New York, is pushing his graft inquiry with a vigor and keenness that has thrown consternation into the ranks of dishonest politicians and their friends. Already a number of comparatively prominent men have faced exposure as participants in public graft. On February 1 at Buffalo, John J. Kennedy, State treasurer, who was subpœnaed to appear before the grand jury the next day, committed suicide. The general impression was that the act was the only alternative to betraying himself or his friends, although at his funeral, attended by Governor Glynn and many State officials, the dead man's attorney denied any such motive. The act, however, is significant of the situation in this State. The district attorney has uncovered such an extensive system of graft that the State legislature may make the investigation Statewide and prosecute it vigorously.

Ritual Murder Case Dropped

THROUGH the disconcerting circumstance that the boy is alive who was supposed to have been murdered in the latest "ritual murder" case in Russia, the Jewish tailor Pashkoff has been released on bail (possibly to be later tried on the charge of committing a ritual murder). The famous Beiliss case has left the Russian authorities in a bad frame of mind, if press reports are correct, and prone to find occasion to substantiate their charges that ritual murders occur.

Mexican Bandit Captured

AFTER being reported captured, and slain while escaping, by soldiers of General Villa, the bandit Castillo, who is charged with being responsible for the Cumbre tunnel tragedy, fell into the hands of American negro cavalrymen on United States territory, February 17, still very much alive. The Mexican rebel general is reported to have at once requested extradition of the bandit for execution. He was taken to El Paso, however, and now constitutes this government's newest international problem, as Washington seems undecided as to the best course to pursue, for extraditing Castillo might be construed as recognizing the Constitutionalists, whereas retaining him a prisoner would save him from trial and punishment, as he cannot be tried on American soil for alleged crimes in Mexico. The easiest way out appears to be to compel him to escape to Mexican soil. No striking developments in the war in Mexico were reported during the week. Advance rebel forces about Torreon were said to have been driven back by Federal troops, and other Federal bodies were moving to destroy rebel communication with Juarez. It was also stated that Huerta was preparing to issue a decree imposing a tax on real estate which would produce around $50,000,000. On February 20 news was received by our State Department of the execution by Villa at Juarez of a wealthy rancher, W. S. Benton, a British subject, who had personally protested to Villa against depredations on his hacienda. Villa soon after left for Chihuahua City. Grave anxiety prevails lest foreign intervention force drastic steps by the United States Government.

The Southern Revolutions

THE provisional government established by the revolutionists in Peru was recognized by President Wilson on February 12. The deposed president, Billinghurst, with other former officials, was put aboard a Peruvian war vessel and sent to Panama in exile. The country is not yet settled, however. Fighting continues in Haiti also, and marines from the American battleship South Carolina patrol the capital, now in the hands of the rebels, to prevent outrages. Ecuador is in the throes of a revolution, but the destruction of the cable office has prevented definite news' being received.

Among the Liners

LARGELY owing to the intervention of the German emperor, according to news reports, the rate war between the great trans-Atlantic steamship companies is now expected to end amicably in the extension for another five years of the pooling arrangement which was at the basis of the conflict. A conference was arranged in London late in February. The cessation of hostilities was hailed with relief. Prospects are reported good for a prosperous season ahead. During the spring one of the biggest liners yet built will be launched with considerable ceremony. To shorten the voyage across the Atlantic the Cunard Line is reported to intend sending its west bound express liners direct to New York from Liverpool, cutting out the Queenstown call, a change which has been under contemplation for several years. Other lines will doubtless follow this lead, although the omission of Queenstown will be a serious commercial loss to some interests at that port. The big liners cannot enter the harbor in bad weather without serious risks. The White Star liner Celtic collided with the Fabre liner Madonna in the Bay of Naples February 18 and both vessels were badly damaged. The steamship Roma of the latter line struck a ledge in the storm off No Man's Land on the Massachusetts coast February 16, with about five hundred souls aboard. Wireless calls brought help, but the vessel floated clear and proceeded safely to Providence, R. I., badly listed.

The Indian Problem

IMPORTANT tribes of American Indians recently sent famous chiefs to represent them at a notable campfire in Philadelphia, held in the interest of the "vanishing race." Most of the figures in the picture above are educated Indians, including an Arapahoe, a Choctaw, a Menominee, Seneca, Winnebago, Blackfoot and an Assiniboine. Considerable investigation of the conditions prevailing in the Indian reservations has been made of late, and some interesting books published dealing with the Indian as a problem. The Christian missionary forces are very active in their work amongst the various tribes; and questions of education, land, liquor traffic, and others in connection with the government's care of its Indian wards are live issues to-day. The Indian betterment problem in Alaska is being worked out largely by missionaries who are chiefly confronted by intemperance.

Government Railway in Alaska

BY VOTE of 230 to 87, the House of Representatives on February 18 passed the bill which, if signed by the President, will provide the first test in this country of government ownership of a public utility, by appropriating $35,000,000 for the construction of a thousand-mile railroad in Alaska to connect the interior with the coast, thus opening up tremendous resources. This great engineering work by the government will afford employment for thousands of men. The bill as passed by the House provides that the cost shall be redeemed from Alaskan commerce and that the road may be operated by the government or leased to private management.

Keeping Up the Race Issue

THE press continues to reflect a disposition in some sections to reopen on a broad scale the whole question of the negro's place in our body politic. THE CHRISTIAN HERALD noted last week action in Congress adverse to the mandatory recognition of Southern negro colleges in the distribution of an agricultural fund. On February 16 news was published of the mobbing of an Illinois Central train in Mississippi by masked men, armed, who seized two negroes suspected of murder and on their way to trial, and hanged one and turned the other loose. February 19 the press reported the nomination by the President of Robert H. Terrell, a negro, to succeed himself as municipal court judge in the District of Columbia; this contemplated action had been vigorously opposed by some Southern senators.

AFTER JAPAN'S VOLCANIC DISASTER

REFUGEES ESCAPING TO KAGOSHIMA

SAKURAJIMA IN ACTION

Photos copyrighted by International News Service

DETAILS of the volcanic disaster in southern Japan have been forwarded by the Tokyo correspondent of the Associated Press. The first signs of the recent earthquake appeared while a Japanese audience in Tokyo were seeing, for the first time, a moving picture film on the "Last Days of Pompeii." Little did they realize that the menace they saw pictured would soon threaten their own empire, for when the subterranean fire burst forth on Sakurajima, it rivaled the historic demonstrations of Vesuvius. The correspondent's report states:

"The 22,000 inhabitants of Sakurajima fled wildly in all directions, in a pitiful quest for food and shelter. Shrieks of terror filled the air from one end of the island to the other. Horses neighed and snorted in fright, and all manner of domestic cattle bellowed to be let loose. Some freed themselves and began a wild stampede over their human companions.

"Many old men refused to try to save themselves, and had literally to be dragged along by the younger. Women and children were sent off first, the women carrying their infants slung across their backs, their hands filled with portable household goods. Some shielded themselves with mattresses; others wore metal and earthen pots for helmets. It was a wild hugger-mugger, a pell-mell rush; a flight of indescribable panic and confusion.

"For all that the fearful catastrophe was so overwhelming in its sudden descent, there had been preliminary warnings. Two months before, a traveler reclining leisurely on the summit of the long mountain ridge of Yoshinogahara, which plunges abruptly down into the water of Kagoshima Gulf, was surprised to see smoke drifting from new gullies in the sides of the open peaks of Mitake on Sakurajima.

"It was a thick, black smoke, but from Kagoshima would scarcely be noticed, if at all, except as a fringe of haze. The traveler returned to Kagoshima and told a friend what he had seen. 'We discussed, rather flippantly, perhaps,' he said afterward, 'what would be likely to happen if Sakurajima were actually to go off. Now, I know a good deal more of that than I ever wished to learn.'

"The next warning came Sunday, January 11, in the form of severe earthquakes, accompanied by resonant deep canonading from the heights of Sakurajima. With increasing violence came shock after shock. Houses toppled, brick walls crumbled, and from far beneath, seemingly as from some vast cave of echoes, rose a horrible sound of grinding and roaring, up through the quaking crust of the earth.

"By Monday morning great showers of ashes rained on the panic-stricken population. The ashes became glowing cinders and the cinders flaming rocks. Sparkling lava, gushing from the mouths of the several craters, leaped down from cliff to cliff and ledge to ledge."

The devastation was widespread. Volcanoes, long extinct, leaped into flame, and the cascades of lava and ashes buried houses and villages. Red-hot cinders blew from place to place, and buildings caught fire and collapsed.

As yet the loss of life can only be guessed at. Mercifully, it is thought to be less than five hundred. A number of the people fled to the westward and were spared, while crowds were sent away by boat or in box cars. A little band of brave American missionaries escaped by walking twenty miles in the blackness of night. An official estimate of the damage done gives 50,000 destitute persons, twelve bridges destroyed, thousands of stone fences strewed about, and more than 12,000 houses either destroyed or so badly damaged that they must be rebuilt. This physical damage is for Kagoshima alone. On the island, the destruction was entire. Sakurajima is a waste of pumice and lava, naked and desolate.

magazines—illustrate folks' stories."

"But, my—my dear, how can you? That is, I didn't know you could—draw," faltered Mrs. Gray.

Her daughter laughed and made a wry face.

"Well, I can't, so very much—yet, perhaps. But I've got talent—the teacher said I had talent; and I'm going to work so hard! Of course it'll be mostly practice and study at first, but I'm young, and I'm going to begin right away. That's why I hurried home to-day. You see the others'll get there—Boston, I mean—next Monday, and I don't want to be too much behind them, and there's such a lot of things I've just got to do before I go."

"Go! Why, Beth, you've just come!"

"Oh, but I'm not going yet, mother dear. I can't, anyway. You'll have me a whole week!"

"A week!"

So dismayed was the cry that Beth, though she knew nothing of that vision of "permanency" that her words had shattered, must have dimly realized something.

"But, mother dear," she frowned impatiently, "surely you knew I'd be going sometime!"

Mrs. Gray shook her head.

"I thought you'd come home to live," she faltered.

"Here? Oh, mother, you never could think I'd live here—in Conorsville!"

Across the table Jonas Gray stirred suddenly.

"My dear, your mother and I thought our daughter had come home to live," he said, with grave emphasis.

"But, dearies, think—listen!" sighed the girl, despairingly. "What could I do in a place like this?"

"Do? Oh, there's plenty to do," quavered Mrs. Gray, leaning forward eagerly. "There's all the care of the house and the planning, besides the outside work—the church, you know, and—" But Beth had again thrown up both her hands in laughing, protesting horror.

"Mother, I should die! Imagine my trying to run mothers' societies and missionary teas! And you know how I abhor every last petty detail of housekeeping. It isn't as if you needed me. Your maids are treasures. You've said so yourself."

"But to go away—so far," demurred Mrs. Gray, faintly.

"Oh, Boston isn't far, mother dear. And we've made such splendid plans! There are four of us going to live together with one of the girls' mother for chaperon and housekeeper. My allowance will more than cover my share of the expenses—till I earn enough myself, you know. They've got the dearest little apartment all picked out. You see, we're in such a hurry we're going to begin right away, without waiting till fall."

"But, Beth—I mean, Elizabeth—I—I don't want you to," faltered Mary Gray.

"No, child; we—we can't have it." Jonas Gray's voice shook as he spoke.

Once again the girl gave a despairing sigh.

"Mother dear, father, why do you make it so hard for me? Don't you want to be happy?" she cried. "Why, I should feel like a bird in a cage here. I want to be out in the world where I can breathe. I want to amount to something. I want to be somebody. Here I am, twenty-four years old. If I'm ever going to begin, now's the time. So please don't say any more, unless you want to make me miserable!"

And they said no more—at least, they said very little more. "Perfectly miserable" was not what they wanted to make their daughter Beth—Elizabeth. Far rather would they be perfectly miserable themselves, if it came to that. So, very bravely, they turned their attention then to making sure that the girl friends, the mother, the Boston apartment, and the plans for living were as desirable as possible. They even smiled bravely, too, when all too soon the time came to say good-by to Beth—Elizabeth. And if, afterward, well within the house, they cried more than a little in each other's arms, Beth—Elizabeth—of course, did not know.

By the next day the stately old mansion had assumed its wonted aspect. There were no wide-flung doors, and few up-flung windows. Shades were closely drawn, and flitting maids were nowhere to be seen. Even the grizzled old gardener walked straight by an untidy bit of paper on the lawn, with only a listless glance of unconcern.

The summer sped and autumn came. At Thanksgiving the daughter of the house flew home for a few breezy days, and again at Christmas she set the quiet old rooms to ringing with gay laughter and song. On both occasions she brought young friends with her, so there was little opportunity for intimate family talks. If Jonas Gray's eyes were wistful, and Mary Gray's eyes blurred with tears at times, nobody, apparently, noticed it—certainly not the daughter of the house.

The winter passed, and spring came; and it was on a spring day that Elizabeth, in her Boston apartment, received a call from Mrs. Turner, an old friend of the family.

"I've just been visiting in Conorsville, and I called on your father and mother. They gave me your address," she explained, as Elizabeth ushered her into the tiny living-room. "So now I thought I'd call and see how you were getting along," she finished, with a rather searching glance into the girl's bright face.

"Beautifully! You must see the apartment—it's a dear," smiled Elizabeth.

"You like it so well here, then?" There was still that gravely questioning look in Mrs. Turner's eyes.

"Oh, immensely!"

"It is pretty, certainly, and very cozy," agreed the visitor, glancing about the room; "but—aren't you even just a little homesick, Beth?"

"Homesick? Not a bit!"

"But, Beth—excuse me—Elizabeth—I believe your mother said you were 'Elizabeth' now."

The girl laughed and made a protesting gesture.

"Not to you, my dear Mrs. Turner. That's really only for my pictures, you know."

"Oh, yes, the pictures! And so you're going to be a famous illustrator, my dear?"

Again the girl laughed, this time a bit ruefully.

"No, I'm afraid not—quite that, Mrs. Turner," she admitted. "Oh, I do a little work now and then for the low-priced magazines; but, you see, I haven't any very great talent, I'm afraid—at least I haven't shown that I have, as yet."

"Oh, so that's it, is it? Then perhaps you aren't going to stay here much longer?" A note of something like hope had crept into Mrs. Turner's voice.

"Oh, I shall stay just the same," returned the girl, quickly. "Why, Mrs. Turner, you don't know how I love it here—the concerts, the plays, the people I meet—people who are doing things worth while, you know. Yes, yes, I shall stay—besides, I'm hoping to grow, you see."

ON AND FOR THE SABBATH*

SUNDAY SCHOOL LESSON BY DR. AND MRS. WILBUR F. CRAFTS

THE profound proverb, "He could not see the forest for the trees," is appropriate, as we take up this lesson, for there is danger of giving so much of the precious half hour of lesson time to a detailed exposition of the Bible story, especially Satan's binding of the sick, that we shall fail to accomplish the great object of the lesson, which is to check the prevalent Sabbath desecration and restore the day to its divine and humane uses. The subject is really the Sabbath-keeping of Jesus, which was not doing nothing, but doing good, of which the lesson story is but one of many illustrations.

The Jews of Christ's day were too strict in their Sabbath observance. They ruled out not only work for gain but works of mercy. With no authority from God to do so, they forbade even the healing of the sick. They made the Sabbath an empty day. Jesus filled it with blessing. Selfish work was to stop only that unselfish work might have full swing. In eight different parts of Palestine and Perea he healed the sick to show that "it is the law to do good on the Sabbath day." When he came back from heaven to Patmos, he told John the beloved to keep the Lord's Day not by doing nothing but by writing seven letters to make seven cities better. (Rev. 1: 11.) The Sabbath is broken by lazy, selfish idleness quite as much as by selfish work and selfish pleasure. He who is in the spirit of Christ on the Lord's Day will rise as early to go in a full day of doing good as if he were to devote the day to money-making. It is an unconscious revelation of a shallow Christian life when a household sleeps so late that they are late to church or Sunday school, and have no time for preparing mind or soul for either service; and when an excessive dinner is followed by a sleepy afternoon, instead of acts of mercy. How much good might be done in these precious Sabbath hours by Christian letter-writing and such conversations as those of Jesus in his Sabbath visits!

There is no need to-day to repeat Christ's remonstrances against too strict and stern an observance of the Sabbath, but rather we need to protest against an observance all too lax. In the United States there are ten millions of minors over four years of age, who attend no Sunday school, and who get no religious training at home or the Sabbath or on any other day. Many of those who do go to one religious service on Sunday spend half or more of the day in ways that are not in harmony with God's law.

These spring days are the very time to build dikes of protection against the summer floods of Sabbath desecration. The two chief fountains of this flood are Sunday ball and Sunday shows, which are but indoor and outdoor theaters. Clean moving pictures are about the best substitute for balloons, and the writer bears, in enlarged finger joints, the marks of his appreciation of baseball as a weekday sport. What are the objections to these amusements coming into our American Sunday?

First, they are both contrary to the fullest statement of the Sabbath law found in the Bible, in Isa. 58: 13, 14, that bids "not to do our own ways or find our own pleasure on the Sabbath." Selfish work and selfish pleasure are alike forbidden, that one day in the week may be set apart for altruism, for unselfish service.

Second, these Sunday games and shows are un-American. Rome fell when the cry of a pleasure-loving people was "Bread and games." We have in the other six days of the week at least six times as many shows and games as our fathers in the best days of Americanism, when baseball was played only once a week, and shows were, in most places, even less frequent. Now, when there are games and shows every day, there is no excuse for the amusement venders crowding their games for gain into the nation's day of rest and worship. We need rest from the excitement of "blood and thunder" shows as much as from the racket of factories, and money-making ball players and film manifestations have no more right to keep up their work for gain seven days in the week than other trades.

Third, Sunday games and Sunday shows are usually unlawful. In a few States the legislature has permitted games and shows; but usually both are forbidden because lawmakers see that in Europe permission for Sunday pleasures has always brought in Sunday work. That is why John Burns, the labor leader of Great Britain, was one of the successful leaders of the fight in London against the effort to publish Sunday papers. If editors and printers and their carriers and salesmen were allowed to work seven days in the week, all other workers would jeopardize their rest day. So it has been the rule in English-speaking countries (and only in these is Sunday rest general) to forbid amusements even though there is no admittance fee. We are required, therefore, by good citizenship to obey these Sunday laws, even though we have not thought enough about them to understand the reasons back of the law. The law-breaker is not a good citizen or a true patriot. We should obey the laws that protect our neighbor's right to rest no less than those that protect his house against those who would steal lesser treasures.

It is a very serious matter to have so many future citizens drawn away from Sunday schools that would train them for good citizenship to schools of lawlessness in ball parks and moving picture shows. Boys may well learn from Sunday ball games and Sunday picture shows as from anything else the significance of law and the duty of subordinating our own pleasures for the general welfare. If every one is to do whatever he pleases when and where he pleases then he should go away and live alone where the rights of others will not have to be considered. Religion, patriotism and law, all require us all to stand for a quiet Sabbath under the generous motto: Rest and let rest on the Rest Day.

This, our fourth proposition, is proved by a great many eminent witnesses. Said Blackstone: "Keeping one day in seven as holy, a time of relaxation and refreshment, as well as for public worship, is of admirable service to the state, considered merely as a civil institution. It humanizes, by the help of conversation and society, the manners of the lower classes, which would otherwise degenerate into a sordid ferocity and savage selfishness of spirit."

In one city the pastors kindly told the ball-players of their interest in their game, appealed to their honor to obey State law and God's law, and said: "If you will play only Saturday, we will try to induce your employers to give you a half holiday, and will attend your game and urge others to attend." There were no more Sunday games. Pastors in one place arranged for a union service in a tent. After the secretary had shown that Sunday sport sowed the seeds of criminal life and threatened to undermine civil liberty, most of the audience expressed by rising the wish that there be no more Sunday games. There were none. In another town the members of three young people's societies agreed to stay away from the Sunday game and urge their acquaintances to do so. In two months the game stopped because so few came. A pastor and the secretary called on the man, a church member, who owned the playground, and showed him the law forbidding sports on Sunday. He said: "I did not like the Sunday game, but did not know it was unlawful. I will notify the players to-morrow that they cannot play there Sunday." A pastor having studied our statement of the duties of sheriffs and other officers, hearing that a Sunday game was announced, talked over the matter with the sheriff by telephone. He prevented the game. In another place three pastors called on a sheriff and showed him the law, and he notified the leader that the game must not be played Sunday. These are but samples of many incidents. One pastor tried in vain to influence a sheriff who loved Sunday games, till he said: "If there is a ball game next Sunday, you will be arrested Monday." There was none.

Sunday ball games have been held to be illegal under statutes forbidding "unlawful assemblage" and "breach of peace," also under statutes forbidding "sporting"; and in case of paid players they can be proceeded against under laws forbidding any one to follow his ordinary vocation on Sunday. Dr. Edward Everett Hale, whom no one will accuse of illiberal views, says of this matter in addressing the young men of Boston regarding public sports on Sunday: "Those who indulge in them say far more distinctly than any words or voices could say that so far as they are concerned they mean that the next generation shall have no Sunday."

Does some one ask, "Should the state forbid sins against God?" Rev. J. B. Davison, the faithful leader of Sabbath defense in Wisconsin, answers: "Yes, when they are also crimes against man. The state must protect the citizen and itself. But what is most vital to the citizen's prosperity and happiness? And what to the nation's life? The plain answer to both questions is, 'True, strong moral character.' Sunday sport is a dagger that strikes a fatal blow at this character, the very heart of the citizen and the nation."

* THE INTERNATIONAL SUNDAY SCHOOL LESSONS for Sunday, March 15, 1914. The Lawful Use of the Sabbath. Luke 13: 10-17; 14: 1-6. GOLDEN TEXT: "The Sabbath was made for man, and not man for the Sabbath." Mark 2: 27.

Unemployed in New York

ON FRIDAY, February 6, at the solicitation of the mayor of New York, a delegation of the unemployed and their representatives waited upon him to discuss ways and means whereby the present condition of things might be relieved. The Bowery Mission was represented by its superintendent, Rev. Dr. Hallimond, and several of the workers, as also by some fifty members of the Brotherhood. Other societies were also represented. The mayor gave considerable time in listening, after which those having suggestions to offer were organized into a committee, under the presidency of the Rev. Dr. Lyman-Wheaton, Benjamin Clark Marsh, Esq., executive secretary of the New York Congestion Committee, acting as secretary for the occasion. A list of suggestions was reduced to writing, and submitted to the mayor. Among them were these:

That a piece of unused land, several acres in extent, in Richmond, S. I., be turned over to the Bowery Mission to be cultivated, thus providing work for a number of men, the produce to be sold at reduced prices to the poor of the city; that a public free employment bureau be established; that appropriations be made to send men now here to other localities where they could get employment; that the city should give employment in making sidewalks and roads in the outlying sections of the city.

On February 7 the mayor wrote to Dr. Lyman-Wheaton, thanking him for the suggestions offered, and assuring him "the matter is being very carefully looked into, since he [the mayor] realizes fully the very great importance of doing everything possible to alleviate the unfortunate conditions."

Delicious!

That is the likely comment on pie made with Crisco.

First of all, pie properly made with Crisco looks tempting. The crust has a rich, flaky appearance that puts a new edge on the appetite no matter what dainties have gone before.

Then, it is so tender that it breaks at a touch of the fork. Even the under crust which becomes tough so easily, cuts as readily as the upper crust. Finally, it tastes rich, yet delicate; fresh, palatable, delicious in every sense.

CRISCO
For Frying - For Shortening For Cake Making

Here is the recipe for plain pastry that we have found best:

1⅓ cupfuls flour
½ cupful Crisco
½ teaspoonful salt
Cold water
(Level measurements)

Sift flour and salt twice and cut Crisco into flour with knife until finely divided. Finger tips may be used to finish blending materials. Add gradually sufficient water to make stiff paste. Water should be added sparingly and mixed with knife through dry ingredients. Form lightly and quickly with hand into dough; roll out on slightly floured board, about one-quarter inch thick. Use light motion in handling rolling-pin, and roll from center outward. Sufficient for one pie.

New Cook Book and "Calendar of Dinners"

Marion Harris Neil, Cookery Editor, Ladies' Home Journal, has prepared the recipes for this attractive new book. The paper covered edition containing 250 recipes only is free. The cloth edition, containing 615 recipes and the "Calendar of Dinners" will be sent for five 2-cent stamps. The "Calendar" gives a seasonable and attractive menu for each day in the year. For either book, address Dept. S-3, The Procter & Gamble Co., Cincinnati, Ohio.

Make Your Kitchen Bright and Cheery

"Do you mean you did it all yourself?"

"Why, yes; the day you went away, I sent Sarah to the store for some Acme Quality White Enamel and a can each of Acme Quality Varno-Lac and Linoleum Varnish. Sarah did the floor, but I did all the rest—window sills, casings, baseboards, refrigerator."

Would you like to make your kitchen beautifully white, cheery and sanitary?

Questions and Answers

Nancy, Moore's Hill, Ind. 1. If one has to do with others and is trying to help them for good, but is not appreciated at all, must one keep on trying indefinitely? 2. Is the expression "seventy times seven" in Scripture used figuratively?

1. Those who are of the household of faith are admonished "not to be weary in well-doing; for in due season we shall reap if we faint not." And this applies even to the small details of everyday life. There are many things that are discouraging, viewed through the lenses of the world's estimation, and the lack of appreciation for kindness or of gratitude for help rendered to others is not the least of these. Yet this need not trouble one who is doing good not for praise or reward and not even for thanks, but for the sake of Him who "went about doing good." A truly noble spirit, inspired by the love of Christ and humanity, will not seek any reward beyond the approval of a good conscience and the knowledge that he is serving the divine will. The real merit in a good act largely lies in the fact that we do it from a spirit of brotherly love, without thought of recompense, and all the better if it can be done quietly and unostentatiously, even so secretly that the left hand does not know what the right hand doeth. (Matt. 6: 3, 4.) God's secret service is the richest in spiritual rewards. 2. "Seventy times seven" is a figure of speech, and is intended to convey the great Gospel principle that you are to grant forgiveness so long as it is needed and sought and never to come to the point of refusing it, when it is sincerely asked. "Seven" is the number that is symbolic of perfection or completeness, and it is frequently used in this sense in Scripture.

C. P. M., Detroit, Mich. I would suggest—not with any idea of caviling, but with the hope of influencing and arousing both clergy and laity—that THE CHRISTIAN HERALD should put the question before its readers: "When did your pastor preach a sermon which you really believe would have resulted in your conversion, were you not already saved?" The question is a very personal one, which we print, not with a view to elicit answers, but that it may be quietly pondered and answered by each in his own heart. If the suggestion should lead to the "quickening" of the churches, it will have served its purpose.

E. A. S., a reader in Dayton, Mich., sends a clipping from the South Bend, Ind., Tribune of July 23, 1913, relative to the "rare phenomenon" there visible in the moon, being the figure of the "Madonna and Child." The publication seems to have hoaxed many credulous persons, who, being highly imaginative, fancied they themselves saw the "phenomenon" as described in the journal mentioned. Professor Samuel Phelps Leland of Daytona, Fla., the well-known astronomer, to whom we submitted the matter, writes: "Science has no record of such a phenomenon. It is psychological or fanciful and a relic of a dead astrology. The statement in the clipping enclosed, that 'the phenomenon is visible only once in fifty years,' and 'that a British astronomer discovered it fifty years ago,' is without foundation. No such a thing is on record. The surface of the moon is mountainous, and has corresponding caves and vast hollows filled with dark shadows. A person of lively fancy can give to these dark abysses and luminous mountain peaks wonderful forms. Many foolish delusions have had their origin here among uneducated people. They sometimes see armies of men in conflict on the lunar battlefields, and vast explosions and burning cities. These same persons, too, can see corresponding visions in the changing clouds of our own sky."

J. A., San Antonio, Texas. The practice of wearing crape as mourning comes down from the earliest time, when it was considered pollution to touch a dead body. In ancient Greece and Rome, priests and magistrates might not even look upon a corpse, for they were thereby rendered unclean and incapable of fulfilling their official duties until after purification. The mourners at home who had to touch the body laid aside their colored garments, jewelry and ornaments and donned black clothes or crape (lugubria) for a certain period. Among many savages white is worn to show grief for the deceased. Australian aborigines pipe-clay themselves on the death of one of the tribe.

A. F., Wichita, Kan. Can you tell our Bible class about the Pharaohs of Joseph's time?

Joseph, it is reckoned by authorities, was born about 1913 B.C. He was sold into Egypt about 1895 B.C. He died 1802 B.C. As to the identification of the Pharaohs of his time there are various opinions. Wilkinson identifies the first Pharaoh of Joseph's experience with Osvitesen I, while Bunsen holds that the monarch was Osirtesen III, and Osborn claims he was Apophis. McClintock and Strong believe that the Pharaoh of the period of Joseph's imprisonment was one of the eighth (Memphitic) dynasty whose names are all unrecorded, but who were contemporary with the twelfth (Diospolitic) dynasty and the fifteenth (Shepherd) dynasty. The time of Joseph's deliverance from prison, according to the chronology adopted by many scholars, falls under the reign of Aphobis, one of the Shepherd kings (the fourth ruler of the fifteenth dynasty); but it is believed that by this time their power was declining and that they were then in possession of only a part of Egypt, the rest being governed by two other monarchs of different dynasties.

L. M., Kankakee, Ill. Japan is a fairly good agricultural country, although, being mountainous, only about one-sixth of its area is under cultivation. Its chief products are rice, wheat and other cereals, potato, tea-plant and tobacco; in minerals it produces gold, silver, copper, iron, sulphur, coal, agate, cornelian and rock crystal. Its vegetable products include camphor-tree, vegetable wax tree, lacquer-tree and paper mulberry. The principal industries are factories for silk, cotton and cotton yarn, paper, glass, matches, porcelain, japanned ware and bronzes. The chief exports are rice, silk, tea, fish, copper, matches, coal, camphor, straw-plaits, marine products, cotton yarn and mats for floors.

D. M., New York City, writes: "In a recent issue of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD, in regard to the prefix of certain letters denoting the nationality of a name, you stated that O, Mul and Mc denoted Irish, and Mac was the prefix of Scotch. In the eastern highlands of Scotland, there are clans with the prefix of Mac, but in the west highlands, you find clans with the Mc, like the McLeods of the west, and the McLaurins and others of the smaller clans or families. On the other hand you will find some Irish clans with the prefix of Mac, for instance, the MacRaas and the MacMahons (a member of which clan was Marshal MacMahon of France, who afterward became president of that country). In the west lowlands of Scotland, where I lived, I very seldom met any Mac's, but knew plenty of Mc's, like McGhie, McIntosh, McLarnon, McQueen and many others. These people are descendants of highlanders who have settled in the lowlands. In Protestant north of Ireland you meet nearly all Scotch names, this section of Ireland being only about fifteen miles from the west coast of Scotland. These people, known as Scotch-Irish, have given to the United States many noted men. McKinley, Jackson and several other of our Presidents came from these people. They are the mainstays of the Protestant Scotch Church in this part of Ireland."

Miscellaneous

F. A. D., Newburg, N. Y. Three years in mourning is customary for the loss of a husband.

C. S., Portland, Ind. The passage you mention can be found in II Sam. 23: 4. It is a very beautiful illustration from nature.

E. B. S., Dayton, Ohio. The Ballad of Judas Iscariot is a long poem by Robert Buchanan. It is included in the Home Book of Verse, published by Henry Holt & Co., New York.

P. V., Madison, Wis. There are 1,226,000 acres under tobacco cultivation in the United States. The yield is 965,000,000 pounds, value $105,000,000. Kentucky is the largest producing State.

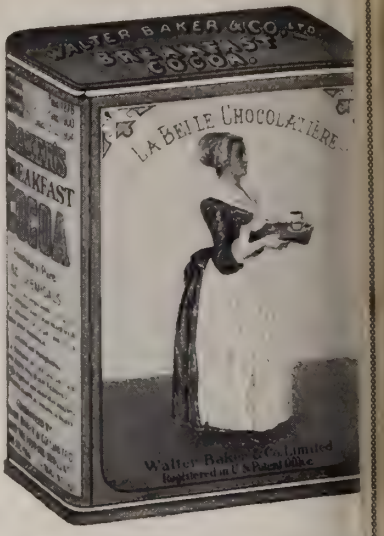
S. R., Xenia, O. To clean a painted wall put a little aqua ammonia in moderately warm water, dampen a flannel with it and gently wipe over the stained surface. No scrubbing is necessary.

B. M., Yankton, S. D. The three tallest structures in the world are the Eiffel Tower, Paris, 984 feet; the Woolworth Building, New York, 750 feet, and the Metropolitan Tower, New York, 700 feet.

Subscriber, Elkhart, Ind. This is the age of hygienic science, and there are many experts on the food question. You will find useful hints in many publications, but the individual case calls for individual treatment. Consult a good physician.

R. M. S., Fall River, Mass. The American rule of the road in regard to passing vehicles is to keep to the right in the traveled way, except in passing another vehicle going the same way, in which case the driver should pass it on the left. In England, the rule is the reverse.

R. B., Spokane, Wash. The king of England receives a much larger salary than the President of the United States. The king and queen enjoy an annuity of $2,350,000 from the British people, besides which the king has also a revenue from the Duchy of Lancaster amounting to $500,000 annually.



BAKER'S BREAKFAST COCOA

Has the delicious natural flavor of which one never tires. Artificially flavored cocoas soon pall upon the palate.

"In that word ('flavor') lies the key to the whole food problem" says Henry T. Finck in "Food and Flavor"; for without an attractive flavor there is no enjoyment of food.

Mrs. Turner relaxed visibly in her chair. For a moment she said nothing. When she did speak it was of something far removed from Elizabeth and her work. Later, a little abruptly, she said:

"Let me see, I told you, didn't I? I saw your father and mother when I was in Conorsville."

"Yes. How were they?"

Mrs. Turner parried this question with another.

"Have you seen them lately?" she asked.

"Well, not since Christmas."

"And you noticed nothing—then?"

The girl turned with startled eyes.

"Noticed nothing! Why, Mrs. Turner, what do you mean?"

"I mean—that they've changed such a lot, seems to me. They're both so quiet, so—so sober, and—" But Elizabeth's ringing laugh brought her words to a pause.

"Sober! Quiet! Of course they are, my dear woman! How could they be anything else in that gone-to-sleep little town? Dear me, you startled me. I thought you meant they were sick."

"They don't look well, Beth—to me, when I remember how brisk and cheery they used to be. And—did you ever think how they must miss you, dear?"

Elizabeth stirred restlessly.

"Why, of course they miss me, Mrs. Turner, I suppose; but still surely they couldn't expect me to be contented in Conorsville! As if I could live and grow and develop into anything there!"

"It happened to be just twilight when I called," murmured Mrs. Turner, musingly, as if she had not heard her young hostess's remarks; "and they were sitting before the fireplace, just they two—alone. They weren't doing anything. The newspaper lay wide open on the floor by your mother's chair. She picked it up hurriedly when I came in, and apologized for its untidy position, saying she had just been trying to read to your father, but that she was afraid she had made poor work of it—that he thought, anyway, that no one could read to him like Beth."

Once more Elizabeth Gray stirred restlessly. This time a tiny frown drew her brows together.

"Yes, yes, I know. Father's always taking like that. But it's really all nonsense. Mother reads just as well as I do—better, for that matter. Mrs. Turner, why is it that people of that age never seem to have any interests? Now look at mother. She runs the house, of course, but it would run itself now, with Nora there. But mother's given up her church work and the club work, and all she does is to knit a little, read and write a little, and chat with some neighbor. Then she just sits and—and does nothing. And it's the same with father, since he's given up his business, only he doesn't even have the knitting and reading, on account of his eyes. Now if they only had something to be interested in they wouldn't—er—mope, so."

"Oh, but I assure you, my dear, they do have something in which they are very much interested—their daughter Beth. If you don't believe it you should hear them talk of her. Indeed, I heard nothing but Beth all the time I was there. Even the newspaper, it seems, had to do with Beth, for your mother explained that they'd just been reading an article about how parents of unusually talented children must expect to make unusual sacrifices."

Mrs. Turner paused and cleared her throat. She had more to say, but before she could begin to say it, the door was flung open and a group of laughing girls entered from the hall.

Mrs. Turner plainly looked disappointed; but not so Elizabeth. Elizabeth, indeed, looked almost relieved as she hurriedly rose to present her friends.

Elizabeth did not sleep well that night. Always in her thoughts and in her dreams was a familiar fireplace before which sat a little old woman and a little old man, with a newspaper on the floor between them. In vain Elizabeth fumed and fretted and argued, calling herself silly and notional. In vain did she demand of herself if she did not have a right to keep on with her beloved work—to live her own life in her own way. Still before her eyes, waking or sleeping, was the fireplace, the little old man, the little old woman, and the newspaper.

Whether, in time, this alone would have led to something, or nothing, can not be known, for, as it chanced, a story to be illustrated, which came in two days after Mrs. Turner's call, added a new element to the situation.

To Elizabeth the story seemed indeed real life—her own life. There were the old home in the quiet country town, the eager, ambitious daughter of the house, the father and mother left lonely and unhappy when the daughter betook herself and her "career" to a distant city. To be sure, the daughter in the story was a musician, and her talent was great and unquestioned. Furthermore, she went to Paris, not Boston; and there were many other minor details of the story quite dissimilar to Elizabeth's own case.

But Elizabeth was not seeing minor details. She was seeing, for the first time in her life, something of what parenthood meant. On and on she read, spurred by an irresistible force quite beyond her control. And as she read, always it was of herself.

First there was the tiny baby girl, the mother's joy, the father's pride. Then there were the baby older grown, the schoolgirl, the college girl. There were the joyous homecomings when father and mother flew about with light step and shining eyes. There were the long weeks of loneliness when letters were the only milestones along a weary way. There were the hopes, the plans, the prayers. And there was always in the dear future the star of promise—the final day of homecoming

NO GUSHER

But Tells Facts About Postum.

A Wis. lady found an easy and safe way out of the ills caused by coffee. She says:

"We quit coffee and have used Postum for the past eight years, and drink it nearly every meal. We never tire of it.

"For several years previous to quitting coffee I could scarcely eat anything on account of dyspepsia, bloating after meals, palpitation, sick headache—in fact was in such misery and distress I tried living on hot water and toast.

"Hearing of Postum I began drinking it and found it delicious. My ailments disappeared, and now I can eat anything I want without trouble.

"My parents and husband had about the same experience. Mother would often suffer after eating, while yet drinking coffee. My husband was a great coffee drinker and suffered from indigestion and headache.

"After he stopped coffee and began Postum both ailments left him. He will not drink anything else now and we have it three times a day. I could write more but am no gusher — only state plain facts."

Name given by Postum Co., Battle Creek, Mich. Write for a copy of the famous little book, "The Road to Wellville."

Postum now comes in two forms:

Regular Postum—must be well boiled. 15c and 25c packages.

Instant Postum—is a soluble powder. A teaspoonful dissolves quickly in a cup of hot water and, with cream and sugar, makes a delicious beverage instantly. 30c and 50c tins.

The cost per cup of both kinds is about the same.

WHEN BETH CAME HOME

when college should be over. And then one day it came—that home-coming—and college was over; but—

Elizabeth did not read much more. She tossed the manuscript aside, sprang to her feet and began feverishly to walk up and down the narrow room. Once again before her eyes was the fireplace, the lonely old man, the lonely old woman, and the newspaper idle on the floor.

And Mrs. Turner had said—

With a little cry Elizabeth jerked herself into her hat and coat and went out for a walk: Elizabeth always went for a walk, if she could, when something was on her mind.

Not quite twenty-four hours later, in Conorsville, Mr. and Mrs. Gray rose from their supper-table and trailed listlessly into the living-room.

"Shall I read to you, dearie?" asked the wife. "It's light enough yet. if I sit by the window."

The old man shook his head.

"No, I guess not, Mary. I don't seem to feel like reading to-night."

There was a brief pause; then, with visible hesitation, Mrs. Gray said:

"There wasn't any letter, of course. You'd have given it to me if there had been."

"No, there wasn't any letter."

Another pause. Listlessly the man walked to his own particular chair, drew it before the fireplace and sat down. Covertly the woman watched him. Her own eyes were troubled; but in a moment she smiled bravely:

"Never mind, dearie, we won't fret if there wasn't. Like enough she was too busy to write; and you know we said we'd remember that parents of unusual children have to—"

With a sudden ejaculation the old man brought his fist down hard on the arm of his chair.

"Well, who said I wanted to be the parents of unusual children?" he stormed hotly.

Mrs. Gray fell back in dismay.

"Why, Jonas!" she gasped.

The man flushed miserably and relaxed into his former listlessness.

"There, there, of course, of course! I didn't mean it," he muttered. "It's only—" He stopped short. A quick step had sounded from the veranda outside. The next minute the living-room door was thrown wide open by the hand of a teary-eyed but smiling young woman.

At the blank silence and looks of utter stupefaction that greeted her, the young woman laughed a bit unsteadily.

"Well, well," she cried, "is this the way you welcome me? Didn't you want to see me?"

"Want to see you!" the old man and the old woman struggled to their feet. "Is it really you, Beth—Elizabeth?"

"It surely is," declared that young woman, with a blithesomeness that was intended to hide the shake in her voice. "You see, I thought I'd come home," she nodded above their heads. They were both in her strong young arms by this time.

Mrs. Gray looked up quickly.

"You don't mean—to—stay?" she faltered.

"Surely, of course. That's what I meant."

"But your—your picture-drawing?" stammered Jonas Gray.

"I've given it up, father." Beth hoped that her voice did not show quite what that giving-up meant to her."

"Oh, but, Beth," interposed Mary Gray, hurriedly, "we couldn't let you do that, of course, just for us. Besides, we think your pictures are lovely—father and I do; and we shan't let you give up making them. But maybe—maybe—Beth, couldn't you do them at home—maybe?" she finished, her voice aquiver with hope and excitement.

Beth blinked her eyes tearfully and shook her head, stammering: "No, no, never mind the work, dear. I've given it up—really."

And so, as the days passed, Beth tried to think she had given it up—that she must give it up. She could not do good work there at home, of course, in such surroundings, she told herself, thinking of her loved Boston "atmosphere," with all it meant in incentive and inspiration. While as for going back there now, and leaving her father and mother—that, too, she could not do.

Very bravely, therefore, Beth threw herself into the daily routine that made her mother's life, and if, sometimes, her fingers tingled to pick up her pencils and crayons, no one but herself knew; and if, at other times, her pillow was wet with tears for dear hopes and ambitions unfulfilled, again no one but herself knew. Then one day came a letter forwarded from Boston.

As she read it Beth gave an exclamation of dismay.

"Why, dearie, what is it?" questioned her mother anxiously.

"It's a story to be illustrated. I forgot it," sighed Beth. "It came the day before I left for—here. I tossed it into the desk, and never thought of it again, and now the editor is asking about it. I shall have to tell the girls to send it back, of course; but it makes it rather bad—after all this time, and nothing done. It's been almost a month, you know."

Mrs. Gray lifted her head alertly.

"But why don't you do it—now, dear?" she asked eagerly. "Let them send it here—do let them send it here. dear—for you to do now!"

"Here? Oh, no, I couldn't," began Beth. Then she stopped suddenly and drew in her breath with a little choking catch.

"Nonsense! Of course you could," quavered Mrs. Gray decidedly.

"But—" Again Beth stopped short, her finger to her lips. "I've given up—that is, I thought I couldn't here. Of course if I thought I could—" A dawning eagerness crept into her eyes.

"Do it? I know you can do it!"

"Of course—it is bad—to send it back now—with nothing," faltered Beth, the longing eagerness in her eyes growing and deepening to keep pace with the tingling eagerness in her fingers. "It's a beautiful story, and if only I could draw—"

Once more Beth stopped short. This time her face was gloriously alight. "Mother, I'll do it!" she cried; "and I've got one of my pictures all chosen. If only now I can make them see it as I see it!"

And once again in Beth's eyes was a vision of a little man and a little old woman before the fireplace, with the newspaper on the floor between them.

Beth sent for the story that afternoon. By the same mail she sent a letter of explanation and apology to the editor. For long days then Beth worked over her pictures. There were four of them, but chiefest and dearest was the firelight scene. And as the pictures grew, even Beth herself knew that they were good. What she did not realize, perhaps, was that the magic touch of sentiment and sacrifice was accomplishing what all of Boston's art and atmosphere had failed to effect. Perhaps, vaguely, she did realize it, however, when some time later she read the letter from the magazine's editor. With flushed cheeks and shining eyes she hurried with it then to her mother.

"Mother, listen! I've won—I've won! Do you hear? Mr. Drew says there's real power and talent in those pictures, and that they show a breadth of skill that none of my others ever did!"

"Well, I'm not surprised. I knew you could do it," bridled the little old woman, with proudly lifted head.

Beth laughed tremulously, and dropped herself on the hassock at her mother's feet.

"Mother," she breathed, with luminous eyes, "I believe I can do my work—and do it—here!"

Tomato Tapioca Soup—ever tasted it? It's easy to make, and the best tomato soup you ever tasted

Good cooks know that tapioca improves any soup, but the long soaking required by bulk tapioca is too much trouble. Minute Tapioca requires no soaking. Just add two tablespoonfuls for each quart of soup—15 minutes before removing from the stove.

Minute Tapioca

As a dainty dessert. Minute Tapioca combines with fresh fruit, canned fruit, prunes, nuts, maple syrup, custard cream and many other good things. 15 minutes is all the time needed to make any one of many tempting dishes. For dessert today, please the men folk with

Date Tapioca—Stir frequently for 15 minutes in a double boiler one quart of boiling milk, two large tablespoons of Minute Tapioca and one-half cup of sugar. Add the beaten yolks of three eggs about three minutes before removing from the stove. When partially cool stir in one cup of chopped dates, cover the well-beaten whites of the eggs with one tablespoon sugar added and brown quickly in a hot oven.

ROME IN POLITICS

A CHAPTER in recent history which is of interest to all Americans, as showing the participation in politics of the Catholic Church, is given in the following letter to the Chronicle of Poughkeepsie, N. Y.:

INDIAN RIGHTS ASSOCIATION
995 DREXEL BUILDING,
PHILADELPHIA, December 22, 1913.

To the Editor of The Chronicle, Poughkeepsie, N. Y.:

Father John L. Belford, rector of the Church of the Nativity (Roman Catholic), Brooklyn, in a recent letter to the Daily Eagle of that city (reprinted in the Catholic Standard and Times) denounces certain statements in a sermon preached by Rev. Dr. Carl E. Grammer, in Trinity Church, as "unfair and untrue."

Father Belford states that Dr. Grammer's charge that the Roman Catholic Church has an office at Washington to influence legislation and obtain concessions is false. Yet he admits that there is a bureau and that "the Bureau does watch legislation and it does report the words and the works of those members of Congress who attack the church and the rights of Catholics."

Another point made by Dr. Grammer, to which Father Belford takes exception, is: "Its agent will tell you (to quote his exact words) that Roman Catholics believe in reciprocity, which means, in plain language, that he is there to make political deals and throw the influence of his church in favor of politicians who respond to his appeals." This statement can be tested by the political deal by which the interest on Indian trust and treaty funds was very quietly diverted to the Bureau of Catholic Indian Missions for the support of certain of its schools.

Let us sift the allegation of political activity and allow any unprejudiced person to judge whether Father Belford is justified in the assertion that by such sifting "a cloud of historical lies would melt into thin air and the fair face of the church would appear free from many a blot that lying historians have left on her."

On January 31, 1905, S. M. Brosius, Washington agent of the Indian Rights Association, appeared before a subcommittee of the Senate Indian Committee, in relation to matters under consideration. A full stenographic record of that meeting was published in a government document entitled "Hearing Before the Sub-Committee of the Committee on Indian Affairs of the Senate of the United States, January 28 to February 10, 1905." I quote the statement of Mr. Brosius as given on page 19 of that document:

A statement has been made to me by an honorable senator which will be amplified before the Committee on Indian Affairs, if requested, to the effect that a Mr. Scharf, a representative Catholic, submitted a table of twenty close congressional districts, with the alleged Catholic vote in each, and a written proposal to deliver the necessary votes to carry those districts that might be selected by the Republicans, if the appropriations for Catholic Indian schools to the amount of $200,000 were continued for two years longer. Even threats were made by this Mr. Scharf that the defeat of certain congressmen would be brought about unless opposition to sectarian appropriations was withdrawn.

Hon. Thomas R. Bard, at that time senator from California, thereupon told the committee that he was the senator referred to by Mr. Brosius, and he further stated (p. 20 supra):

I believe, Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the committee, that it is a very dangerous thing to let such a matter go by unnoticed, and I therefore feel that it is my duty to make this statement before this executive session of the committee.

I made a memorandum soon afterwards, so that I refer to that now; I am not trusting my memory at all with reference to it. I have tabulated statements here showing some twenty districts in the United States, and the names of the members representing such districts, the total Catholic population in each district, and the total Catholic vote.

Mr. Scharf called on me and stated that he was authorized by his church authorities to offer a proposition to the Republican leaders in Congress to this effect: That he would guarantee these twenty weak congressional districts to go Republican the next election provided Congress gave to the Roman Catholic schools an appropriation for two years, each of $200,000. These statements which I am referring to were handed to me by Mr. E. L. Scharf at the Hotel Normandie on the evening of March 20, 1902. But let me refer to a written memorandum referring to the matter which I made on the following day. Mr. Scharf at that time delivered to me a letter from Bishop Montgomery, dated March 5, 1902, relating to the appropriations for the Catholic Indian schools. The first tabulated statement was exhibited to me several weeks before by Mr. Scharf. He stated at that time that for a year or more he had been employed to go through the country and get together the statistics therein shown; that he was authorized to propose to the Republicans in Congress that if the appropriation for the Catholic Indian schools shall be continued for two years, the church would guarantee that during that period the congressional districts named would be carried by the Republicans.

He assured me over and over again that the church was able to secure such results. In his interview on the evening of March 20, he again reiterated the statement that the Roman Catholics could always command a sufficient number of Catholic votes to carry any measure or elect any man when they were informed by the authorities of the church that such results would be for the benefit of the church. He further stated that arrangements had already been arrived at by which the re-election of the member of Congress from one of the districts in California would be assured, and that he had, in pursuance of his promises to this gentleman, written to the Roman Catholic clergymen in the various counties comprising that district.

Following the exposure of Professor Scharf's political activity came a prompt "denial" from Cardinal Gibbons, who, under date of February 1, 1905, declared that Professor Scharf is not an agent of the Catholic Church or of the Bureau of Catholic Indian Missions, and has never been employed by the church or by the Catholic Indian Bureau in any way whatsoever.

But the report of the "Director of the Bureau of Catholic Indian Missions for 1903-04" closes with the following paragraph:

"AN ACKNOWLEDGMENT

"The bureau is indebted to Professor E. L. Scharf, of Washington, D. C., for very valuable services which he rendered the cause of the Catholic Indian schools."

Evidently, if Professor Scharf was never "employed" by the Bureau of Catholic Indian Missions, he was no stranger to its officers.

Senator Bard did not look with favor upon the "reciprocity" proposed, and he was defeated in his efforts for re-election.

It seems strange that Father Belford takes exception to Dr. Grammer's statement that "there is a government school in which all the teachers are priests, who wear their sectarian garb during school hours," for that was made possible by President Taft's order, "covering in" to the classified service certain Roman Catholic Indian schools with their ecclesiastical teachers (male or female), and subsequent ruling by which they were allowed to wear their garb. Last September (1913) when I was at the San Xavier Agency, Arizona, I visited one of those "covered in" government Indian schools, and the teachers of the three class-rooms were garbed nuns. In one of the rooms I saw on the blackboard a sentence for the pupils to copy, about "Hail Virgin, Dearest Mary." This was during a regular school session, and that it was a violation of the government's regulations was tacitly acknowledged by the nun, since when I was introduced to her, she promptly seized an eraser and rubbed the sentence from the board.

M. K. SNIFFEN,
Secretary Indian Rights Association.

ANSWERED PRAYERS

"Unto him that is able to do exceeding abundantly above all that we ask or think, according to the power that worketh in us, unto him be glory."—Eph. 3: 20, 21.

THE membership of the Prayer League grows every day. Remember that there are no formalities about enrolling. Just send in your request for prayer, or your acknowledgment of prayer answered. Be sure, when writing, to give your name and address. Also, remember to send only one request or acknowledgment at a time, putting each on a separate sheet of paper (written on only one side) and heading each sheet "Request" or "Acknowledgment," as the case may be. If the prayer answered is one in which you had asked the League to join, state that fact in your acknowledgment.

Remember the noon-hour daily prayer, in which every member of the League is urged to join. Pray that God will answer the requests already made, that he will bless every member of the League and of the CHRISTIAN HERALD Family, also that he will bless the church at home and abroad, our nation and the other nations, and pray for the extension of Christ's kingdom throughout the world.

Prayers Answered

J. L., a subscriber in Nevada, writes: "I wish to acknowledge the answer to a prayer for the speedy recovery of my mother from a serious illness.

E. G. writes from Wilton, Maine: "I have been a subscriber to THE CHRISTIAN HERALD many years, and at the sunset of life find it more than ever a comfort and help. I wish to add my testimony to answered prayers. I have passed my eighty-third milestone, and during my long life God has mercifully answered my prayers many times, and is willing and able to help all who trust in him."

E. J. K., Lancaster, Wis., writes: "During the past year I have been so wondrously delivered from a most wretched condition of nervous prostration, with all its attending evils, that I cannot refrain from acknowledging God's mercy and power. It seemed at one time that I never could be better or be myself again, but through the prayers of my loved ones as well as my own the kind Father has again demonstrated the truth that with him all things are possible. Thanks to his blessed name I am well and happy now." Miss R. M., of New London, Conn., writes: "I want to acknowledge God's goodness to me in answering my prayer, not only in restoring my health when I thought I was beyond help, but in sparing the life of my sister."

Acknowledgments of answers to prayer have also been received from:

Requests for Prayer

A Reader from Dayton sends a printed copy of an appeal sent out by the seventy churches of Dayton, Ohio, for prayers for the success of the revival campaign now going on in that city. These seventy churches are united in a "city-wide effort for the salvation of the people and hence for a better city." The Prayer League will gladly join in this petition.

The following readers also send requests for prayers for revivals and spiritual blessings upon churches or other organizations:

Mrs. J. B. C., of Atlanta, Ga., requests prayer for a sweeping revival in that city; Mrs. G. H. J.; Mrs. L. C. (for a church); Mrs. I. McL.

The Howard Watch

IN higher railroad circles there is a very natural ambition to carry a watch that is not merely Railroad Standard, but a standard for railroad watches.

It is well known that Railroad Officials and the higher grades of Trainmen show a marked preference for the HOWARD Watch.

But there is also among the rank and file a surprising number who have the wholesome ambition to own a HOWARD, and who make it a point to get one, even at the cost of some self-sacrifice.

In America, as nowhere else, the typical railroad president, corporation executive, head of an industry or a business house, is the man who has made his way up from the ranks.

And it is often the man in the ranks, impelled by his self-respect, his professional spirit, and his ambition for the better things of his calling, who saves to get a HOWARD.

A HOWARD Watch is always worth what you pay for it.

The price of each watch is fixed at the factory and a printed ticket attached—from the 17-jewel (double roller) in a Crescent Extra or Boss Extra gold-filled case at $40, to the 23-jewel in 18K gold case at $170—and the EDWARD HOWARD model at $350.

Not every jeweler can sell you a HOWARD Watch. Find the HOWARD jeweler in your town and talk to him. He is a good man to know.

Admiral Sigsbee has written a little book, "The Log of the HOWARD Watch," giving the record of his own HOWARD in the U. S. Navy. You'll enjoy it. Drop us a post card, Dept. W, and we'll send you a copy.

THE KITCHEN AS IT OUGHT TO BE

RANGE, is it not, that one of he most interesting rooms in the hole house should be that hich is most often forgotten en we set about to beautify our me-the kitchen.

Ev y good housekeeper appre- tes hat the enjoyment of our food, d ertainly whatever pleasure may ha in its preparation, depends in ge measure upon a good kitchen. t many women "good" implies re good quality, in point of ip ent and supplies, and cleanli- s ought at the high price of in- sa toil. Beyond this meaning of t n they do not go.

My neighbor's tea kettle, for ex- pl is perfectly "good," indeed the y st of its kind, but, as a kettle ic weighs about three times as ch s a kettle should, and takes far re ime and elbow grease to keep ni and bright than a kettle th it has no place in my kitchen er "good" means efficient as well de ndable quality.

Mo of us, it is feared, look upon kchen as, at best, a necessity. m st have our three meals a day; m st have our kitchens; and the th means an endless round of dy ork—most of it a doing of the he ld thing in the same old way, mo nous and uninteresting! So ere you are, poor, inexperienced le -be, and if you are planning to ar out" by doing a good deal of r vn work you may as well know t th and the worst of the situa- a once!

Ho differently we would regard i portant work-room were we to on the kitchen as great manu- u rs look upon their factories; n the same pride in bringing it to he highest possible point of effi- cy hat such a manufacturer takes is splendidly equipped plant! An en ve canvass recently made has re that the washing machine— e re many good models now on t rket—is the labor-saver for it per cent. of housewives, yet y here we see intelligent women h ve not yet ceased to think of it l kury; who have never carefully e nto the matter or honestly an- ce the question "What would this n me, in my home?"

We till find, occasionally, the man- t er who turns a deaf ear to ad- ce ideas, improved methods, etc., w do not find him very often in he ays, for as a rule one of two g happens; either he suddenly es up to his folly or else he goes o business. A woman engaged in g rious profession of housekeep- b who lags behind the times also, t le, meets with one of two mis- fu s; either she has "a nervous k wn" or else she loses the joy, ex berance of life; the wholesome re s of work done in the right ; he grows old before her time.

O prospective brides and tired se ives, what was "good enough yo r mothers," is not good enough y ; nothing is "good enough" if c improve upon it; no way is "n nough" if you can find a bet- te r changed times have brought it hanged conditions in the home s han in the business world; new a s upon a woman's strength, t e and purse; new requirements be met and—new methods with wh meet them.

He woman who persists in lifting y ots and pans to and from the st when she might be using alum- n for if we want a thing badly g we are pretty sure to get it in , hough we may not be able to 'd t to-day); the woman who goes bl aking her back with short- ll dustpans and brushes, and n up the floor with a "rag" when ght be using long-handled h and pans and a long-handled ng mop; the woman who goes u the labor of building the fire "h nging up" the range every

"Makes Life Worth Living"

An Honest Car Is a Wise Investment

The pleasure of driving an automobile broadens every man and woman. It brings one into closer contact with the beauties and truth of nature; it lends to life a larger sphere both of recreation and usefulness; it builds up health and shapes character in a more rugged mold.

You get the fullest measure of this pleasure when you own a car large enough to take you and your friends in comfort; a car handsome in design and finish, and of at least 30 horsepower for ease and reserve.

Such, above all others of its class, is the Detroiter. The new 1914 five-passenger touring car leaves no wish for beauty unfilled. Platform springs (found on no other car under $1,800) make shock absorbers a superfluity. The long stroke, ball-bearing motor develops a full 32 horsepower, and numerous other features of equal merit also distinguish the Detroiter.

Write today for the Detroiter catalog. It is full of tremendously valuable information for all thinking people.

A Complete Line
$850 to $1050

32 horsepower; long stroke motor; bull-nose radiator; platform rear springs; multiple disk clutch running in oil; the only car in America combining at a popular price all the highest type features of construction.

THE KITCHEN AS IT OUGHT TO BE

morning when the inexpensive oil stove and gas ranges point the way to joy instead of drudgery in housework; and the woman who denies herself this or that bit of recreation and pleasure because she "must stay home to cook the dinner," while there are wonderful "fireless" cookers, promising economy in cost no less than of time and strength; in short, the woman of to-day who takes the attitude of the man who once thought typewriting machines and office telephones an extravagance, is simply blind or obstinate—yes, that is exactly the word—or indifferent to the opportunities that this century puts before her. She may hide behind the excuse of "not being able to afford," but the excuse will not hold water. Almost always is it true in domestic science that the best way to do a thing is not only the easiest way and the most attractive way, but the cheapest way in the end.

The room of all rooms in your house which must be brought up to date if you would find suitable time for recreation, self-improvement and the cultivation of the finer side of home-making, is your kitchen. There are three things that make up the ideal kitchen: Cleanliness, efficiency and beauty. The first we take for granted; the second we think altogether too little about; the third we overlook.

Yet, how very, very often in a neat and well-kept home do we find kitchen walls dingy looking, though unquestionably clean because we know that the house is clean. How utterly discouraging to wipe down such walls and then have to explain that "they are not a bit dirty, though they may seem so." Away with such explanations! The woman who is content to permit this condition is simply behind the times. Our kitchen walls must not only be clean; they must look the part. Only the favored few may be able to have beautiful tiled walls and ceilings such as are found in the model house; many of us cannot afford or would not want to have our walls delicately tinted and keep them fresh by "doing them over" every year; but what of that? Are there not new washable wall coverings, inexpensive but fit to adorn any home; as sanitary as they are attractive; that wear like iron and, with a little care, forever look like new? These you may surely have, or one of the flat washable wall paints, if you prefer. In any event make your kitchen walls cheerful, bright, and see if you are not well repaid.

It is the same with the woodwork and floors. It seems indeed love's labor lost to wash the dark or muddy-yellow painted woodwork so often found in the kitchen. We cannot deny that white wood means more care, but think of the satisfaction of seeing the fruit of your labors! Of having something to show for your work when you get through! Besides, there is white paint and white paint—and the poor quality never pays. As to floors, what excuse is there to-day for the wide, dust-collecting cracks between soft pine boards? None whatever. Cracks fillers, wood stains and floor finishers there are a plenty, making it possible for every woman to have a hard, lustrous and easy-to-keep-clean kitchen floor—and for the woman who must do her own interior decorating the booklets published by our leading manufacturers give expert instructions.

Nowhere do we find that beauty and utility go so closely hand in hand as in the kitchen. For example, the refrigerator that requires the least care and the least labor is also that which looks the most attractive in its place; all good portable ovens are economical to use, but the most attractive, those of the glass door type, are likewise the most efficient of all. It is well, dear housewife, to ponder often on these things instead of eternally discussing the high cost of living; easier ways of living are also worth your thought.

DO YOU KNOW YOUR BIBLE?

THE Nineteen-Fourteen Bible contest starts off with a good big Honor Roll for the first list of questions. Many students failed on the fifth question, which called clearly for a statement of the promises and exhortations referred to, not merely for the reference locating the whole message.

Readers will greatly help our work if they will follow a few simple rules in answering the questions. (1) Write only on one side of your paper. (2) Use Arabic numerals—"1, 2, 3," etc.—instead of Roman—"I, II, III," etc. (3) Write every answer as a separate paragraph. (It is not necessary to repeat the question in sending your answers.) (4) Use the same form for your name, initials, etc., throughout the year.

Answers must reach this office within two weeks of date of issue of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD in which they appear. List No. 2 was published last week.

Answers to List No. 1 (About Joshua)

Published January 25, 1914

1. Choosing and leading an army against Amalek. Ex. 17: 8-13.
2. The incident of Eldad and Medad. (Num. 11: 26-29.)
3. (a) Caleb. Num. 13: 6; 13: 30; 14: 6; 14: 24, 30, 38; 26: 65; 32: 11, 12; Deut. 1: 36, 38; Josh. 15: 13; 14: 8, 9, 14. (b) Entering the Promised Land. Num. 14: 24, 30, 38; Num. 26: 65; Num. 32: 11, 12; Deut. 1: 36, 38; Josh. 14: 4, 8, 9, 14; 15: 13; 19: 41-50.
4. (a) Appointed successor of Moses. (b) Because God's Spirit was in him. Num. 27: 18-23.
5. The message. Josh. 1: 1-9. Promises (1) Possession of the land (verses 2-4); (2) No man able to stand against him (verse 5); (3) God's presence (verses 5, 9); (4) God's support ["will not fail thee"] (verse 5); (5) Should prosper and have good success (verse 7, 8). Exhortations. (1) Arise, go (verse 2); (2) Be strong (verses 6, 7, 9); (3) Be courageous (verses 6, 7, 9); (4) Follow the law and meditate upon it (verse 7, 8).
6. He saw the Captain of the Lord's hosts. Josh 5: 13-15.
7. Josh. 1: 9; 8: 1; 10: 8; 11: 6.
8. Josh. 11: 23.
9. Josh. 24: 15.
10. One hundred and ten. Josh. 24: 29, or Judges 2: 8.

THE YOUNG PEOPLE'S MEETINGS

If Ye Keep in Memory*

PAUL was anxious that his friends in Corinth should keep certain very important things in their memories. We may well, here in the United States, these many years later, take Paul's list of things to be stored in memory and make sure that they are stored away in ours.

"Christ died for our sins." Of all the facts in the world that is the one most important to be remembered. If we forget everything else we must not forget that. Many people are in danger of forgetting it just now. They remember many other things in the Bible; they remember many other facts about Christian history and Christian work; they remember many of the tremendously important things which are waiting to be done and some of the best ways of doing them. But they forget that "Christ died for our sins." They forget that the basis of all truly and permanently uplifting work should be the awakening of the consciousness of sin in the human soul and then the glad announcement of the Gospel: "Christ died for our sins." This is the message which, from the lips and pens of faithful evangelists and pastors and teachers, is saving multitudes of lives to-day as it has been saving them throughout the centuries. In remembering this we should substitute the pronoun "my" for "our." It is not enough to know that he died for the sins of all. We must remember, one by one, that he died for the sins of each of us personally. The faith that recognizes this fact is the basis of all our spiritual success and victory.

The second great fact to be stored in memory is that Christ rose from the dead. We worship a Saviour hanging on a cross; but we also worship a Saviour who walks, with vigorous tread, through the streets of Palestine and the fields of Galilee in the form of his resurrection body and through all the complex thoroughfares, for body and brain, of our busy twentieth century life.

Paul tells the Corinthian Christians about the different people who saw Jesus after he rose from the grave. He says that Peter saw him. (Cephas, you remember, was one of Peter's names.) Then the rest of the eleven disciples saw him. (Paul has no time to think of Judas, now that he is writing of the sweetness and the wonder of Christ's salvation. He speaks of "the twelve" in a general way, meaning the entire group of disciples.) Then he says that five hundred people who were gathered together on one occasion saw Jesus. Then James saw him, probably James "the Lord's brother," not James the apostle. Then he declares that he himself saw him, referring to his miraculous vision on the Damascus road.

It may be that no such marvelous revelation has been granted to you, but there have been, if you are a Christian, times when Christ seemed very near and his presence very real. These are the experiences you should cherish in memory above all others in life. If he has been near you in the past he is near you now, and will reveal his presence to you again and again.

These experiences form the great, firm proofs of the Christian truth. Christ was seen by these men and they wrote plainly and sanely what they knew about him. Other thousands have had experiences of his spiritual presence and have testified to his power in their lives. If your memory of his appearance to you is clear you will have vast power in helping others; if it grows dim your power will also fail. A stirring up of that memory and the exercise of new faith will

FREE—ROSES—FREE

By a happy arrangement with other publishers we are enabled to offe four (4) magazines:

The Pictorial Review
The Ladies' World
The Modern Priscilla

at a lower rate than they have ever been offered before, and in addition t give every person who takes immediate advantage of the offer eigh guaranteed rose bushes absolutely free.

Think of it! Four magazines—three monthlies designed to keep th woman of to-day up-to-date on all matters that pertain to household economy, dress, home matters of all kinds, and one weekly, THE CHRISTIAN HERALD, which brings you the illustrated news of the world from the Christian standpoint in such plain, straightforward languag that every reader is kept abreast of the times.

And furthermore, an opportunity to secure the making of a beautiful rose garden without cost. Spring is almost here, and you will enjoy planting these eight hardy bushes which, with simple care, will blossom and yield you a harvest of beauty. Read the description of the rose plants below, and imagine how they will look blooming in your own garden. If you have never had a garden before, begin to have one now, and watch the result—the everbloomers tastefully arranged in the garden, th climbers to beautify the front porch.

HERE ARE THE ROSES WE SEND YOU FREE

EVERBLOOMERS

BESSIE BROWN:—Snow-white, delicately tinted pink. Flowers large and beautifully formed, lasting a long time after being cut. One of the finest roses of late introduction.

KAISERIN AUGUSTA VICTORIA:—Delicate creamy white. Buds are elegant, long and pointed; flowers full and double; very fragrant. One of the most beautiful of all roses for open ground culture, being perfectly hardy.

MRS. B. R. CANT:—A beautiful rose of splendid habit of growth, being very strong and free blooming, bearing large double flowers of a beautiful carmine red. Valuable for outdoor culture.

PEARL DU JARDIN (Pearl of the Garden):—Rich golden-yellow. Often sold in cut flower stores for "Marechal Neil," so close is the resemblance. Buds of immense size; flowers globular and very fragrant. Dark, thick, shiny foliage.

WELLESLEY:—Clear rose-pink, reverse of petals silvery rose. A vigorous grower and free bloomer, with extra large double flowers.

PINK MAMAN COCHET (the Queen of a Pink Garden Roses):—The buds are beau tiful, large, full and firm and elegant pointed; as they expand they show grea depth and richness, sometimes measurin two and one-half inches from base to tip Perfectly hardy in all sections of th country. The color is clear, rich pink changing to silvery rose.

CLIMBERS

LADY GODIVA:—A new climbing rose This rose is similar in habit of growth t the Crimson Rambler. Blooming in im mense clusters it is a beautiful sight. It color is most pleasing, being a pale flesh the lightest of all the pink ramblers. A very rapid and free branching rose hardy as an oak, deserving a place i every garden.

TAUSENDSCHOEN (Thousand Beauties):—The most sensational climbing rose ye introduced, blooming profusely from th beginning of June until the last of July the double flowers appear in large clusters The color runs from delicate balsam o tender rose through the intermediat shades of bright rose and carmine, wit white and yellow tints showing. There i no other rose in cultivation like it. It i a strong grower, with but few thorns and absolutely hardy.

Good News for The ONE-ARMED and ARMLESS

Actual photos of Mr. C. E. Huffman, Hickory, N. C. He shows only one of many things he does with a

Carnes Artificial Arm

Mr. Huffman wears two Carnes Arms. He writes: "I feed, dress and shave myself, carry and lift quite as easily as at one; open and close a door, open drawer of desk or dresser, locate what I want and close it again. As for tennis, mechanical steerer could not beat me. I wear my Carnes Arms. The wrist comfortable to wear, in fact feels a part of me, and easy to operate. Would not be without them for any amount of money."

With a Carnes Artificial Arm You can do writing, dressing, sharpen lead pencil, use telephone, clean teeth, lace or button shoes, put on gloves, brush coat, tie cravat, brush hair, run automobile, ride bicycle, drive horses, play pool or billiards, do sewing, ironing, sweeping and many other things seemingly impossible but absolutely true.

Write for illustrated catalogue showing facsimile letters and photographs of wearers of Carnes Artificial Arms. It will show you how you can get the Carnes Arm at very low price, and will tell you how you can easily do things with and without assistance of sound hand. Endorsed by Surgeons. Adopted by large railroads and factories.

THE YOUNG PEOPLE'S MEETINGS

make you clearly conscious again of his nearness.

But these great facts are only foundations. Upon them should be stored treasures of information, inspiration, skill, beauty. Passages of Scripture, hymns, the testimonies of other Christians, memories of great victories, such as Paul referred to in verse 10 of this passage, good friendship, happy times, beautiful scenes, fine music—things like these should find firm places in our memories.

The value of memorizing Scripture and hymns cannot be overemphasized. Countless times has the Holy Spirit made use of some passage of Scripture or lines from some hymn to awaken a soul to a faith that has brought richest blessing.

You can store your mind with rich and beautiful treasures just as a rich man may store his home with priceless possessions. Your riches will be greater than his if you have holy and useful and beautiful memories and he has not.

A Social Survey*

THERE is a surprisingly modern sound to this story of the land and food problem which Nehemiah had to face. It was an ancient episode of the modern difficulty of the "high cost of living." And then, as now, the trouble could be traced back to the few who had used their power to oppress the many. The poor people had mortgaged their houses and lands, and even sold their sons and daughters into bondage in order to buy food.

When they complained to Nehemiah he did five things. First, he was very angry. There is no sin in anger against injustice and oppression. There ought to be more of it rather than less. Second, he "consulted with" himself. Rash and thoughtless action is apt to produce no lasting good. Third, he "rebuked" the nobles who had done the wrong. Fourth, he summoned a popular assembly to impress upon the nobles the gravity of their wrong-doing and to urge them to be just. His words are very emphatic and should be echoed in substance in many a modern instance: "I pray you leave off this usury." Lastly he persuaded the nobles to restore the property they had gained by their oppression of the poor.

The "social survey" is a modern term for an investigation of social conditions in a community. It is coming to be believed more and more emphatically that the way to change a wrong situation is by first facing it squarely. Many things are permitted in a community because they are in only a vague way known to exist. If the facts are brought plainly home to the minds and consciences of the people they will be driven out. The facts of wrong-doing are dreadful enough, if people would only learn them, to make them unwilling to tolerate the horror-producing evil.

A word of warning may well be sounded in the presence of so widespread an interest in "surveys." It is not enough to investigate and survey the evil, or even to drive it out as the result of a strong ethical awakening. There is need of deeper work. What must be changed is the heart of the wrong-doers. A community has not done its best work when it has made the wrong-doers stop their evil practices or when it has driven them from the community. The church can be satisfied with nothing short of regeneration. "Overcome evil with good." As Christians we can strive for nothing less than the salvation of the wrong-doer. Nehemiah took a solemn pledge that the wrong would not be repeated. He worked out his reform in the presence of God, and when it was over "all the congregation said, Amen, and praised the Lord."

Does Your Figure Please You?

Your dressmaker can never make a gown look well on you unless you have a good figure and unless you carry it well

I want to make you realize that your figure and health are almost entirely in your own hands, and that by following my simple, hygienic directions in the privacy of your own room

You Can Be So Well

that your whole being vibrates health. I have helped 65,000 of the most refined, intellectual women of America to regain health and good figures; and have taught them how to keep well. Why not you? You are busy, but you can devote a few minutes a day, in the privacy of your own room, to following scientific, hygienic principles of health prescribed to your particular needs.

I have reduced the weight of over 32,000 women and increased the weight of as many more. In my work for reduction or building flesh, I strengthen every vital function so that you are full of life and energy.

My work has grown in favor because results are quick, natural and permanent, and because they are scientific and appeal to common sense. Fully one-third of my pupils are sent to me by those who have worked with me.

I wish you could stand with me at my window for a few minutes and, as the women pass, realize with me how many need better figures, better health. They could have them, too, with just a little daily effort which is easy—not as hard as what they are enduring.

The best physicians are my friends—their wives and daughters are my pupils—the medical magazines advertise my work. Someone in your town knows me. Ask your friends about my work. I am at my desk daily from 8 to 5.

No Drugs—No Medicines

I study each woman's case just as a physician studies it, the only difference being that instead of medicine I strengthen and put in place weakened organs by exercises for nerves and muscles controlling them, bringing a good circulation of warm blood to them, which I purify by teaching correct breathing. I relieve such ailments as

Indigestion	Sleeplessness	Catarrh	Suffering in
Constipation	Nervousness	Headaches	Pregnancy
Anaemia	Torpid Liver	Weakness	Rheumatism

I have published a free booklet showing how to stand and walk correctly and giving other information of vital interest to women. Write for it and I will also tell you about my work. If you are perfectly well and your figure is just what you wish, you may be able to help a dear friend—at least you will help me by your interest in this great movement for greater culture, refinement and beauty in woman. Sit down and write me NOW. Don't wait—you may forget it. I have had a wonderful experience and I should like to tell you about it.

HUDSON Six-40

Who Doesn't Want a Six?

If its weight is less, its price is less and its fuel cost less than any comparable car, who doesn't want a Six? Who wants to lose, and pay for losing, all the luxury of riding in a Six?

THE fact that men want Sixes is too apparent to dispute. All the high-priced cars have been forced to Sixes. And scores of other makers have had to capitulate to a demand which proved resistless.

At the New York Show, 54 exhibitors—out of 79—displayed Sixes for best. Eighteen showed Sixes exclusively.

At the Chicago Show, 67 exhibitors—out of 104 making cars above $1,500—featured a Six for their best.

Never in motor car history was anything more apparent than this swing to Sixes. It is coming about faster than came the abandonment of one- and two-cylinder motors.

The Reason Is This

Men want to end vibration, and that means continuous power. They want flexibility, want less wear on tires. They want to avoid changing gears in slow traffic, or in climbing any reasonable grade.

And they want the luxury of motion. They want that smoothness which seems like constant coasting.

The only men content without a Six are men who notice only motor noise.

The New Hudson Six-40 Takes All the Bars Down

Now the HUDSON engineers have taken from Sixes all the load they had.

Sixes were costly. [illegible] HUDSON Six-40 undercuts all cars [illegible] power and class combined.

Sixes were heavy. Now the [illegible] weighs 2,960 pounds. That's [illegible] than our last year's Four—the [illegible]

Sixes consumed extra fuel. Now the HUDSON Six-40 consumes one-fourth less than did our HUDSON "37."

Think of that. A longer car than our "37." A higher-powered car. A car with two extra tonneau seats. Yet much less weight and much less fuel cost.

And largely because of a new-type motor—a small-bore, long-stroke motor—which has solved the economy problem.

Buyers of cheap cars can't get Sixes as yet. But men who pay over $1,500 will find everything—even economy—on the side of this HUDSON Six-40. And it won't depreciate like types which are going out.

A Beauty All Its Own

Then here is the Streamline body brought to artistic perfection. Note the flowing lines, unbroken at the dash. This type of body is the coming vogue. It is now the vogue in Europe. But you will never see it brought out better than in this year's HUDSON Sixes.

And note below the new ideas in equipment. Note how many of these attractions make their first American appearance in this car.

The Hudson Six-54

Our larger Six—frequently called the handsomest car of the year—has the same design and practically the same equipment. It is for men who want a big car—big in size and power. The wheelbase is 135 inches. The price is $2,250.

Your local Hudson dealer has these cars on show. They are the year's sensations, and even now we are way behind on orders. Go see them—ride in them—then do what you think best. Howard E. Coffin's 55-page book on 1914 cars in general will be mailed you on request.

REV. J. S. CHEAVENS
The Author, Suspected of Being a Spy

A VISIT TO MEXICO IN WAR TIME

BY J. S. CHEAVENS

REV. DONATO S. RUIZ
Arrested for "Harboring" the Author

MEXICO continues to be a problem. It is difficult for the average reader of the daily press to form a correct idea of the situation because the accounts are so varied and so contradictory. The following narrative may be a new ote among the many jangling voices. Rev. G. H. Lacy, D.D., and he writer left San Antonio, Texas, January 13, 1914. It was our purpose to isit Torreon, and, if circumstances were favorable, Saltillo also. After sunet on the evening of the 13th, we crossed the International Bridge between Eagle Pass, Texas, and Ciudad Porfirio Diaz, Mexico. The last-named city is he proud owner of two names. In the territory ruled by General Huerta it s known as the City (Ciudad) Porfirio Diaz; in Constitutionalist territory it s called by its original name, Piedras Negras (Black Rocks).

A customs officer found a copy of the San Antonio Light under the strap of ıy blanket roll, and informed me that it could not enter. No American newsapers are allowed to cross the border. The inspector of immigration asked ur names, ages, and occupations. We told him we were ministers of the ospel. He said: "De Santa Roma?" We answered: "No, somos ministros el evangelio de Jesu Cristo."

Passports were secured at the headquarters of Brigadier General A. A. lvarez. We had need for them later on. Our first day's journey in Mexico as from Porfirio Diaz o Monclova. Between ese two points not a tation-house nor a seon-house is standing. onely chimneys and iles of ashes tell the tory. Bridges have been urned, the track torn p, the rails twisted, and es burned. The stone iers of the bridge across ıe Sabinas River had een blown up with dyamite. When we passed, verything had been ribbed up, so that trains ould cross.

Late in the afternoon we eached Monclova. The ills around the city are ortified and the whole lace looks like a miliary camp. We visited ur Mexican preacher. efore the uprising last ebruary he was staioned at San Pedro. here is one subject of onversation in Mexico— ıe revolution — and of ıat we talked.

The next day we go rom Monclova to Hipolito. Our train is a mixed train. An escort is proided by the military authorities. Some of the soldiers are mere boys, and ıat is true of both officers and privates. One of the boys of our escort, in ddition to his heavy Mauser rifle, carried a pup in his arms. Whenever the ain stopped the boy and his pup would dismount to play awhile.

At Reata we stopped for dinner. The soldiers crowded into the little diningoom of the Chinese restaurant. Some of the peon soldiery didn't know how o use knives and forks. In many homes of the lower classes such things are nknown.

At Paredon we had to change cars. While we wait officers and men waylay s to change cashiers' checks into banknotes, or banknotes into silver. We ecline to do so, and some are offended. An officer whom we turned down asks or our passports, and seems quite disappointed when he finds we have them.

From Paredon we go to Hipolito. To our left we can see the mountains ear Saltillo, El Penitente towering above the rest. The sun sinks lower and ıe shadows grow deeper; the west is agleam with the glow of a golden sunset; ıe cañons grow purple as the shades deepen into night. Darkness comes, but ır train moves on with lamps unlighted, for a lighted lamp is a good target or riflemen in ambush.

Hipolito is reached, and we spend a disagreeable night in the day coach. wrap myself in my blanket and go to sleep by an open window. Dr. Lacy nds it difficult to sleep. He told me next day that a Mexican kept complaining of the cold. Toward morning he saw my window open and proceeded to shut it, saying: "Qué bárbaro!"

At dawn we change cars and proceed toward San Pedro and Torreon. By the roadside we see twisted rails, burnt cars, overturned engines, dead horses, and the charred remains of unburied soldiers. This was the line of General Aubert's retreat some months ago. In the afternoon we enter the far-famed Laguna District, one of the great cotton-producing regions of the world, but the outlook is gloomy. We see vast fields of unpicked cotton that would yield from one-half to three-quarters of a bale to the acre. The white cotton is gray with dust and the ragged bolls are dropping last year's crop to the ground. Very few fields have been prepared for this year's planting.

At 9.30 Friday night we arrived at Torreon, having spent four days making a trip that, under normal conditions, would have been made in less than twenty-four hours. Torreon has had its share of trouble since the revolution began in 1910. My traveling companion, Dr. Lacy, was present during the first battle, and also when the city was taken and the Chinese massacred.

We spend our first night in the Hotel Francia, a bullet-scarred building, near the railroad station. Our breakfast consists of coffee, rolls, beefsteak and frijoles. The price is seventy-five cents.

We found that many changes had taken place. Our Baptist preacher had moved into the Methodist college. Some had gone away, and no word could reach them. The members of the church who had remained had been holding services since January 1, 1914. They were not looking for us, but when they saw us, their joy was great. It was my privilege to preach to them on Saturday night, January 17. My text was Ps. 27: 14: "Wait for Jehovah." The pastor, Rev. Donato S. Ruiz, said: "I haven't heard a sermon for months, except those I preached myself." Dr. Lacy preached on Sunday night, having for his theme "The Living Christ." Some Federal army officers were present, and the pastor spoke to them after the sermon. A slight illness kept me in bed on Monday and Monday night, and urgent business kept Dr. Lacy away, but the Mexican brethren held their usual services. During my illness on Monday and Tuesday forenoon Mr. Ruiz, in whose home we were lodged, was very thoughtful and attentive. He was my pupil from 1903 to 1905; I preached his ordination sermon, and we had always been good friends. He seemed greatly helped by our visit. He had not left his post since the first revolution in 1910. His spirit seemed softened, chastened, humbled.

UNITED STATES SOLDIERS GUARDING INTERNATIONAL BRIDGE ACROSS THE RIO GRANDE AT JUAREZ

Tuesday night came. It was our purpose to leave for Saltillo on Wednesday. The hour for worship arrived, and I asked Mrs. Ruiz if her husband was at home. She replied that she thought he had gone to the church. We went to church, but the pastor was not there. We waited awhile and, as the pastor did not come, we went on with the service. After preaching we hurried back to our lodging and Mrs. Ruiz said that her husband had returned a few minutes after we left for the church, that he locked the door to our room and started to church. A servant girl came in then and said that just as Mr. Ruiz was leaving the house some one had spoken to him and said he was wanted at the presidencia to become "responsable." Thinking that perhaps he had gone to secure a passport for a friend, we waited awhile, and then sent to the friend's house. He was in bed and said he had not seen Mr. Ruiz since noon. The night passed, with our hearts heavy and filled with foreboding.

Wednesday was a strenuous day. We learned from a friendly guard that Mr. Ruiz was in jail. He wanted a blanket and some breakfast. He tried to find out the accusation, and on whose order the arrest had been made; but no one seemed to know or care. Late in the afternoon we determined to go to see General Velazco, commander of the division of the Nazas. Dr. Lacy, Mrs. Ruiz and the writer went together. After a long delay we were permitted to speak to him. He received us with frigid politeness and made short work of the interview. He didn't know Señor Ruiz; he didn't know who ordered the arrest, nor on what ground. Everything would have to go through the regular channels, first to his chief-of-staff, then to him. "Buenas noches, señores," and the dried-up old fellow left us to find our way downstairs.

The day following, Mrs. Ruiz spoke to the "asesor de la division," Señor Jesus M. Aguirre. He had told Mrs. Ruiz's sister that her brother had been arrested because he was seen with a group of men drinking and talking about the Federals. That was such a manifest untruth that he withdrew the statement and said the real reason was because of the public services held in the church. Mrs. Ruiz said: "Do we not enjoy liberty of worship?" "Oh, yes," answered the attorney, "but you know the Saxons have come down here under color of religion to spy out our liberties." (Usted sabe que los Sajones han venido acá so color de religion espiando nuestras libertades.) Then he asked on what subject we had been preaching. Mrs. Ruiz returned home and took her husband's Spanish Bible and the outlines of our sermons. The attorney seemed satisfied and we were more hopeful than at any time since the arrest.

The next day, Friday, when Mrs. Ruiz went to the jail she was told that her husband was not there. "Where is he?" she asked. "They have taken him out to work," answered the guard, with a sinister smile. A little later the wife of the same friendly guard who brought the first news of the imprisonment came to the house and said that Mr. Ruiz, along with other prisoners, had been taken out of jail in the night and placed on a train for Mexico City.

We found little consolation in the news, for many a man has been taken away in a similar way and never heard from any more. One woman, whose husband was executed some months ago, said: "Don't you believe it. That is what they said when they took Benito away, and the next we knew he was hanging to a telegraph post."

The arrest and removal of Mr. Ruiz struck terror to all hearts. Who is safe? Men spoke in whispers and distrusted even close friends. They quoted a Spanish proverb: "The doors have eyes and the walls ears." One morning early, I was walking rapidly down the street. A man in front of me was reading a letter. Hearing steps behind him, he hurriedly hid the letter that I might not see. Several families left precipitately for the United States to swell the already large army of refugees across the Rio Grande.

GENERAL HUERTA AT A DIPLOMATIC RECEPTION

On Saturday we left for Saltillo, at which place we arrived late Monday night. One of our traveling companions had lost his wife in December 1913. She was shot by the revolutionists after they had blown up a troop train. Another American leaving Torreon said: "I didn't enjoy a meal while in Torreon. I couldn't help thinking of those dead men and the lard made out of hogs that had fed on human flesh."

In Saltillo we found Miss Ida Hayes, principal of Madero Institute, and Miss Jennie Wheeler, principal of the Presbyterian Normal School. Both had remained heroically at their posts.

The morning after our arrival in Saltillo we saw Mr. Ruiz with other prisoners on his way to the penitentiary. Some Mexican friends came in and said: "Donato Ruiz is a prisoner. We have just spoken to him in the street." Later in the day we learned that Mrs. Ruiz's brother, Professor José Flores, of the State Normal School, had received a letter from his sister in which she said that after we left she went to see the general again and that he said Mr. Ruiz had been arrested because he had lodged in his house two Americans suspected of being spies of Carranza. He also said that Mr. Ruiz had been conscripted into the army (consignado a las armas). Vice-Consul John R. Silliman said: "I think I can prove that you are true sons of Jacob and not spies."

Our business was finished. We had hindered rather than helped our Mexican brethren, so on January 28 we started for the United States. After a twelve-hour delay we reached Eagle Pass in time for the train to San Antonio January 29.

Some years ago Professor Justo Sierra, one of the leading educators in Mexico, visited the United States. He professed to be much worried by our "dollar democracy." When he crossed the Rio Grande at El Paso, as he returned to Mexico, he left on record this sneering epigram: "La libertad es un aire que respiramos." When Dr. Lacy and I crossed the same river, leaving Mexico in the teeth of a Texas "norther," we felt in our hearts that, for Americans at least, "Liberty is the air one breathes north of the Rio Grande."

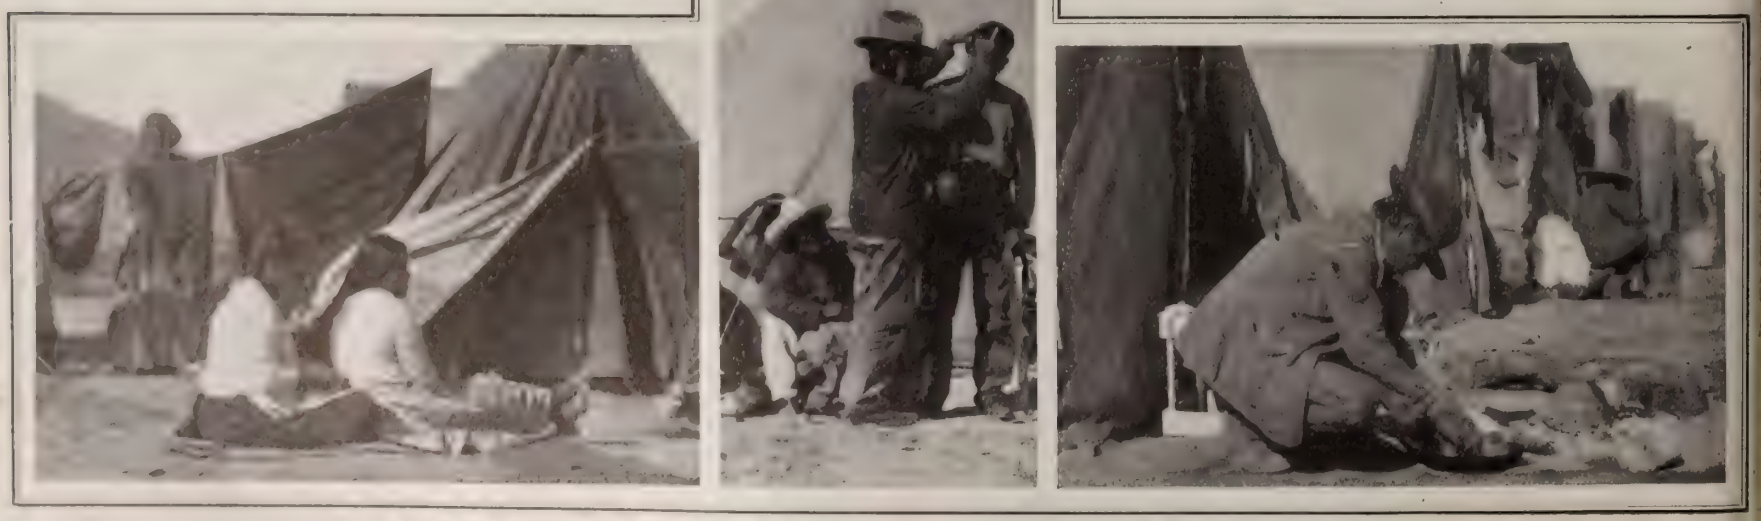
ALMOST A CRISIS IN MEXICAN RELATIONS

THE news was given in THE CHRISTIAN HERALD of March 4 of the deliberate execution of a British ranch-owner, William S. Benton. It appears from such sources of information as are open that the ranchman Benton visited the office of General Villa in Juarez to remonstrate against depredations committed on Benton's estate. Reports widely differ as to what took place, Villa insisting that his life was threatened and that he had to use force to protect himself, and that subsequently Benton was formally tried, found guilty of attempted assassination of Villa, and executed. Friends of the slain man repudiate any basis for this explanation of the affair, and insist that an examination of the body would reveal evidences of a sudden killing of the ranchman at close quarters by a revolver shot. Villa, however, left to join the army, and in response to demands made on behalf of the United States Government for the body of Benton, showed a defiant spirit, refusing immediate co-operation. Delay in delivery of the body would result in the effacement by time of the bodily evidences as to the manner of the death.

Efforts were made in some quarters to inflame public feeling over this occurrence, and talk of intervention, international complications, and overturn of public opinion regarding the whole Mexican situation, filled the press. The government of Great Britain, however, showed a distinctly friendly spirit by refusing to take action that could be construed as inimical to the United States, or that would weaken the prestige of this country in dealing with Mexico. On the other hand, the administration at Washington took steps to get at the truth of the matter and so assured Great Britain. The disappearance of an American subject of German descent, named Gustav Bauch, who, it is stated, had been arrested as a spy by Villa and taken to Chihuahua City for trial, increased the tension. Secretary of State Bryan is said to have sent a communication through an American consul to General Carranza, warning the latter that he would be held personally responsible for the safety of Bauch. Steps were taken to trace the missing man, but latest advices indicate acceptance of the belief that he is dead.

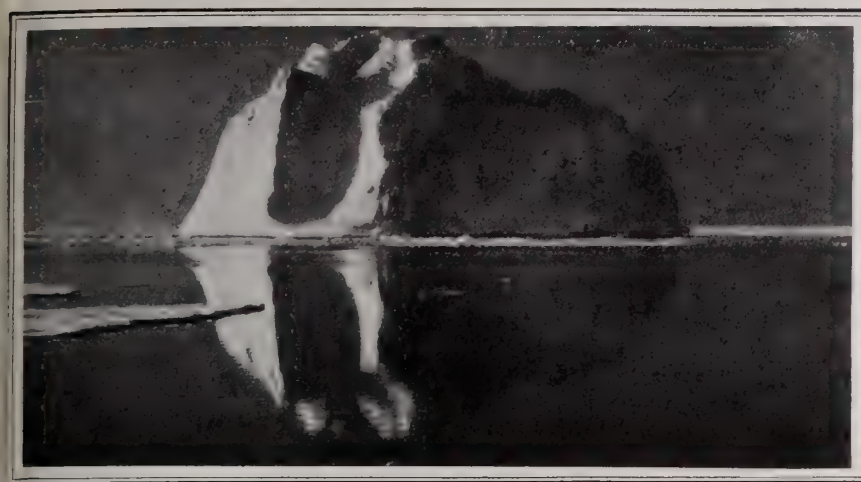
A crisis of serious gravity may be impending. President Wilson refuses to be stampeded, however, and still retains the control of the situation so far as active interference in Mexican affairs is concerned.

No new reliable news concerning the progress of the war in Mexico has reached the public. It is stated that the Huerta government is in position to take care of itself and to prevent any further marked successes by the rebels. It is certain that the cause of the latter will suffer in the eyes of the Powers by reason of the outrages which have occurred; but whether there will be a corresponding accession of sympathy for General Huerta is not so sure. Meanwhile the United States continues to entertain several thousand Mexican refugees at Fort Bliss, Texas, though whether the flower of the Federal army is there encamped it is difficult to say. This almost comic phase of an otherwise too serious situation will supply one of the most interesting chapters in the history of this present Mexican revolution.



SCENES IN THE MEXICAN REFUGEE CAMP AT FORT BLISS, TEXAS

AN ICEBERG CAN BE SEEN FOR MILES ON A CLEAR DAY



SHIPS CAN SOMETIMES APPROACH NEAR ENOUGH TO AWAKEN ECHOES

PATROLLING THE ATLANTIC

LIFE and property require to be safeguarded on sea as much as, if not more than, on land. For this purpose the ocean patrol has come into being. On the waste of waters there is every danger which taxes the best of human skill, foresight and carefulness to combat it. At a certain period of the year this danger of the deep increases, and, therefore, emphatic measures have been taken to escape it. This most dangerous time of the year is that in which the icebergs occur, when great masses break away from the parent glaciers in the north to float down in their frozen might into the lanes of travel traversed by the steamships plying between European and American ports. This period of utmost danger generally lasts from the beginning of March to the last of July. In some years the ice drift begins as early as February, and by March some of the bergs are so far south as to get in the way of the northerly course of vessels entering Canadian and New England ports.

U. S. REVENUE CUTTER SENECA

As the season advances the floating masses get in the main track of the big liners and it is then that the greatest danger is to be apprehended. To avoid them as much as possible the principal companies engaged in North Atlantic transportation between the ports of New York, Boston, Fastnet and Bishop's Rock direct their captains to take the most southerly course consistent with the time allowed for the voyage, from the beginning of February to the end of August, but even this does not preclude the possibility of coming in contact with the ice mountains that at any moment may loom up on the horizon in the very path of the vessel.

This southerly course, as it is termed, which is pursued during the spring and summer months, takes the vessels across the fiftieth degree of longitude (the region of danger) in latitude 41 degrees 30 minutes on the westbound passage and in latitude 40 degrees 30 minutes on the eastbound passage. Yet icebergs of immense size are frequently encountered on this track. The ill-fated Titanic was on the southerly course when she struck the berg that sent her down to the Atlantic graveyard. Many a stately bark which left the home port in high hope has come to grief in this dreaded section of the North Atlantic. The icebergs float down on the Labrador current and skirt Newfoundland, bearing south until they enter the warm waters of the Gulf Stream, where they gradually disappear. What adds to the great danger of these frozen dreadnoughts is the fog in which they are often enveloped when off the Grand Banks. Though the sharpest lookout may be kept, it sometimes happens that bergs ahead may not be sighted until too late for the vessel to steer her course.

It was the appalling catastrophe of the Titanic that woke the nations to the fact that no ship, however stanch, is immune from accident, and that the problem of elemental danger still remained unsolved. The Titanic was thought to be practically unsinkable. Proudly she steamed along on her maiden trip, defying winds and waves, a floating palace full of life and light, when, lo! out of the darkness of night rolled the grim sea monster which sent her to her doom. The news of her fate shocked the civilized world. The boasted science and skill of man were baffled, beaten, sunk beneath the waves by the might of the ice king. Then it was that thought was taken, not how to overcome, but how to avoid its irresistible power in the future. Our Navy Department, in the interest of life and property at sea, set aside two cruisers for patrol duty; that is, to scour the steamship track for icebergs and give warning of their location and approach. The U. S. S. Birmingham sailed Sunday, May 19, 1912, from Philadelphia for patrol duty near the ice fields. The primary purpose of this cruise was to locate the icebergs and field ice nearest to the transatlantic steamer lanes, patrol the ice field along its southern enveloping line, and endeavor by means of radio messages daily to keep ships at sea and the Hydrographic Office advised of the limits of the ice fields. Ships sighting ice were asked to forward news thereof to the Birmingham, which would relay it to other ships and to the shore. The radiograms were received by the Hydrographic Office, which gave them publicity at once at New York and other seaports, and published them weekly in the Hydrographic Bulletin.

A DIFFERENT MENACE ALSO SOUGHT BY THE PATROL

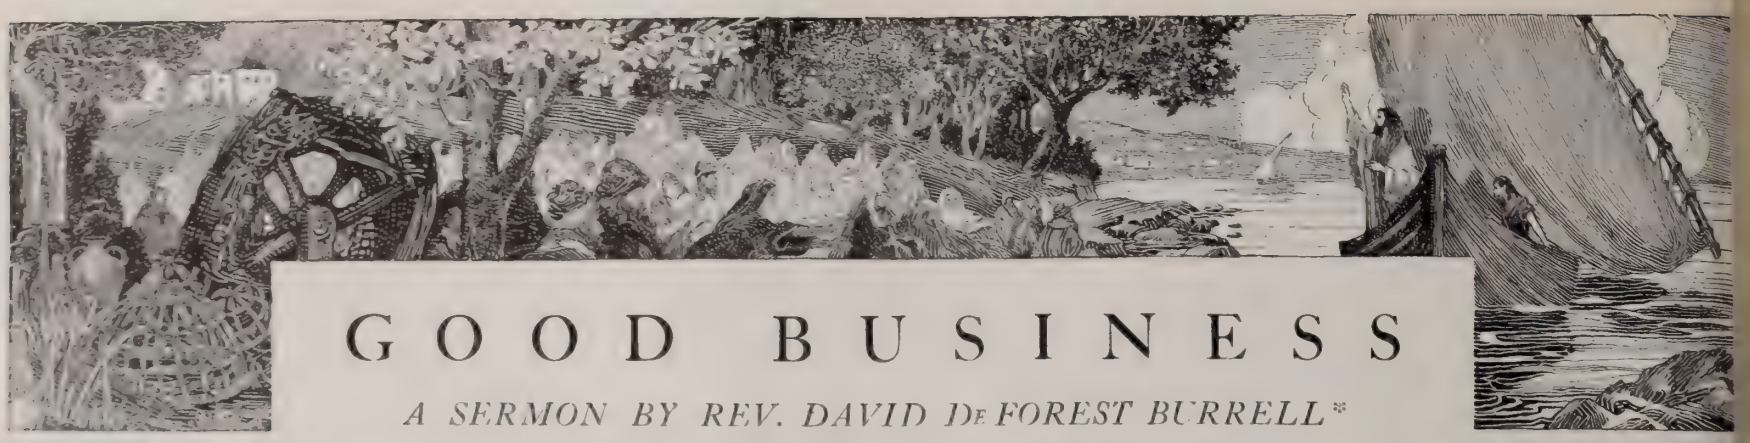
The U. S. S. Chester relieved the Birmingham June 7, and these vessels alternated in the patrol until July 6, 1912, when there seemed to be no further necessity for their presence.

Captain E. E. Johnston, commanding the Seneca in 1913, made an interesting report of his patrol. One of the bergs he describes as having two perpendicular faces, which gave out strong echoes, while the slanting faces returned no sound. "In all my experiences with icebergs," he states in his report, "I found the ordinary law of reflection to hold good. Perpendicular faces reflect sound, while slanting faces deflect it."

Some ships have reported icebergs half a mile long and 300 feet high. The commander of the Seneca did not see any of so great size. The highest he observed he estimated at 150 feet. The greatest distance from which he discerned an iceberg was eighteen miles on a clear day. "On ordinarily clear days," he states, "the average iceberg can be seen twelve to fifteen miles from the bridge, about a mile further from the crow's nest, and a mile still further from the signal yard. On a cloudy day, with good visibility, deduct about two miles from the foregoing. With the searchlight we were able to see an iceberg about three miles on a dim moonlight night, and two miles after the moon set. Concluding his report, this efficient officer says: "In my opinion, the only safe way to navigate regions of icebergs is to stop during thick weather and to run very slowly on dark nights. . . . In sheering to avoid an iceberg it must be borne in mind that with engines working ahead the vessel is pivoted on her stem, so that as soon as the bow is clear of the berg, the helm should be shifted in order to throw the stern away from the berg. At night and in thick fog, I should post the lookout as low down as circumstances would permit. In addition to this, the vigilance of the officer of the watch should be unremitting."

This year precautions have been taken earlier in the season to safeguard transatlantic travel. The Seneca has again been despatched to the ice-fields. The cutter left Tompkinsville, Staten Island, N. Y., on February 15 for her five months' cruise. The experienced Captain Johnston is once more in command. The Seneca is the only vessel that has been detailed for the service this year, but when the ice has moved southward so as to make a constant patrol necessary, an additional vessel will be sent out for the purpose, probably the Miami.

There has been a report that some of the big companies were to put on patrol boats of their own to supplement the government service, but as yet none of them has taken the initiative, although some of them have adopted the scheme of motor-boat scouts to circumvent ice perils in the North Atlantic. The new Allan liners Alsatian and Calgarian are the first vessels to be equipped in this way. On their next voyage each will carry two motor boats fitted with thirty-horsepower motors, and with wireless apparatus for signaling. During foggy weather these ice scouts will be sent ahead to report danger. It is said that the Cunard Company has also arranged for motor-boat scouts and that the new Aquitania will carry four of such craft to give warning of danger. The recent international conference for safety at sea had under consideration the whole subject of sea patrols.



GOOD BUSINESS

*A SERMON BY REV. DAVID DE FOREST BURRELL

TEXT: "What is your occupation?" Gen. 46: 33

IS LIFE worth living? That depends altogether upon what you regard as the business of life. Tell me what you think you are here in the world for, and I will tell you whether your life, as you are living it, is worth while. What is your errand here? The pursuit of happiness? of pleasure? of social prominence? of power? of bread and butter? of money? Tell me; and I will tell you whether your life is worth living—as you are living it.

1. A man's business is that which has his heart. Any thoughtful person would say that business must be definite. A blunderbuss is not as business-like as a rifle. It is folly to be at work in the world without a well-defined notion of what you wish to accomplish.

> The busy world shoves angrily aside
> The man who stands with arms akimbo set
> Until occasion tells him what to do;
> And he who waits to have his task marked out
> Shall die and leave his errand unfulfilled.

But business is more than a definite purpose in one's activities: it is the controlling purpose. We speak of man's mere office work, or of his tasks at the bench, as his business; but we may be wrong in this. I know a carpenter who, if I asked him his business, would say, "Carpentry"; and yet I know that there is one thing nearer his heart, more constantly in his mind, having more control over his will, than his labor with hammer and saw. It is the bar at the corner saloon. Carpentry his business? No, drink is his business; for drink has his heart. The broker's clerk whose mind is not on the figures he is posting in his ledger, but on the figures to be posted at the noon-hour in the poolroom around the corner, has made gambling his business, for he has given it his heart. A shrewd man declares that no bank will succeed until it has a president who takes it to bed with him. Such a president has given his heart to banking. So it is with every man: the one thing which has his heart is his real business.

2. To be good business, it must pay. It must be profitable to God. Nothing can be good business in the world of his which does not pay him. This is so by virtue of the fact that we are his creatures, made in his moral image for his good purposes. When God said, "Let us make man," then came upon man the supreme obligation to serve God with his whole being. "Man's chief end is to glorify God and to enjoy him forever" is a doctrine based on the most obvious and fundamental of the teachings of the Scripture.

> Oh that I were an orange-tree,
> That busy plant!
> Then should I ever laden be,
> And ever plant
> Some fruit for him that dresseth me.

George Herbert's orange-tree, willy-nilly, obeys the gardener. But better than this is the case of him who, not of compulsion but deliberately, makes his chief business in life to bring forth fruit to God. That is good business for the creature which profits the Creator. Matthias Baldwin, founder of the Baldwin Locomotive Works, had been a jeweler in his younger days, and had turned to locomotive building because, as he said, he would be ashamed to give account to God of a life spent in the making of "gewgaws." Such a conscience is a good one to possess, driving a man to engage his heart and his talents in that which will best serve God.

Good business will be profitable to one's neighbors. From this point of view, Baldwin's "gewgaws" could stand no comparison with his locomotives. Good business is a neighborly business. A certain business man of the New York of a generation ago is credited with having consigned the public to perdition when it was clamoring for its rights. If that was his sentiment, he was no good business man, despite the millions of dollars he left behind him. Business posits obligation to neighbors near and far, known and unknown, and good business fulfils the Golden Rule. Handel had the right of it when, on being complimented on the entertainment which the "Messiah" had just afforded a court audience, he replied, "My lord, I should be sorry if I only entertained them; I wish to make them better."

That kindly spirit of service is an element of every good business, be it housekeeping, clerking, horse-shoeing, painting or what not. "Love worketh no ill to his neighbor: love therefore is the fulfilling of the law."

Good business pays permanent profit to oneself. It makes the man the better for having given his heart to this thing, whatever it be; it makes him more nearly what God meant him to be. "One thing thou lackest," said Jesus to a "successful" young man; "go, sell what thou hast, and give to the poor, and thou shalt have treasure in heaven: and come, follow me." Was there any particular virtue in selling all he had and giving away the proceeds? Yes, indeed. It meant breaking with an unworthy life-purpose which had stunted the man's soul. "Rich" and "successful"; but, in Jesus' eyes, poor and a failure, because he had, in spite of all his formal propriety, been utterly selfish, a blessing to neither God nor man nor self. A worthy business must always employ and develop the whole man along right lines. He who puts into his mouth that which may steal away his brains is no good business man; neither is he who, while of strict probity in what he calls his "business," is in private life immoral. The drink of the former, the vice of the latter, are their true business, having their hearts; and both, injuring themselves body and soul, are failures in God's sight as business men.

The same can be said of the people who worship culture and intellect, and let their spiritual interests go uncared for. You will find them frequently in literary and artistic circles, absorbed in their professions; yet because that profession leaves them with dried and shriveled souls, it is a bad business. Whatever can take a Darwin, with a sensitive soul, with a bent towards beauty and spiritual realities, and at the end of life turn him out a machine of body and brain, mourning the atrophy of his spiritual and esthetic faculties, this too is decidedly bad business. Good business will surely make the best of the whole man, presenting him to God in the end as a servant fitter far for the larger business of heaven, where "his servants shall serve him."

> What is he but a brute
> Whose flesh has soul to suit,
> Whose spirit works lest arms and legs want play?
> To man propose this test—
> Thy body at its best,
> How far can it project thy soul on its lone way?

3. The Christian life is the only good business career. By the Christian life I mean a life controlled by a personal affection for the Lord Jesus Christ; an affection so strong that it makes the man feel, with Paul, that he is "the bondslave of Christ," and cry, with good old Davies,

> Lord, I am thine, entirely thine,
> Purchased and saved by grace divine.

Such a man believes that God has sent Jesus into the world to be his Saviour, to reconcile him to God by his death on the cross, to keep him in fellowship with God for all eternity. He is saved by Jesus; and love for Jesus fills his soul and becomes the controlling motive of his life.

Not long before his death Commander Booth of the Salvation Army thus explained his marvelous success: "It is only because Jesus has had all of me!" That is precisely my point: Booth became one of the best of business men from the moment he surrendered his will to Jesus' will; for his whole purpose was from that moment the aim which alone could make his life yield the largest profits to God, his fellow man and himself.

The genuine Christian life is the only life which fulfils these essential conditions of good business. It puts a man in right relations with the will of God, and keeps him there; it plants in his heart a deep brotherly regard for other men and their interests; it builds up in him the finest character, transforming him from glory to glory into the likeness of Christ Jesus his Lord. Where a man's heart is, there is his treasure, and there is his business. To become a Christian means, in effect, to get God's own conception of the business of life; to get God's own motive for pursuing it; to have God's own presence and power to help in the pursuit and to insure its success.

But the final argument for the Christian life as the only good business career is its permanency. The Christian, in all his labors here, is ever conscious of the nearing of the day when this apprenticeship shall cease and he shall enter God's presence, to serve him there. His business is in itself permanent engagement; and it is the only one which can show good and lasting results. It is productive of such eternal realities as character, the only thing a man can take out of this world into the next; and influence of the right sort, which never ceases, but ever widens; and it brings the man at last into the larger activities of heaven.

The affairs of God are eternal. His business never ends. His factories never shut down, no turn off their "hands." The work of what men call "business" shall end at last. Its counting-house shall crumble away. Its factories shall cease their hum. Its fortunes shall be dissipated and disintegrated into worthless dust. Its great names shall be forgotten. "All that is in the world, the lust of the flesh, and the lust of the eyes, and the vainglory of life, is not of the Father, but is of the world. And the world passeth away, and the lust thereof: but he that doeth the will of God abideth forever." Forever!

The other night I asked a man how long he had been with his firm. "Thirty years," was the answer; "I went there when I was eleven." A good long term of service, that; but—"he that doeth the will of God abideth forever!" Here is the permanent engagement a man wants; the profitable one as well, with all employees stockholders, and never a dividend passed. Amen! God give us grace to engage in this business with all our heart!

Compensation in Christian Service

THE following is from an evangelistic address by Rev. W. E. Biederwolf: "Who does not understand that there are compensations in life of far greater intrinsic value than monetary considerations?

"I preached in a little town in Indiana one bitter day in January. Down before me about three seats from the front sat a little old man with his wife. They were hard-working Germans, but I could not account for the way they kept their eyes riveted on the preacher. Immediately as I pronounced the benediction the old man fairly dragged the little woman to the front, crying: 'Come on Katrina, here he is.' The old man took my hand and put it in the hand of his wife and then with his own he held them both and already the little old-fashioned woman's eyes were filled with tears, while the old man said: 'Katrina, this is the man; this is the man who saved our Jacob,' and looking up to me he said with trembling lips, 'This is the father and mother of Jacob Dexter.'

"Jacob Dexter had been a corporal down in Cuba and it had been my privilege to lead him to Christ. A little later, the smallpox with its deadly blight came into our regiment and already four of the boys had been carried into the quarantine tent to do battle there for life, and a nurse was needed. In the spirit of his new-found Master Jacob Dexter volunteered to go. I can see him yet as he stepped in and the folds of the tent closed behind him. One after another he nursed his companions through, but the price he paid was his own heroic life. And one day, when his spirit had gone into the skies, we took his body down to the quiet burial-place, to the music of the waves and the moaning of the palms and the bugle taps, and laid it beneath the red soil just up from the beach.

"And a year after, that humble German couple had driven fourteen miles through the cold and storm, that they might have one look upon the face of the man who had led their boy to Christ. And think you not, as I stood there while the old man's lips trembled and I felt the hot tears of that humble-hearted, grateful mother falling on my hand, that I was getting paid? Yes, I am getting paid. You make no mistake when you say it, although you do not mean it well. There's nothing pays like leading some one to Christ."

DAILY MEDITATION

FOR EVERY DAY IN THE YEAR, BASED ON THE WORDS OF JESUS

BY PROFESSOR W. H. T. DAU

SUNDAY, March 15. Luke 8: 5 and Matthew 13: 19. "A sower went out to sow his seed: and as he sowed, some fell by the wayside; and it was trodden down, and the fowls of the air devoured it." "When any one heareth the word of the kingdom, and understandeth it not, then cometh the wicked one, and catcheth away that which was sown in his heart. This is he which received seed by the wayside." Throughout this parable it is assumed that the sower does his work well: he scatters impartially the good seed of the divine Word. It is also to be noted that in this entire parable the declared enemies and manifest despisers of the Word, the open scoffers and infidels are not taken notice of. The parable deals only with people who come within the range of the preaching of God's Word. There is one class of hearers whose hearts are likened to a beaten path, a hard road, over which the traffic of the world passes unceasingly, and on whom the Word fails to make an impression. While they outwardly listen to the preaching, their thoughts are occupied with their everyday secular pursuits and vanities. Casting the seed of the divine Word into such hearts is like drawing a picture on the surface of a lake, or laying the foundation of a building in quicksand. The worldly mind, already more than overcharged with its own congenial thoughts of profit and loss, pleasure and frolic, vanity and conceit, malice and ill-will, and all that brood of blackbirds from the lower regions which inhabits the worldly mind of a selfish person, refuses to take in more, least of all the altogether uncongenial thoughts of God. We learn here that the devil is also a regular church-goer, and his business is chiefly with these people whose heart is like the hard-trodden ground. He snatches the Word from them before their mind has fully grasped its import. A wicked and worldly thought will suddenly dart through the mind while the person is listening to the preaching, and while he attends to this wicked thought he loses his hold on the truth.

MONDAY, March 16. Mark 4: 5, 6 and Matthew 13: 20, 21. "And some fell on stony ground, where it had not much earth; and immediately it sprang up, because it had no depth of earth: but when the sun was up, it was scorched; and because it had no root, it withered away." "But he that received the seed into stony places, the same is he that heareth the word, and anon with joy receiveth it; yet hath he not root in himself, but dureth for a while; for when tribulation or persecution ariseth because of the word, by and by he is offended."

A second class of hearers of God's word the Lord likens to stony ground. Beneath a thin layer of humus earth there is solid rock. Seeds sown into such ground are apt to germinate more quickly than in deep soil where the plant has a chance to grow downward more than upward. There are in the assemblies of Christians shallow listeners who are easily and readily impressed with certain features of Christianity and grow enthusiastic over the wisdom and the beauty of sayings of the Bible. They receive the Word with joy. But their old heart has not been crushed; when the demands which the religion of Jesus makes upon consistent followers—repentance from every sin, and faith in the divine forgiveness—reach the old hard nature in these people, they strike an impervious barrier to the growth of the little plant of temporary faith which had sprung up in them under their superficial meditations. When they are brought face to face with the practical consequences of faith, when they are told that they must live and do as they believe and speak, when they become aware of the sacrifices which they must make for Christ's sake and because of their Christian conscience, when the hot winds of the world's contempt and the nipping frosts of their former friends' displeasure descend on their feeble faith, the little plant withers and dies. They prove time-believers; they endure for a while, and fall away at the first serious tribulation.

TUESDAY, March 17. Mark 4: 7 and Luke 8: 14. "And some fell among thorns, and the thorns grew up, and choked it, and it yielded no fruit." "And that which fell among thorns are they which, when they have heard, go forth, and are choked with cares and riches and pleasures of this life, and bring no fruit to perfection."

Here we have the third class of unprofitable hearers of the Word. Their hearts have not been grubbed and weeded of the thorns and briars of natural appetites, such as avarice and love of worldly pleasure. When they hear the Word of God they are impressed with its lessons, and the divine truth produces in them a certain conviction for sin, and a desire for the righteousness of the children of God. They become believers. But their faith remains stunted and dwarfed, because they fail to renounce those things which choke the spiritual life that has been begun in them. They would like to be with God's people, but they are loath to renounce the world and the things that are therein: lust of the eyes, lust of the flesh, and the pride of life. As a consequence, they bring no fruit to perfection. Theirs is a half-hearted, sickly sort of Christianity. They have the form of godliness and they deny the power thereof. The brethren often wonder why it is that they are so lukewarm, so impassive, so timid. If the veil were drawn from their hearts, the cause would be revealed: they hate to have their pet sins uprooted.

WEDNESDAY, March 18. Mark 4: 8 and Luke 8: 15. "And other fell on good ground, and did yield fruit that sprang up and increased; and brought forth, some thirty, and some sixty, and some an hundred." "But that on the good ground are they, which in an honest and good heart, having heard the Word, keep it, and bring forth fruit with patience." The good ground! The good and honest hearts of such hearers as "hear the Word and keep it," represent the last class of hearers of God's Word in this striking parable. These people take in the divine truth in its full scope and admit its every bearing on their thoughts, volitions and desires. They accept its teaching whether it wounds or heals, casts down or lifts up, denounces or encourages. They lay hold of it with penitent sorrow and trusting confidence that it is the Word which is able to save them to the uttermost. With patience they continue hearing, reading, pondering, and practicing what they have heard. It is a slow process, and much patience is required; but they are making sure and steady progress under the direction of sanctifying grace. The harvest of righteousness which in due time is reaped from the hearts of true believers more than makes up for the loss from the three-fourths of the field that yield no fruit at all or no satisfactory fruit. According to the gifts of grace which the Spirit distributes to the Christians severally, according to the talents with which each has been endowed, and according to the opportunities furnished to each believer to labor for his Lord, there is a thirtyfold, sixtyfold, and hundredfold yield. One believer accomplishes that many times more than the callous, shallow. and half-hearted church member.

THURSDAY, March 19. Luke 8: 8, 16, 17, 18. "He that hath ears to hear, let him hear. No man when he hath lighted a candle, covereth it with a vessel, or putteth it under a bea; but setteth it on a candlestick, that they which enter in may see the light. For nothing is secret, that shall not be made manifest; neither anything hid, that shall not be known and come abroad. Take heed therefore how ye hear: for whosoever hath, to him shall be given; and whosoever hath not, from him shall be taken even that which he seemeth to have." The parable of the Sower is a lesson in hearing. Those who come within earshot of the divine Word have a great responsibility thrust upon them. God, who gave man the auditory organs and prepared the greatest message which ever enters the human mind by way of the ear or the eye, will consider all his labor wasted on those who have ears and hear not, eyes and see not, hearts and feel not the immense import of those things which God's Word declares to all, whether they be sinners or saints. Let every one ask himself: Why did God give me ears and eyes? And let those who mechanically go through the process of hearing take care how they hear. A great light has been kindled in the teaching of Jesus. This remarkable parable of the Sower in particular should arrest the attention of every man. This parable takes the cover from the secrets of many a nominal Christian's heart. It explains the reasons for many of the failures with which we meet in our church work. The revelation here made is of general application. A day is coming when the secrets of each individual hearer of the Word will be made known. He is a wise person who takes warning from this parable and receives its solemn teaching. He will increase his stock of spiritual knowledge and strength each time he hears the Word again. But he who refuses to heed this warning will lose even the little knowledge of divine matters which people think he has.

FRIDAY, March 20. Matthew 13: 13, 15. "Therefore speak I to them in parables: because they seeing see not; and hearing they hear not, neither do they understand. And in them is fulfilled the prophecy of Esaias, which saith, By hearing ye shall hear, and shall not understand; and seeing ye shall see, and shall not perceive: for this people's heart is waxed gross, and their ears are dull of hearing, and their eyes they have closed; lest at any time they should see with their eyes, and hear with their ears, and should understand with their heart, and should be converted, and I should heal them." "God would have all men to be saved and to come to the knowledge of the truth." He has given orders to preach the Gospel to all nations, to every creature. There can, therefore, be no previously conceived intention in the mind of God that men should not come to the knowledge of the truth. Our text states a consequence of human hardness of heart, not a purpose of the merciful Saviour who came to seek and save that which is lost. When men's hearts have waxed gross in worldliness, when their ears have been dulled by the din and noise of secular business, so that the still small voice fails to arrest their attention; when their eyes have been blinded by the glitter of the brilliant things of this life so that they do not behold the glory of God in the face of Jesus Christ; then it is that the happiest turns of the Lord's speech and the most picturesque presentations of the divine truth that can be made to them fails to impress them. Hearing they understand not, seeing they perceive not. "Unto us," says the writer to the Hebrews, "was the Gospel preached, as well as unto them: but the Word preached did not profit them, not being mixed with faith in them that heard it." God has only one Gospel which is able to save all. He will save by no other means. If men render his merciful ministrations of none effect by their callousness, it is their fault if the Gospel becomes to them a savor of death unto death.

SATURDAY, March 21. Matthew 13: 16, 17. "But blessed are your eyes, for they see: and your ears, for they hear. For verily I say unto you, That many prophets and righteous men have desired to see those things which ye see, and have not seen them; and to hear those things which ye hear, and have not heard them." The teaching of Jesus which proved to the Jews a stumbling-block and to the Greeks foolishness, which gave the rulers of the Jews occasion for cavil, proved a delight to the humble people who declared that never man spake like this man Jesus. A glorious season of grace had begun for every one in ancient Palestine when Jesus preached and wrought miracles. It was an opportunity for which David and Isaiah and all the prophets who had predicted the mission of the Christ would have envied the fishermen and publicans of Judea and Galilee. Our Lord encourages the devotion of his believing followers by telling them that they have chosen the better portion, though all the world should look with scorn on them and their beloved Teacher. They are blessed people, and the entire train of Israel's illustrious patriarchs and prophets would join in a chorus of jubilee and admiration, if they were to behold them in the company of Jesus. When the icy sneers and the chilling frowns of the would-be wise and self-righteous despisers of the Gospel in the high places of this world would freeze the ardor of our devotions, let us remember this estimate which Jesus places on the privilege of those who may hear his Word.

These Daily Meditations by Professor Dau will appear in each issue during 1914.

A WEEK IN THE WORLD'S NEWS

Enlarged Kiel Canal to Open

FOR about five years a huge army of workmen has been engaged in enlarging the German canal connecting the Baltic and North Seas on a scale that will exceed the Panama Canal in many respects. According to statements, the new canal is about sixty miles long and shortens the trip from Baltic ports to Hamburg nearly 500 miles and to London 269 miles. $35,000,000 have been spent on the improvements, and this great artificial waterway will probably be opened with imposing ceremonies early this spring.

Fighting to Save Ocean Grove

THE perennial bill to incorporate Ocean Grove as a borough is again before the New Jersey legislature, and its fate is in doubt. Dr. Aaron E. Ballard, the head of the Camp-Meeting Association, which has for so long controlled the famous resort, went to Trenton to combat the bill, or to be there "at the funeral, if Ocean Grove as an institution is to be killed."

For and Against the Fair

IF THE reports sent to the American press are authentic, the Italian Government has voted $400,000 for official participation in the Panama-Pacific Exposition, despite alleged dissatisfaction in Italy over the literacy test clause in the pending immigration bill. At the same time final and positive word is received that the British Government is irrevocably committed to non-participation in the exposition, a decision that is not at all popular throughout the empire, according to the press reports.

Special Reserve Banks

AT THE close of the sixty days within which every national bank was required to signify its intention of joining the new Federal Reserve system, over 99 per cent. of such banks had accepted the act, a total of 7,473, leaving ten not heard from and eighteen which refused. As to the latter it is stated that some are already in process of dissolution. The combined capital and surplus of the banks accepting is just under $2,000,000,000. It now remains to select the cities where will be located the regional reserve banks, the enrolment of State banks and trust companies eligible for membership who may apply, and the fixing of routine details before the new system can be launched. The report of the organization committee is daily expected.

Legislating for the Army

THE Army Appropriation Bill was reported out of the House Military Committee on February 16, carrying items amounting to $94,214,173, about ten millions less than asked for by Secretary of War Garrison. In reporting the bill, it was stated that the army has cost the country over a billion dollars in the last ten years, and that that arm of defense was never in better shape than at the present. The reduction of the appropriation will deprive the militia of the benefit of some three and a half millions chiefly intended for field artillery and ammunition; $250,000 was allowed for military aeronautics; an increase in the number of enlisted men from 77,500 to 85,000 was refused. The Secretary of War is advocating the revival of the grade of lieutenant general in the army, chiefly to give to the army officers equal standing with the vice-admirals of the navy.

Renewing Arbitration Treaties

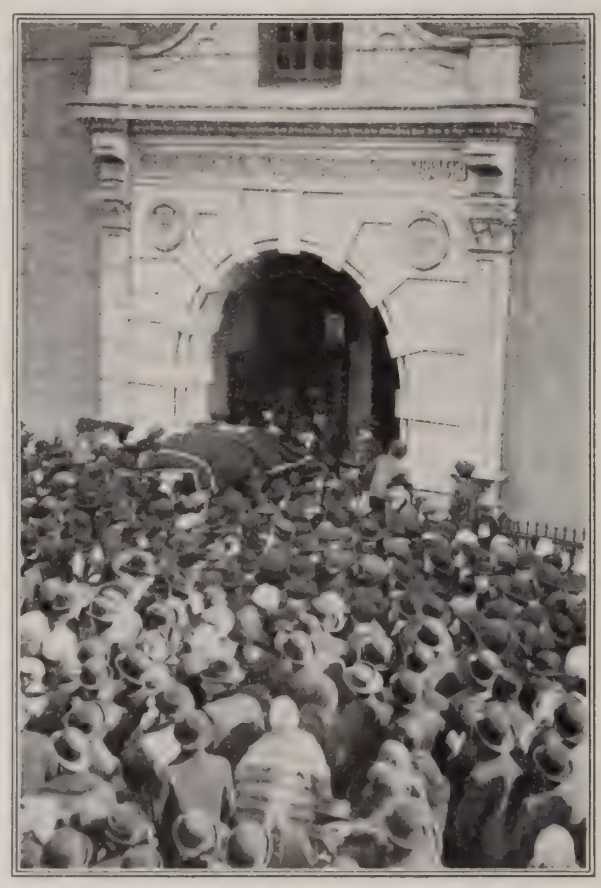
THE hotly contested battle in the Senate over the renewal of existing treaties with foreign nations ended February 20 in a complete victory for the administration by the ratification of treaties with eight nations, Great Britain, Spain, Norway, Sweden, Japan, Portugal, Switzerland and Italy, and the assurance that other similar treaties will be ratified as soon as sent to the Senate. This action was taken without roll call after the Senate had rejected an amendment looking to the exclusion from arbitration of questions of the character of the Panama tolls, by a vote of 10 to 15. Besides ending the tension which had existed in regard to these treaties the action of the Senate is taken to indicate the repeal of the toll exemption clause in the Panama Canal Act, and also serves to clear the international atmosphere, which had begun to grow a little cloudy.

Railroads Awaiting Rate Decision

DECISION by the Interstate Commerce Commission on the application of fifty-seven Eastern railroads for a five per cent. advance in freight rates has been disappointingly put off until September, with a possibility of an earlier ruling. The rumor prevails that the President is in favor of granting the advance in the interest of business in general, but this is not officially confirmed. Conductors and trainmen of the Northern Pacific have made a demand for increase in wages and other changes in working conditions, which may be followed by similar demands on other lines, but aggressive action to secure these changes will probably be deferred pending the decision of the Interstate Commerce Commission on the advance of rates.

Obey Remains in Marriage Service

A PROPOSAL to substitute the word "help" for "obey" in the Episcopal Church marriage service was defeated in the upper house of the Convocation of Canterbury, February 20. Considerable debate was given to the question, which in form was a tentative suggestion that both parties to the marriage contract should be addressed the same question in effect as "Wilt thou love, honor and help him?" The Bishop of Winchester intimated that the traditional authority for the use of the word "obey" scarcely justified its retention. The omission of the word, however, might leave the headship of the family uncertain, in the opinion of some. Bishop Lincoln, who was to introduce the proposal, finally asked permission to withdraw it from consideration, which was granted with "a chorus of approval."



BURIAL OF SACRED JEWISH SCROLLS IN A PHILADELPHIA CEMETERY

ALMOST the entire Hebrew colony in Philadelphia and many Jews from surrounding cities attended the burying of the sacred scrolls on a recent Sunday. The scrolls were damaged in a fire that destroyed a synagogue recently, and in accordance with the ancient Hebrew law in relation to such objects when outworn or otherwise rendered no longer usable, the remains of the sacred books were gathered together by the priests, placed in a coffin and carried to the cemetery in a hearse, followed by the mourners in carriages as in a regular funeral. At the cemetery the burial services were read by the rabbis and the remains of the sacred books consigned to the earth. This is one of the very few times such a ceremony has been performed in this country.

Temperance by Martial Law

THE governor of the State of Oregon, Oswald West, announces his intention to send Miss Fern Hobbs, his secretary, to the small town of Cove and "clean it up" in the manner Copperfield recently was set straight. The method there employed was to give Miss Hobbs an escort of three militiamen instructed to see that her orders were carried out. The saloon interests throughout Oregon have given the governor no end of trouble, and appear to have been able to secure the connivance of town and county officials for the open disregard of the law. Governor West is quoted as saying: "The thing which decided me to act in Cove was a letter from a woman who states that her husband is being ruined by drink, notwithstanding her appeals to the saloon men not to sell him liquor. The saloon interests have instituted damage suits against the governor, who asserts that a verdict in their favor would be the best monument he could desire.

Illinois Women Vote

ON FEBRUARY 24, the first opportunity for women to vote in Illinois brought less than one third of the registered women to the polls. More than 1,000 women served as election officers and were early at their places. The small vote is explained in part by unwillingness of the women to declare a political preference in a primary for the nomination of aldermen, which was the nature of this election. Mrs. Ariadne Pratt, ninety-one years old, was taken to the polling place in a wheeled chair, and Mrs. Eveline G. Dunn, ninety years old, said to have been at the convention that nominated Abraham Lincoln for President, also voted.

Notorious Murder Case Reopened

BY a vote of six to one, the New York Court of Appeals granted a new trial to ex-Police Lieutenant Charles Becker of New York City who was under death sentence in Sing Sing Prison for his alleged part in the murder of the gambler Herman Rosenthal on January 19, 1911. The decision is based on errors declared to have nullified the first trial, which was a sensational event. District Attorney Whitman is understood to intend to press the case for re-trial, though in the opinion of many the accused man may go free. The four gunmen convicted for the same crime have been sentenced to die in April, their appeal for a new trial having been denied.

Double-Shell Liner Launched

THE White Star liner Britannic, whose keel had just been laid when the Titanic sank, was ceremoniously launched at Belfast, Ireland, February 26. This 50,000-ton steamship was remodeled because of the Titanic disaster so as to give the vessel the advantage of every safety device possible, the most striking feature of which is an inner skin throughout the most vulnerable part of the hull. The Britannic is over 900 feet in length and is equipped with triple screws, and by reason of her extra bulkheads and double shell is considered to be practically unsinkable.

LARGEST GOOSE FARM IN THE WORLD

AT MANSFIELD, Ill., is the largest goose farm in the world, owned by William H. Firke, banker-farmer and "Goose King." In the fall of the year visitors may see a flock of ten thousand geese.

Mr. Firke's farm, which is almost a plantation and is sometimes called the "Goose City," is located just outside the city limits.

One of the surprises for visitors is the jail for bad tempered and unruly birds. A bird caught misbehaving is sentenced by Judge Firke, and while incarcerated gets all it can eat and drink until it is so fat it can scarcely waddle. But instead of being permitted to associate again with the self-respecting geese, the jail-bird is hustled off to the market.

There is also the goose hospital. Many of the geese are injured on their way to the farm, and a few others have the customary ailments of the tribe. "More than half of them are saved by the attention which is given in the hospital," states Mr. Firke, who believes that a hospital is a real necessity in the modern manner of handling poultry on a large scale. Mr. Firke's dealings with the geese have only to do with the fattening of them, very few being born on the large estate. Hatching geese is too slow a process for a man who wishes to make money fast. Mr. Firke's farm is a colossal fattening ground where the geese are kept on an average of only three weeks. They are received in carload lots from the South, principally Tennessee, young and gaunt, possessed of big frame and ravenous appetite; round and fat they are shipped three weeks later to the New York market, which is the best in the world.

The goose magnate states that he makes more money from his geese in a few weeks than he does from his bank in a year. The average goose costs him about seventy cents, and later sells in New York City for $1.70. The feed of the bird during its stay on the farm costs about thirty cents, and the freight bill is twenty cents more, leaving a profit of fifty cents on each bird; and Mr. Firke handled more than fourteen thousand geese last season.

A SMALL SECTION OF THE GOOSE CITY

Plenty of shelled corn and fresh water is the diet on which geese thrive. The first two weeks on the farm they are allowed to graze in the fields, but the final week they are kept closely housed and fed all the corn they will consume. Each of the houses has a concrete floor, is well lighted, has good ventilation and is connected with a farm watering system. They are not heated, as the geese, when protected from the weather, can withstand a temperature of twenty degrees below zero.

Late in the summer of each year Mr. Firke's buyer spends several months in the hills of Kentucky and Tennessee, where goose raising is an important industry. There the geese are purchased, some here, some there, but scarcely ever in lots of more than a hundred. Sometimes the geese are assembled in places remote from a railroad and must be driven miles before they can be loaded. The driving is comparatively easy, but before the long march over the rough and rugged roads is started, the geese must be shod. Rough roads will make even a goose footsore. Shoeing geese is a simple matter to the goose raiser. The birds are driven over soft tar or pitch, and then onto beds of fine sand. The sand and tar forms a soothing mixture and affords great protection to the feet on the long marches.

Like many other fortunes. Mr. Firke's wealth had its origin in thrift. He commenced work as a laborer on a farm near Mansfield for $22 per month, and by strict economy saved $200 the first year. He invested his money in Illinois land, worked like a beaver, and now has his reward.

"SCRIMP"

BY BERTHA HELEN CRABBE

HOW Scrimp's cheery whistling rang through the house that morning as she hobbled about on her crutches, helping the children to dress! What wonderful stories she told in between the whistling when she was forced to pause for breath!

"And this very, very morning I will enter the wonderful palace!"

"Then will you be changed to a beautiful princess without crutches and without a hump on your back?" Molly asked eagerly.

Scrimp was silent for a moment, then her voice rang out strong and clear, "Bless me, no, child, but when I enter this palace, there I will find book after book waiting for me; waiting just for me! Think of it! And I will find the magic key that opens every single one and—"

"Huh, books!" Susie interrupted contemptuously, 'they ain't nothin' to find in a palace; just old study books!"

"Oh, but each book is the door that opens into a wonderful, enchanted country!" Scrimp explained eagerly as she pulled Bobbie's stockings up over his plump little legs.

"Ouch, your hands is cold, Scrimp!" Bobbie wriggled out of Scrimp's reach.

"Sit still like a good boy, Bobbie. S'pose I should be late! Susie, you run and look at the clock again. Only half-past six? Dear me, how slow the time goes! Come, now we're ready to go down stairs."

In the kitchen, a tall, thin woman with tense, nervous face, moved about the breakfast table, waiting upon her husband and son. When she heard the click of Scrimp's crutches upon the bare stairs, she said appealingly, "Now, don't either of you say anythin' to Scrimp against her goin' to high school; she's so happy about it, she don't know what to do."

With his mouth full of bread, Mr. Gillen mumbled indistinctly, "Fool notion! She'd ought to be workin' in the fact'ry. A few more dollars a week with this big fam'ly—"

"You just hush right where you are, Sam Gillen! You'd ought to be ashamed to even think of sendin' a poor little twisted mite like her to work in the fact'ry! Not another word out of you!" then in softer tone, "Just hear her whistlin'!"

The children came running into the room, eager for their breakfast. Scrimp followed more slowly. Her whistle ceased abruptly when she saw her father and brother. She moved quietly about the kitchen, helping to pack the dinner pails. Her hands trembled with excitement, her eyes shone.

When he had finished eating, Mr. Gillen put on his coat and cap, and taking his dinner pail walked out of the house without a word. His son followed more slowly, passing for an instant at Scrimp's side to say sarcastically, "Hear you're goin' to high school, Scrimp. Expect to enter college next year?"

"Don't you tease her, Will." Mrs. Gillen's voice was sharp. "Go on to work."

Will's sullen face hardened. "Yes, go to work," he muttered, "that's all a fellow hears from mornin' till night; work, work, work." He gave Scrimp a rough little push and went shambling after his father.

Mrs. Gillen walked over to the window to watch him go. Her tense face twisted into a deeper frown. "He's gettin' that same shif'less slouch that they all have," she murmured to herself, "but I don't know what to do about it." She turned away with a hopeless sigh. "I've ironed your blue dress, Scrimp," she said, "and there's your hair ribbons over the back of the chair."

"Oh, mother, do you think it's time to change my dress, now?" Scrimp asked tremulously.

"You might as well be ready. The trolley leaves eight sharp, and you don't walk real fast."

The children stood around admiringly while Scrimp changed her dress and fixed her hair. This was a wonderful day for the Gillen family; this day when Scrimp was to go for the first time to that superior place of learning called a high school. There were not many children of that factory town who could even boast of being "graduated," which expression meant to them the completion of the eight grades of the grammar school, and to think that little Scrimp had not only "graduated" but was actually going to attend the high school at Callenville! Already, to her family she was as one set apart from the common people of life; one held but a bit lower in their estimation than those people of exalted learning, called teachers!

"I—I can hardly believe it's true!" Scrimp cried breathlessly as she tried to tie her hair ribbons with hands that would tremble, "I thought I'd have to go to the fact'ry like the other girls, and now—and now— Oh, it's so wonderful, so wonderful! Why, some day, mother, some day suppose—suppose I should know enough to be a teacher!" Scrimp's voice fell almost to a whisper upon that last word. She was frightened at the very idea of having voiced such a presuming thought.

"I bet you could, Scrimp," Susie said admiringly. "I bet you could be right now; you know so much!"

"Oh, Susie, child, I don't either. Why, I don't know hardly anything. But I'm going to learn; you just bet I'm going to learn and learn and learn, and maybe, some day—" Her eyes grew bright with dreams. "Oh, isn't it wonderful, wonderful!" she cried with a little catch in her voice. "Think of all the heaps and heaps and heaps of books waiting just for me and—"

"Now, Scrimp, you'll get all tired out just thinkin' about it," Mrs. Gillen interrupted; "you got to take one thing at a time and not try to do everything to once. There now, see how crooked you tied that ribbon and how rough your hair is. I guess them teachers won't think much of you that way." Mrs. Gillen smoothed the girl's hair and re-tied the faded ribbons. "My land, Scrimp," she said, "nobody'd ever think you was sixteen, you ain't a day bigger'n twelve."

"I'm clear up to her eyebrow," Susie put in importantly.

"Oh, mother, you don't s'pose they'll think I'm too small and won't let me in?" Scrimp's eyes were full of anxiety. "I'll tell them it's because that hump on my back sort of doubles me up. Oh, you do s'pose they'll take me?"

"Sure they will; now don't you worry, child. Have you got a clean han'kerchief? There, here's your dinner pail. You be sure and eat a good dinner, Scrimp, and be careful gettin' on and off the trolley. Good-by, we'll be lookin' for you on the four o'clock car."

"Good-by, mother, good-by, Susie and Molly and Bobbie! Oh, I'm so happy, I'm all shaking and shivering inside!"

Mrs. Gillen peered anxiously down into Scrimp's thin little face. "Here, Scrimp, you let Susie go to the corner with you to carry your dinner pail."

And so Scrimp started off, but she had gone only a few steps when she turned and called, "Mother, you don't s'pose they'll call me Scrimp to the high school, do you? It always makes the hump on my back so heavy when folks call me Scrimp!"

Mrs. Gillen looked at her in bewilderment for an instant. "Land, no," she said, "they'll call you Marietta just like they done to the school here." And long after the bent little figure had hobbled out of sight, Mrs. Gillen stood staring out of the window, murmuring over and over, "Marietta, Marietta, Marietta," as though she were gradually realizing the significance of an unfamiliar word.

Will Justice Be Done?

IT IS always a misfortune when, through some legal fault or mischance, a great crime is permitted to go unpunished. When it became known that the New York Court of Appeals had reversed the conviction and sentence of ex-Police Lieutenant Charles Becker, who was tried for being accessory to the murder of Herman Rosenthal, the gambler, the public experienced a distinct shock of surprise.

The whole case against Becker was so strong, and the evidence which had been introduced showing the corrupt relations with the criminal class of the "system" he represented was so convincing, that it was regarded as a practical impossibility that there could have been any mistake in procedure. Now, the highest court of review in the State reverses the verdict, and District Attorney Whitman announces a new trial. The Appellate Court does not really touch the question of the guilt or innocence of the accused, but simply the faults in procedure. It is held that through these faults the prisoner was deprived of the protection which our laws accord even to the worst criminal, giving assurance of a fair and unbiased trial. Everybody remembers the trial of Becker. It was as though a whirlwind of justice had overtaken the bold and reckless offender, whose crime was so convincingly proved that even the gunmen did not attract so much attention as this man who, after years of unsuspected complicity with lawlessness, had at last been overtaken and exposed.

Now we are to go through all the labor and expense of a new trial, which will cost many thousands of dollars to the taxpayers. Let us hope that the faults of the first proceeding may be avoided, that the "atmosphere" may be strictly regulated according to the requirements of judicial fairness, that clamor may be excluded and that out of it all may come real justice.

Prayers for a Prisoner

HOW would you feel if you were in prison and knew that on a certain day thousands of people were praying for your release? This strange experience will be given to Baron Yun Chi Ho, the great Christian leader of Korea, on Sunday, March 22, when the members of the Epworth Leagues of the Methodist Church and the Methodist Church, South, are to study the story of his life and unite their petitions at the throne of God for his release.

In all of this there seems a striking reminder of Pentecostal days when Peter was imprisoned and "prayer was made without ceasing by the church unto God for him." Baron Yun has been a true apostle, and his story is as thrilling as any tale of adventure, heroism, suffering, opposition, triumph and fresh disaster that has ever been told. The story is interesting also because it has not yet ended. The last chapters remain to be written. And it is still more interesting because we may, personally and individually, have something to do with its ending. When the prayers of a multitude are asked for, every prayer counts. Let all Christians unite with these young people in praying for the restoration to freedom and to opportunities of service of this knight of the Cross, whose services to Christ's kingdom can so ill be spared.

The Literacy Test Again

AN IMPRESSIVE incident took place in Chicago on Washington's birthday, when three thousand aliens at a public gathering took the final oath of allegiance as citizens of the United States. It was probably the most unique and inspiring "coming out" party on record. They represented many different nationalities, but all were inspired with the same desire to become citizens of the great republic, and when with hands uplifted they swore loyalty to the flag and constitution, and obedience to the government and laws, there was not a voice raised among the spectators questioning the desirability of these new additions to our national household, nor did any speaker hint at the need of a literacy test to decide their acceptance.

In the public discussion which has been stirred up by the proposed literacy test in the immigration bill now before Congress, many interesting things are coming to the surface which strongly support the view expressed in THE CHRISTIAN HERALD that such a test is a very doubtful expedient as a means of determining a man's qualifications for American citizenship. As long ago as 1821, similar objections to those now urged against all immigrants from various lands were raised in opposition to the German, English, Irish and Scandinavian immigration. In a recent address before the New York University Forum, Dr. Louis Marshall pointed out that the commissioner of the United States Department of Education had reported that there is far less illiteracy found among the children of immigrants than is generally supposed. Then he proceeded to the further argument, which is not to be set aside. "Illiteracy," the speaker continued, "does not affect a man's working power when he digs your subways, builds your aqueducts, and works on your railroad building. Certainly illiterate immigrants are far more capable of doing that work than immigrants from Oxford and Cambridge, or from the Sorbonne, or from the University of Heidelberg."

A Pioneer Profit-Sharer

THAT kind of practical philanthropy which takes the form of profit-sharing did not begin with Henry Ford. There have been many instances of its successful introduction, on a good-sized scale, within the last ten years and some even earlier. One of the most notable of the pioneer philanthropists of this class was Joseph Fels, the wealthy manufacturer who died in Philadelphia on February 22, and whose profit-sharing experiments antedate Ford's by many years. He was a big-hearted, clear-headed Virginian, well educated and with views far ahead of his day and generation. Partner with his brothers in a large manufacturing business, he began to divide the profits several years ago, making a start the first year by distributing $50,000 among the employees as their share, a sum which was increased afterwards as business permitted. He did not, however, confine his energies to a single line of action, for Mr. Fels was many-sided. He was an ardent advocate of political reforms and devoted a considerable part of his large income to schemes for the social, industrial and political betterment of workers' conditions. It was not alone his wealth that spoke for the sincerity of his purpose, though he gave to these philanthropic objects $100,000 a year; he labored incessantly, lecturing, traveling and writing, to make his dreams come true, to transform hope into reality. The world has known but little of Joseph Fels, but the lesson of his life, so full of energy and broad-minded, intelligent helpfulness, should not be overlooked or forgotten.

Head Knowledge and Experience

AN OLD sailor related to a friend an incident of his attempt to get a commission as sailing-master in the navy at the outbreak of the Civil War. He was a young man then, but he had for some years been master of a sailing vessel and had navigated many seas. When he presented himself before the examining board, one of the graduates of Annapolis questioned him: "Do you know how to calculate lunars?" "Yes, sir." "Will you tell us how you would use a lunar observation if you thought you were near a dangerous shore?" "Yes, sir. I should take a lunar observation and put it on my log-slate; then I should go on deck, and stay there, using the lead as faithfully as I knew how until morning, when I should hope to get sight of the sun."

It happened that the chairman of the board was an old merchant sailor, and he said, "You are right, young man. I have often filled both sides of my slate with calculations of lunar observations, and thought they were correct; but in case of danger I have left my calculations on the slate, and have gone on deck and trusted to the soundings until we got an observation of the sun."

Head knowledge is good, and the learning of the schools by no means to be despised. It may lead us into assurance of the truth of the Bible and the divine origin of Christianity. It may bring satisfaction to the intellect, and its conclusion may seem incontestible. But not on these in the time of real trial or spiritual danger does the believer depend, if he has been much upon the sea of life. Then he forgets the arguments that convinced his reason, and leaves on the shelf the wonderful findings of scholarship in support of the old Gospel. These have their value, of course, and he is glad to use them when in safe waters; but he does not want them now. He goes apart and sounds the depths of his experience; he takes the testimony of his own heart to the faithfulness of God, the sufficiency of his grace and the power of Christ's resurrection. Thus communing with himself, he waits—if he must wait—till he gets sight of the Sun of righteousness. Then, when the gracious beams flood his soul, he knows where he is, and all is well. "He hath the witness in himself." Better than all the rest is the argument from experience.

General Notes

—AN UNCONFIRMED rumor comes from Vienna of the capture of two American citizens by Albanian brigands. One of them, a missionary, is said to have been killed by his captors. The report is that both of the Americans were engaged actively in distributing relief near Elbasan.

—THE "ARSON SQUAD" of the militant suffragettes in Great Britain has turned its attention to the burning of churches. In the destruction of the historic church of Whitekirk, Dunbar, Scotland, on February 26, there was involved the loss of many precious Scriptural relics from the Holy Land, which had been in the possession of the church for the last eight hundred years.

—TO MAKE a successful war on the fly pest, which reaches its maximum in midsummer, the campaign ought to begin now. The Merchants' Association of New York has issued a bulletin strongly urging that war on the pest should start in the winter, when the hibernating fly, which is the prolific ancestor of the summer swarm, can be easily destroyed. "The progeny of a single pair of flies," says the bulletin, "assuming that all live, if pressed together at the end of the summer, would occupy a space of over 14,000,000,000 cubic feet!"

—A NEW CHAPTER has been written in the history of Antarctic exploration by Dr. Douglas Mawson, a young Australian, who set out from Tasmania, December 2, 1911, with fifty men, and has now returned after accomplishing much that he had undertaken to do and some things not on his program. The chief object of the expedition was to explore a vast unknown section of the south polar region known as the Australian quadrant. A great deal of important geographical and other scientific information was obtained, and immense collections of objects were brought back. The work was conducted by three divisions, Dr. Mawson, Lieutenant Ninnis and Dr. Mertz forming one party, and almost at its outset Lieutenant Ninnis perished in a bottomless crevasse, the sledge of supplies also falling in. The two men then faced a return journey of over a hundred miles, in the progress of which Dr. Mertz died of starvation and Dr. Mawson was saved only by the unexpected finding of a food cache. This heroic and thorough expedition has doubtless enriched human knowledge, and has given new names to the empire's roll of honor.

A JOY IN THE HOME

I received your kind communication, and wish to thank the donor very, very much. I am sure THE CHRISTIAN HERALD brings no more joy than it does in my home, where it has been the means of answering prayers for years. I just couldn't live without it now for its good influence on my husband. I pray God's blessing on each copy, and hope they may prove to others as much good as to us. Again thanking you for THE CHRISTIAN HERALD and The Christian Herald Almanac for 1914, I remain,

Government Reindeer in Alaska

UP TO ten years ago the United States Government had imported into Alaska 1,280 reindeer. They have grown to be 35,000, and experts say there is range and food enough for ten million of these animals. The government's local superintendent has contributed to a Chicago cattle paper facts that are of intense interest about the Alaska reindeer industry. The deer are distributed to promising young natives who act as apprentices for four years. At the end of the first year the apprentice receives four female and two male deer; the second year, five females and three males; third year, six females and four males; fourth year, six females and four males. In addition he receives for the first three years provisions to the amount of $150, $100 and $50, respectively. The native becomes the absolute owner of the deer only after the four years of apprenticeship. The reindeer live during the short summer months on coarse grass and weeds and on the foliage and fresh shoots of willows and other bushes. In the long winter they subsist on moss, which with feet and horns they dig out of the snow. The average reindeer is broken to harness at two years of age and will draw his master and 150 pounds besides forty or fifty miles a day. He is driven five or six years, till his speed becomes slower, and then he is butchered, his hide making the warmest possible clothing for an Arctic winter, and his body the most palatable and nutricious food. If what is claimed is true, then the question of the meat supply of the nation will have been greatly aided in its solution. In Palestine they did not have the hardy reindeer which required cold and snow, but there lived there many varieties of the deer family. Venison was prized as a choice article of food by the people. We find these words in the Scriptures:

These are the beasts which ye shall eat: . . . the hart, and the roebuck, and the fallow deer. (Deut. 14: 4, 5.)

Thackeray's Letters

A NOTABLE collection of letters from Thackeray, the famous English author, to freinds, were sold at auction in New York on February 25 for a total of $8,877.50. These letters, although signed simply with the great author's initials and undated, are now regarded as a literary treasure, as they deal with affairs of the heart and affections and show the author's mind on these subjects. A very large price is sometimes paid by curiosity hunters for the possession of the intimate correspondence of great authors who have passed away; yet it is a question whether any of the letters of this class have exerted a thousandth part of the influence of a single line from the pen of the aged apostle, who, with failing eyesight and trembling fingers, wrote to his friends in words of love and encouragement:

You see how large a letter I have written unto you with mine own hand. (Gal. 6: 11.)

Officer Slain in Duel

A FATAL duel, in which an advocate named Babocsay shot his brother-in-law, First Lieutenant Hajdn, a military airman, occurred at Budapest on February 20. Babocsay and his wife had a serious quarrel over a new hat, and she called her soldier brother to the rescue. Babocsay made some insulting remarks, which the officer resented. Hajdn's superior officer, hearing of the affair, commanded him to fight for the honor of his uniform. The duel, which was kept secret, took place at Budapest on Friday. Babocsay hit and killed his brother-in-law. Frau Babocsay, horrified at hearing of her brother's death, attempted suicide and was taken to an asylum. New hats are very close to some women's hearts. Many family troubles grow out of as trifling causes as the disagreement about a new hat. What honor was maintained for the family or the Austrian army by this shameful butchery? Fortunately, duelling, so common in the past, is now counted as a relic of barbarism. Many of the wars of history, with their wholesale massacres, have grown out of causes as trifling as the quarrel over a hat. These individual and national murders have been in disobedience of the command:

Thou shalt not kill. (Ex. 20: 13.)

Save Boys From Drowning

TWO policemen had a narrow escape from drowning recently when they jumped into the freezing waters of Jamaica Bay at Rockaway Beach to rescue two little boys who were being carried out toward the sea on a floe of ice by a swift tide. The little fellows huddled in the center of the cake and cried for help. One of the companions ran to the police station a few blocks away, and Patrolmen Timothy O'Connor, James Manning, and Hugh O'Donnell ran to the pier. O'Connor and O'Donnell plunged instantly into the water and started to swim out to the boys, and tried to steer the ice cake back to the dock. O'Connor was so overcome with the cold that he began to sink. O'Donnell, just behind him, swam back to the pier with him. O'Donnell then went back after the boys. Fighting his way through the ice he reached them, and pushed the cake on which they stood back to the pier, when, from shock of cold and exhaustion, he completely collapsed, and but for the relief afforded by other policemen he would have perished. Some policemen are spoiled by temptation and by corrupt political leaders, but as a rule they are true as steel and pure as gold, risking their lives freely for the property and life of the community.

Neither count I my life dear unto myself. (Acts 20: 24.)

War Veterans Devoted Friends

IT HAD been planned that the flag above the Soldiers' Home at Kearney, N. J., should fly at the top of its mast on Washington's Birthday, but it flew from half-mast. In the morgue of the Home, under another flag, there lay the bodies of two old men, both veterans of the Civil War and intimate friends since they met at Gettysburg in 1863. The two men were John DeForest, seventy, who belonged to the hospital corps, and Michael Clark, seventy-eight, of the infantry, who was wounded at Gettysburg and nursed back into life by DeForest. After the war they kept up the intimacy of their friendship by correspondence. About fifteen years ago Clark went from New Brunswick, N. J., to the Soldiers' Home at Kearney, and DeForest, who lived in Iowa, to the Soldiers' Home in Marshalltown, that State. Three years ago DeForest was transferred to the Home at Kearney, and the two old chums were inseparable and perfectly happy. Clark became very ill and his friend insisted on nursing him, but could not save him. The hand of death that laid low his friend struck him very hard. As they were taking the body of Clark to the morgue he ran ahead to open the door, and fell dead in the open doorway just as his friend's body reached it. On the next day they covered the two coffins with one flag and buried them in graves side by side.

They were lovely and pleasant in their lives, and in their death they were not divided. (II Sam. 1: 23.)

PANAMA CANAL OPENING SOON

COLONEL GEORGE W. GOETHALS, president of the Panama Canal Commission and the appointed governor of the Canal Zone, went to Washington recently to appear before the Appropriation Committees of Congress in regard to the annual canal budget. He is anxious that the $2,000,000 provided in the urgent deficiency bill be granted without any halt or delay, as it will be necessary to secure the completion of the canal and its opening for commercial purposes by July 1. The finishing of the canal by that date will depend on the progress made in clearing the Cucaracha slide and getting the force of pilots and canal operators trained for the duties of taking the ships from ocean to ocean. But Colonel Goethals promises to be ready on July 1. Speaking of the reorganization of the canal government, Colonel Goethals said that no wholesale reduction of the force would be made on April 1, and that there would be no change of administration except that the governor and not the commission would be at the head of affairs. Artillerymen who are now in the temporary camp at Corozal, Panama, will man the guns of the canal fortifications. The canal will not only promote in a marvelous degree the commerce of the world, but also in as great a measure the establishment of Christ's kingdom in the earth in fulfilment of the promise: "He shall have dominion also from sea to sea, and from the river unto the ends of the earth." (Ps. 72: 8.)

Mouse and Girl

A TELEPHONE girl in one of the villages at her task late the other night saw what she thought was a mouse dart across the floor. She stood upon a chair and silently watched. Sure enough, it was a real mouse eating crumbs from the luncheon she had been eating. She began to scream hysterically and ran to a closet in which she had hung her wraps and shut the door. It had a spring lock, and she called and cried in vain for help till morning. Meanwhile the calls on the telephone were unanswered, and the whole telephone system of the community was tied up by the little mouse. How much trouble a little mouse can make in the realm of matter and mind! The girl ought to have known that the mouse was more afraid of her than she could have been of it. What terror her shrieks must have given it! The closet into which she fled for safety was very likely the home of the mouse. The old-fashioned girl's scream and spasm of fear over a mouse or toad or beetle or some harmless creature has given place to an era of level-headed, self-reliant, brave girls and young women. The average telephone girl is one of the most quick-witted and courageous of this class of persons. Courage to meet real as well as imaginary dangers in the material and spiritual world is necessary to character and efficient conduct. The divine injunction is:

Be strong and of good courage, fear not, nor be afraid of them. (Deut. 31: 6.)

Floods in Southern California

SOUTHERN CALIFORNIA was swept by a flood following a downpour which started Tuesday, February 17, and yielded from six to eight inches of rain in the thirty-two hours ending Thursday morning. In some parts of the city of Los Angeles the water was ten feet deep. Many of the streets were navigated by boats. In the submerged districts houses were thrown down, orange groves were ruined, and railroad travel was suspended. At Covina, in the fruit-growing section, the body of Harold Seitz, a rancher, was found. Only a few hundred feet from him was found the body of Miss Sue Beville, one of the best women orange-growers in California. The body of Emmet Osterman, a thirteen-year-old boy, drowned at Santa Barbara, it is thought, was carried out to sea. Floods are the type of earthly afflictions. The strickened districts of California can take up the words of the psalmist:

I am come into deep waters, where the floods overflow me. (Ps. 69: 2.)

MORE HELPERS FOR CHINA'S ORPHANS

PRAYERS and fervent hope for the welfare of the 1,000 little China orphans now in care of the missionaries are the feature of almost all the letters we are now receiving from readers who are helping the Fund for the support of the destitute children. Many of the contributions represent real sacrifice on the part of the senders, as the letters show. It is encouraging to note the widespread interest in this beautiful child-saving and child-training work. Experience has shown that a very considerable proportion of the heathen children trained in Christian missions grow up to be thorough Christians and, whatever their vocation in life, they become earnest disseminators of the Gospel among their own people. Among the children already trained in these missions, there are many who are now successful soul-winners, doing earnest work for the conversion of others. Thus, every contributor to the Orphan Fund can have the satisfaction of knowing that he or she is not only becoming the means, under divine blessing, of bringing one young soul out of heathen darkness into light, but of training and equipping a worker who may bring many others into the kingdom.

We know of no better missionary work than this among the orphan children of China. On humanitarian grounds alone it has a strong claim upon the sympathy of all good men and women; on the spiritual side it is even tenfold stronger. We earnestly wish that every reader of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD would take the case of the orphan children of China to his heart and make it his own. From the letters received this week we make the following extracts:

A. R. P. Sabbath School, Chester, S. C., sends $20 for the China Orphan work, and the sender adds: "This sum is made up of lots of nickels and brownies from little fellows in our Sabbath school. They readily responded when the appeal was made."

"I am sending you $2 for our two little boys, six and seven years old," writes W. D. F., Maxwell, Iowa. "They have wanted to send some to help the China Orphans, and of course we are interested in them also."

L. L. D., Tallahassee, Fla., writes: "I send you 50 cents for the China Orphan Fund. I would send more, but I am a poor veteran, seventy-six years old, and I promised the Lord I would send as much as I could. I hope it may help some."

J. D. P., Cassville, N. Y., writes: "Up to last December I spent on an average about $1 a month for tobacco and cigars. One day while plowing, it occurred to me that I could put that money to better use, so then and there I resolved to sacrifice that craving, and thus far the money has been sent to some worthy cause. This month the China Orphans get the benefit of it, so I enclose $1, hoping that it will do good to some poor boy or girl in China, who, no doubt, needs this help."

ORPHANAGE GIRLS DEPENDENT UPON THE GIFTS OF CHRISTIAN HERALD READERS

Mrs. W. D., Caledonia, Ont., writes: "I received the booklet, Abused Leaf, and I thank you for it and am enclosing $5 for the Orphan Fund to help a little girl or boy. May God's blessing go with it. Will you kindly send a booklet to Mrs. W. J. B.?"

"I trust many may respond to your appeals for these poor little forsaken ones," is the prayer of Anna W.. Cobourg, Canada, who sends $1 for the Fund.

Reader, Whitewater, Wis., writes: "I am inclosing post office order for twenty dollars to pay for one year's care for a China orphan girl. This is a thank offering to the Lord's work, for the life of my dear husband, who was spared after a dreadful accident last year. Please give this credit to the missionary society of the Union Church at Koshkonong, Wis., to which I belong. If possible I should like to hear from this child from time to time, that we may be inspired to continue her support. A few copies of the little book entitled Little Hai Ieh Tsi would be acceptable to our society."

M. H. D., Seattle, Wash., writes: "Inclosed find twenty dollars to be used in helping the China Orphan Fund. May the Lord's blessing go with it. I hope to be able to keep up a contribution until one more has been equipped to tell the story of Jesus to many others."

Mrs. S. A. W., Belcross, N. C.: "Inclosed find check for $2.67. I wish I could make it more. I sold a few chickens for this amount. I wish all would give, so that you could help many."

All contributions should be addressed "China Orphan Fund, CHRISTIAN HERALD, Bible House, New York." Every gift, however small, will be applied to the support of the orphans for the coming quarter. The cause is urgent. Send an offering to-day as liberal as your means will permit.

AMONG THE WISCONSIN LUMBERMEN

TWENTY-EIGHT below zero, on the anniversary of Lincoln's birthday, and a visit to the lumber camps! Such was my experience on the 12th of February. Mr. I'm not a regular lumberjack missionary, but since the Presbyterian Church of Athens, of which I am pastor, is in the timber belt of Wisconsin, quite time is spent each winter in lumber-camp evangelism. Several hundred men are in the camps within a distance of fifteen miles of Athens.

My occasional experience in the lumber camps, covering a period of over ten years and in several counties of north-central Wisconsin, has led me to love those visits to the camps. By far the largest number are farmers and the sons of farmers who spend the winters of logging. They are the most dependable men. The professional "lumberjack" is of a roving disposition, and can hardly wait for the camp to "break up" in the spring, so that he may in a few days squander his hard-earned wages of the long winter months. And then there are the foreigners. Some of these are recent immigrants. They have heard of the good wages paid and the steady work offered for the winter, and so they come from our large cities to the woods. In one camp this winter I discovered there were Austrians, Germans, Swiss, Poles, Bohemians, and Scandinavians. I distributed good literature printed in five foreign languages. In a camp of eighty men one will sometimes find two or more nationalities represented.

The lumberman is often more sinned against than sinning. These sons of toil are generally big-hearted men in the rough. They have their many shortcomings, but stinginess and downright selfishness are not usually among them. The most reckless, roving lumberjack is a free-handed, open-hearted fellow. He will share the comforts of his woolly sleeve with another, and almost give his last dollar to help some unfortunate fellow. When holding a Gospel service in a camp, as a rule I take up no collection, for often on their own initiative they will make up an offering to which nearly all will "chip in."

In the isolation of the lumber camp little or no provision is made for the social recreation of the men, the overcrowded camps are often unsanitary, a man has no chance to take a bath all winter, and there is an absence of uplifting moral influences.

It is with the endeavor to help these men within my reach that I visit the lumber camps, distribute good literature and comfort bags among them, and hold religious services with them. In this I have been helped somewhat by the young people of my church. Taking a young man with me, I went to a camp one evening and, after a hearty supper, we made preparation for holding a Gospel service. The foreman of the camp readily gave his consent. I discovered that a young man of the camp had a violin. He consented to play. But after the service opened I discovered that even the simplest Gospel hymns were unfamiliar to him. All that he could play was some rag-time music. I sang some Gospel hymns. A show of the hands upon my request indicated that many of the men understood the German language better than the English, so a brief address was given in German, followed with a Gospel camp talk in English, and closed with song. The men gave respectful attention.

Among the papers and magazines distributed among the lumbermen, THE CHRISTIAN HERALD is always a welcome friend. Its pleasing illustrations and interesting articles make it attractive. Some years ago I read the testimony of a lumberman who said that he owed his conversion under God to a sermon read in THE CHRISTIAN HERALD, while in a lumber camp, and since then I have distributed many copies of this paper in the camps, together with other good literature.

Copies of the New Testament and Gospel portions are freely distributed, many of which will be carried away in the lumberman's "turkey"—traveling bag when the camps break up in spring, and again possibly read when far away from the lumber camp. The comfort bags containing needles and thread, assortment of buttons, and other helpful necessities, together with cotton and lint for bandages, given to the men are much prized by them, and are appreciated as a token of practical Christianity. REV. C. F. GEIGER.

WHEN TROUBLE TROUBLES YOU

BY MARGARET E. SANGSTER, JR.

THE world was gloomy, disagreeable, full of sorrow—that is, the City world. Everybody had a million troubles and usually a cold in the head. It was warm for winter time and heavy fur coats were sloppy, needless things. Nobody loved anybody else and everybody grumbled to his neighbor. Motormen and trolley cars swore at the expressman whose wagons blocked the street; elevator men growled when you kept the car waiting a moment, and the middle-aged woman snapped out, "You'd oughter be careful," when you bumped into her while going full speed around a corner. It was not a nice world.

Then the snow came. Heavy, crystal white flakes hurried to the ground and melted and froze tight to the pathways. Huge drifts piled up on the sidewalks and huger drifts filled up the roads. The homeless ones shivered and died, and the tiny babies cried through purple lips. Trolley cars and express wagons alike were blocked, and taxis did not dart about.

One would suppose that the cross, unloving world grew more cross and unloving under these circumstances. It came as a great surprise to me to find out that everybody seemed happier and more friendly. The motormen, instead of swearing at the truck that blocked up the car tracks, would say: "I'm glad I don't drive a truck! That poor feller has a worse time'n I do!" The people who grumbled compared the snowstorm with the kind we had when we were little kids." The elevator men looked sympathetically at your wet feet, and when you bumped into a stout, middle-aged lady and murmured a scared apology, she answered back, smilingly: "Oh, that's all right. Don't say a word. Nobody can stand on these streets!"

Sometimes I feel sure that God sends hardships to actually make people happier.

You probably, at least once a month, read a certain type of story that tells about a man who has an enemy, a deadly foe whom he tries to injure in every possible way. He has a harrowing time with Revenge and Hatred (spelled with capital letters) until the climax of the story arrives. For the climax is always trouble that comes in some way to the hated enemy. It may be a fire, and it may be a flood. It may be the death of his only daughter or bankruptcy. It may be almost anything from suicide to an earthquake. But it is always trouble. And at this time the hero, laying aside his life-long hatred, helps his enemy. If it is a fire, he always saves somebody's life; and if it is failure in business, he offers his check-book.

You read the story and you laugh. Then you say: "Oh, impossible!" or, "Too melodramatic!" But human nature is like that. It may be hard to like a girl when she has a dozen Paris gowns and a beautiful limousine and a conceited disposition; but it is very easy to be sorry for her and to want to help her when the Paris gowns are sold to a second-hand clothes man and the conceited disposition has been squeezed to death.

You remember the San Francisco earthquake and the Titanic disaster? You couldn't very well forget them. You remember the terror, the fright, the tears. But right along with the terrible things, don't you remember the wonderful amount of human kindness that everybody showed? Can't you remember how boarding-school girls gave entertainments and the newspapers started relief funds to help the suffering? Didn't you see the crowds that waited for the latest news? Weren't the stony-faced, prosaic ones the first to break down and cry?

When the world was such a very young place that the Eden tree was still green and gold, there was not very much tenderness and sympathy lying about. The weaker, more helpless ones were preyed upon by the strong tribal leaders, and the sufferers from famine and disease were killed outright to save trouble and worry. It was then that the flood came along and with its black skies and angry waters made the children of earth cling to each other and comfort each other in their trouble. It was only when the martyrs perished in the Roman arena that people knew about the Christian faith. They were sorry for the sufferers and they admired bravery. Soon their sympathy turned to interest and the interest to love and happiness. So the church grew through trouble.

Girls dear, sympathy is the greatest thing in the world—the very greatest! Poets protest that love makes the world go around; but it seems to me that sympathy helps quite a bit. And though sometimes people may seem unkind and stupid and cross; though the girl in the street-car frowns out of the window and the motorman scowls, you must remember that the crossness is only veneered on, and that the kindness is waiting in the background for trouble to bring it out.

A snowstorm is only a little thing at best! A few inches of whiteness that will be gone as soon as the sun grows strong enough; a thin film of iciness that bothers one. But a snowstorm, no matter how small, brings trouble to the heart of a city, and kindness to the heart of the city dweller. It brought hunger, and cold, and rheumatism to some people, but it brought smiles and happiness to others.

Oh, friends of mine, it's when the way is slippery and people cannot seem to stand alone, that the world puts out a helpful hand, and eases the burden with ever ready sympathy.

MY BABES MY JEWELS ARE

BY MRS. E. G. EDWARDS

I wear no jewels on my breast,
  Nor in my dusky hair;
You look in vain for golden chain
Or costly rings or sparkling strings,
  Yet I have jewels rare;
Their value high is more than I
  Can with aught else compare.

They came not from Brazilian fields
  Or Klondike's golden shore,
Nor did the sea give up for me
Its treasures fair, where divers dare
  To seek for pearly store:
By far each gem surpasses them
  Though searched the wide world o'er.

Their origin is not of earth;
  I heard the pinions' sweep
Of angels bright from lands of light.
As to my door each gem they bore,
  Love in my heart stirred deep:
I could not ask for dearer task
  Them undefiled to keep.

Among the radiant set was one,
  A gem of purest ray—
I heard again the heav'nly strain,
Again the swing of angel wing
  And this one sped away.
'Twill shine, I know, with clearer glow
  In everlasting day.

Why do I grieve? They're only lent,
  These gems so rare and sweet.
My task all done, the vict'ry won,
With joyous ring my crown I'll bring
  To lay at Jesus' feet.
There they will shine, these babes of mine,
  Forevermore complete.

SPECIAL NOTES OF GENERAL INTEREST

—EFFICIENCY HAS BECOME the watchword of our modern life. Life to-day is concentrated and strenuous. A man to succeed in his business, his trade, or his profession, must put forth, not only more effort, but a better quality of effort. And children in all respects fit for the struggle of life are not likely to come from homes presided over by a mother who does not know her business. No one understands better than the family physician what the business of being a wife and mother means. And in The Eugenic Mother and Baby, Dr. W. Grant Hague supplies a book which is essentially a text-book or manual for all who are engaged in this business, a book for them to consult daily. It is a book that will enable the wife and mother to perform her duties with the highest efficiency—that is, efficiency which comes from following the eugenic standard. All these things Dr. Hague discusses with completeness.

—FROM A RELIABLE informant at Nuevo Laredo we have received this letter: "Conditions are very bad all along the border here and throughout Mexico. Not only have Mexicans lost what they owned, but many Americans have lost their all. In this vicinity there are a number of American families who are practically ruined, and who at present are not able to secure the necessaries of life. One American ranchman, who lived near here, and who, before the war, was considered well to do, was robbed of his household goods, his clothing and what provisions he had on hand, and driven to Laredo, Texas, practically without a cent. This man is seventy years of age, an old veteran of the Civil War, but receives no pension. He has five children with him, none of whom are self-supporting. I have rented a small house for this family, and am helping them to live until they can do better. Several ladies also are in Laredo, whose husbands are in Mexico, and are unable to communicate with them; all of whom are practically without funds."

—EXTENSIVE PLANS ARE on foot for bringing about a mammoth aerial show in connection with the Panama-Pacific Exposition, one feature of which may be a race around the world; another a race across the Atlantic. A trans-Atlantic race is also being arranged for at an earlier date in competition for a fifty-thousand-dollar prize offered in England. The two projects have stimulated discussion among aviators as to the development of aviation in the direction of long-distance flights, and the enormous advance which has been made toward perfecting the airship as a vehicle of transportation is evident. Mr. Andrew Carnegie, replying to a request for a contribution to assist the plan for a race around the world as a factor in promoting peace, said that he looks upon the airship as perhaps destined to aid more in war than in peace. Other great workers for international peace are reported as favoring the race idea.

—THE WINTER'S WORST storm, which was experienced all over the United States and Canada in the middle of February, burst upon Europe very shortly after. Terrific gales created havoc throughout France, destroying many buildings, and weakening high church steeples. Spain suffered all along the coast, and storms cast down telegraph lines and disorganized traffic. In Switzerland the gale overthrew an express train as it emerged from a tunnel, killing one passenger and hurting others. Along the coast of Ireland great damage was done. The Norwegian bark Mexico was driven on a small rocky island, and the crew was marooned there. They were seen to build a shelter from the wreckage of their ship, which had been battered to pieces by the seas, but their ultimate fate was in doubt, as they had no provisions and were exposed to the elements.

—THE CHRISTIAN HERALD has already referred to a plan for combating the "loan shark" evil by establishing chains of banks which will finance small borrowers upon their unsecured note, provided their character and prospects and need justify the help. A second plan of the same kind has been announced by the press, said to have one million dollars capital at the disposal of those who wish to extend this form of financial aid, the need of which throughout the country is always great. It has been stated that this plan had its origin in a similar work done abroad. About four years ago, in one of our American magazines, one of the present editors of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD, writing upon the subject of remedial loan work, said that ultimately such work "will reach even the man with only his need to offer as a reason for a loan. When he has nothing but himself, if there is any possibility of the man ever making good that possibility will be accepted as collateral." This would appear to be a clear prophecy, as just such institutions are now being established.

—THE COURTS DEMAND that the women in the country sometimes attend court as witnesses. What provision has been made for the comfort and protection of women witnesses? Investigation by the Bonham, Texas, Board of Trade showed that the courts had no place for the women witnesses, not only in that town, but in every other in the country. The board went outside of the State for information, and discovered that many people had heard of a ladies' public rest room, but no one could tell where one was in operation excepting in department stores. The board determined to set an example for the country, and secured suitable rooms in the center of the business district, and a matron was put in charge from 8 A.M. to 5 P.M. A register was placed in the room, and since the date of the opening, a little over five months ago, more than four thousand women have registered as guests. The furnishings include writing table, telephone, all kinds of toilet articles, a baby cradle and bed, a bed for the tired or sick visitor, the latest magazines, and in fact everything a lady might need in such a place. The rooms were furnished by the people of the town. The Board of Trade pays the matron, the ice company furnishes the ice free, a laundry does the laundry work free, the telephone company furnishes the telephone; it is a co-operative move on the part of the people. Many mothers leave their babies with the matron while they shop. A Texas magazine conducted a "Cleanest Town in Texas" contest during the past year, and Bonham won the honor. This is indeed setting a good example.

THE GREAT WORLD GATHERING

SUNDAY SCHOOL LESSON BY DR. AND MRS. WILBUR F. CRAFTS

WHAT a tiny thing is a mustard seed! A mere speck! and yet it has such great possibilities in it that it may unfold and become a plant that is to be compared with a tree! The mustard plants which we see growing in our land do not usually grow more than two feet in height; but in Palestine they grow as tall as a man seated on horseback. Jesus took note of the mustard and said: "It is indeed the least of all seeds, but when it is grown it is the greatest among herbs and becometh a tree, so that the birds of the air come and lodge in the branches thereof." (Matt. 13: 32.) "So that the fowls of the air may lodge under the shadow of it." (Mark 4: 32.)

Jesus had a Gospel message for those who had gathered in a wayside group as he was passing from one part of the country to the other—from Perea to Jerusalem. While the mustard is one of the smallest things in the world, the kingdom of God is the greatest thing in the world—and in heaven. But they are alike in one particular—that is, expansiveness. It is wonderful indeed that birds can lodge in a mustard plant, but it is more wonderful that "God so loved the world that he gave his only begotten Son, that whosoever believeth in him should not perish, but have everlasting life." (John 3: 16.) The birds lodge only momentarily in the mustard plant. They light there. Jesus did not say that they remained there and built their nests. But how is it with those who come to the kingdom of God? Ah! when they come in, they "go no more out"! (Rev. 3: 12.)

It is not unlikely, but quite probable, that when Jesus talked about the mustard seed, he had one in his hand, or he may have been regarding a plant which was growing near by, for he said: "A man took a grain of mustard seed and planted it in his garden and it became a tree."

When preparing to make a loaf of bread, the thing to do is to put a lot of "rising," or leaven, into a mass of flour. Jesus, when he came from heaven to earth, brought with him the "leaven" which was to produce the kingdom of God among men. The truth of it is all in the song which the children sometimes sing:

> Jesus once was a little child,
> He came to us to show
> The way to the pure and holy life above,
> From our little life below.

And he taught us to pray: "Thy kingdom come." How? By his will being done on earth as it is in heaven. We may look upward to heaven and say: "The kingdom of God is something there," and then we may place our hands over our hearts, saying: "And something here." With a part of the "leaven" within us, we may do our share in leavening the whole world, helping to make it the kingdom of God indeed.

> I would be true, for there are those who trust me:
> I would be pure, for there are those who care:
> I would be strong, for there is much to suffer:
> I would be brave, for there is much to dare:
> I would be friend to all the poor and friendless;
> I would be giver and forget the gift:
> I would be humble, for I know my weakness:
> I would look up and love, and laugh and lift.

One who stood in the wayside group that day asked Jesus this question: "Lord, are there few that are saved?" And Jesus replied to him by likening salvation to a "narrow door." But all may enter, for Jesus said on another occasion: "Him that cometh to me, I will in no wise cast out." (John 6: 37.) Salvation is "narrow" in the sense that we must be shut in with God, as Noah was in the Ark. What it means to enter in can best be described by repeating the experience of a man whose story was recently reported by Norman Duncan in the Century. The man had been a Bowery tough, but was converted.

"I got up from my knees a new man—a new creature in Christ Jesus. I had been 'born again.' It is not a cant phrase. There are no other words which so accurately describe the change which had occurred within me—no other words to describe the completeness of it, the newness of life into which I had come, a child in righteous ways. I was regenerate. I had been born again. I was sober, and from that moment I never wanted alcohol. . . . I did want a bath instantly, but I was too dirty to be given one without precautions. And I wanted a clean shirt. I loathed my rags. I wanted to be clean. My word! how I craved a bath! And pride at once revived—the good pride of manhood. One of the brothers—we redeemed drunkards are all brothers—offered me five cents. I rejected it. I was no beggar. I was a man again, a gentleman! What did I want of a nickel I hadn't earned? I wanted work. First of all, I wanted sleep. I desperately needed a bed—and then I wanted a bath and a job. I had my bath in the morning. My word! what a gracious gift it was! And I got my job, too—and I got my clean shirt. But I lay that night in a Bowery lodging house, in a section reserved for the worst of us. It was a heaven of rest and ease and seclusion after Solomon's cellar. . . . I lay awake all that night in tears and prayers and joyous aspirations. My tears were of contrition; my prayers were of rejoicing, of gratitude; my aspiration was toward work and service and self-respect and the love of all men. A wonderful night—a night in which those things I had cherished, but had long abandoned, were restored to me—hope, truth, love, pure ambition. . . . It seems to me now that in that night I traveled over the long way I had come—that I was once more in the company of the pure things of my boyhood. And in the morning I stumbled, rejoicing, to the labor of the first day in a new life."

The door may be "narrow," but many shall pass through it. We have Jesus' own word for it, that they shall come from the east and west, and from the north and south, and shall sit down in the kingdom of God; not one who comes will be turned away. Among the "thousands of thousands" (Rev. 5: 11) will be some from the dark continent of Africa, even from Barotse Land. It is said that to reach it one has to wind his way through vast, dreary tracts of uninhabited land, where antelopes, giraffes and ostriches may be seen running away at full speed during the day, and where during the night may be heard the barking of leopards, the yelping of foxes, the laughing of hyenas, and the roaring of lions. But the missionaries were unafraid, and began work in Barotse Land about twenty-five years ago. Slavery, witchcraft and bloodshed were characteristics of the land, but to-day there are several mission stations where earnest Gospel work is sustained. There is a Bible school for the training of native teachers. Many will come from Barotse Land to sit down in the kingdom of God! And they will come from the islands of the sea—Japan. On the Inland Sea a missionary ship called the Fukuin Maru has been sailing from place to place. Eleven years ago when Captain Bichel first appeared in these waters, every householder on the island of Satoda had signed a pledge not to rent his house, no matter how small and mean it might be, even for one evening, to the Fukuin Maru for a Christian service. But recently a new Fukuin Maru has been built, and there was great excitement when it hove in sight of Satoda. The people, including the children, waved flags, and the authorities offered the first use of their new public hall for a dedicatory service. Many came from different islands, young, middle-aged and old, to make confession of faith and be baptized. It is said that "when the service was over, warm greetings were exchanged, and all partook of their lunches together. Their faces glowed, and true Christian fellowship was everywhere manifest." It was a foretaste of that time when "many shall sit down in the kingdom of God."

And they shall come from the Fiji Islands, once the cruelest habitations on the earth, where 90,000 people, almost the whole population, are Christians. The more we think of these far-away and out-of-the-way places the more our hearts burn within us, and we remember the words of our Saviour about the great gathering of people out of every tribe and nation which shall be in heaven by and by. Let us each and all rejoice that we have an invitation to be there, and let us be determined that nothing shall deter us from being there! And let us do all we can to help others to be there! We have heard of a poor blind woman in Paris, who put twenty-seven francs ($5.40) into a plate at a missionary service. "You cannot afford so much," said one. "Yes, I can," she answered. On being pressed to explain she said: "I am blind, and I said to my fellow straw workers: 'How much money do you spend in a year for oil in your lamps, when it is too dark to work nights?' They replied: 'About 27 francs.' So," said the poor woman, "I found that I could save so much in the year, because I am blind, and do not need a lamp, and I give it to shed light in the dark, heathen lands."

. F. H., Devil's Lake, N. D. Why is Easter not always on the same date of the month? t first the earliest Christians kept no special ter feast. To them every day was Easter; lived in an atmosphere of joyful remember- that Christ was risen. But many of the Christians being Jews and all of them ing in touch with Jewish ideas, they liked continue the celebration of the Passover t, remembering that Christ was the sacri- l Lamb, whose blood had made atonement their sins. Gradually the idea of the Passover the memory of the resurrection, joined, per- s, with an ancient custom in other religions elebrating the return of spring as a sacred t, led to the establishment by the Christian rch of a yearly feast to commemorate the rrection of Christ. There were many contro- ies regarding the date or day on which the bration should take place, some wishing it e on the 14th day of the paschal or passover m, others desiring to celebrate the resurrec- always on a Sunday, the first day of the k, on which Christ rose. The Council of e, 325 A.D., determined that Easter should ays be fixed upon a Sunday, but some cen- es elapsed before a satisfactory method was blished for fixing the exact day each year. rule was finally fixed as follows: The first day after the first full moon which occurs r the 21st of March, the vernal equinox. ter always falls between March 22 and il 25.

G., Fort Plain, N. Y. 1. In the story of arrival of Joseph's brethren in Egypt (on r second journey), as related in Gen. 43, find in verses 11, 12 that their aged father sed them to take a gift of balm, honey, es, myrrh, nuts and almonds, with "double ey," etc. This is the present again re- ed to in verse 25. 2. It is reckoned that ph must have been in prison about two s, if not even longer.

S. B., Northfield, Mass. In our Sunday school class it was asked: "Why were the shepherds an abomination to the Egyp- tians?" (Gen. 46: 34.)

he reason of the Egyptian hatred of the herds is a historic one. The Hyksos or herd Kings, hundreds of years before ph's time, had invaded and conquered Lower pt and ruled the Delta, although they never pied the whole country. They came from East and were probably Arabians, and are esented as having been a cruel and arrogant , who subjected the Egyptians to great hard- s. They were finally driven out of the try by a coalition of forces under several s. They were probably called Shepherds use of the simplicity of their life, which largely pastoral and semi-barbaric. Mane- the Egyptian historian, says that they were builders of Jerusalem, but his reference is ably to the Canaanites rather than the Jews. e writers suggest that they were the pro- tors of the Bedouins, and that the Amale- s, Midianites, and other hostile nations who osed the Israelites after the Exodus were descended from the stock of the expelled herds. It is not improbable that the istines may also have been a branch of the e Shepherd family.

J. W., Asheville, S. C. 1. The largest rivers he world are the Nile, estimated 4,000 miles ngth; the Amazon and Yangtze, each esti- ed 3,500 miles; the Congo, estimated 3,000 s; the Mississippi, 3,160, and the Missouri,), respectively. While these measurements given in the works of reference, they are tless for the most part approximations. is particularly so in the case of the Nile the Amazon, and also of the Congo, where h of the territory through which these rs pass is very difficult of access. 2. If we erely repent of our sins and ask forgiveness God, in the name of his dear Son, and in ple faith, he will assuredly forgive. The re- ant sinner needs no intermediary. If he is est in his sorrow for his wicked life and ere in his desire to forsake his sins, and to Christ as his Saviour, he has the divine nise that "whosoever will may come," and he will save "to the uttermost." There are y, however, who fail to take hold in faith who need to be taught the way to the s. It is well for such an one when he has privilege of opening his heart freely to a stian pastor or some friend who has already e the "great decision" and who can guide faltering steps and inspire him with faith confidence. A true Christian loves to lead to Christ, and in this crisis of your life should seek the friendship of such an ad- .

W. S., Eugene, Ore. Please explain the statement: "Heaven and earth shall pass away." (Matt. 24: 35.) I thought heaven was eternal.

The expressions "heaven" and "the heavens" mean not only the spiritual, eternal world, but also the stars and the spaces of ether surrounding the earth. Jesus used the word frequently in both these senses. He spoke of "the kingdom of heaven," signifying the eternal kingdom, and then spoke of the stars as "heaven" or "the heavens" in passages like the one you mention. Paul speaks of "the house not made with hands, eternal in the heavens." (II Cor. 5: 1.) The teaching of the Bible is that the material universe, including the earth itself, will be destroyed, but that the spiritual universe will endure forever.

J. B., St. Louis, Mo. The 21st chapter of Luke from verse 5 to the close deals with the prophecy of the destruction of Jerusalem. Verse 23 foreshadows the hardships and tribulations to which the people would be subjected, and which would be so severe that, save for divine mercy in shortening it, the whole nation would be exterminated. The impressive language used in describing the impending calamities, as the event ultimately proved, was fully justified. Flight "in winter," or "on the Sabbath" implies tribulation to both body and soul. This prophecy, like several others, has a twofold interpretation, the nearer one referring to the destruction of Jerusalem by the power of pagan Rome, which actually took place as foretold, and the remote interpretation having reference to the end of the age and the second coming, for which all Christians were warned to be prepared.

Mrs. J. B., Swain, Ark., writes: "In THE CHRISTIAN HERALD of February 4, you tell of a man starting a town called Lomax in Illinois, which is a strictly temperance town. We have one of the same kind in Arkansas. It is written in the deed that no liquor is ever to be sold in that town. It was started by a man from Carlinville, Ill., Will B. Ottwell, the 'Farmer Boys' Friend.' He started his first colony twenty-three miles west of Memphis in the St. Francis Valley. Now he has started another, fourteen miles from Jonesboro in Craighead County."

I. B., Kinston, N. C. In Matt. 5: 17-20 Jesus was explaining that he did not come to abrogate but to fulfil the law—to unfold its true spiritual meaning. In verse 19, the thing spoken of is not "the practical breaking or disobeying of the law, but annulling or enervating its obligation by a vicious system of interpretation, and teaching others to do the same; so the thing threatened is not exclusion from heaven and still less the lowest place in it, but a degraded and contemptuous position in the present stage of the kingdom of God—in other words, they shall be reduced, by the retributive providence that overtakes them, to the same condition of dishonor to which their false system of teaching has brought down the eternal principles of God's law." On the other hand, those who so teach that they exalt and honor God's authority, shall be honored in the kingdom in due proportion. It is therefore a rebuke to the outward and formal righteousness of the Scribes and Pharisees, who neglect the inward, vital and spiritual.

C. M., Lafayette, Ind. The pernicious and dangerous practice of hazing has been stamped out by the authorities of nearly all of our leading colleges. Of course, it is difficult to do away altogether with the "horse-play" that characterizes the buoyancy of youth; but the old-time brutality has been put down and the element of danger eliminated.

Constant Reader, St. Joseph, Mo. "Signs of the times" is an expression used with reference to the indications of prophetic fulfilment regarding the signs that mark the approaching end of the age. Jesus himself has said that "of that day and hour no man knoweth." Matt. 11: 27. All human effort to figure it out is vain speculation.

C. M. R., Oneida, N. Y. Fujiyama or Fusi-Jama, the sacred mountain of Japan, is a pure white cone which can be seen from the sea-approach to Yokohama. All devout Japanese make a pilgrimage to it and kneel to watch the sun goddess coming over its crest. They believe a visit to Fuji insures good fortune, and they look upon the mountain itself as the culminating glory of the world.

The Outcome of His Invention

At a million meals or more each day, someone is greeted by a dish like this. The dish Prof. Anderson invented—

A dish of Puffed Wheat or Puffed Rice.

Sometimes with cream and sugar. Sometimes like crackers in a bowl of milk.

And, because this man exploded grains, all of these people enjoy a daily delight such as no other cereal food offers.

A Hundred Million Granules Blasted in Each Grain

To create these foods, 100,000,000 granules inside of each grain are blasted by steam explosion. Each blown to atoms for ease of digestion. And no cooking process ever did that in cereal foods before.

The grains come to you unbroken, though eight times normal size. They are airy and crisp — floating bubbles of grain—with a taste like toasted nuts.

But the great fact is that by this process whole grains are made wholly digestible. On that account, Puffed Grains are now very widely prescribed by physicians.

Puffed Wheat-10¢
Puffed Rice-15¢

Except in Extreme West

Folks revel in these foods. They are so thin and fragile, so dainty and crisp, so ready to melt in the mouth.

They serve as both foods and confections. They are used like nut meats in candy making and as garnish for ice cream.

They are mixed with fruit for a morning dish, to give a nut-like blend. At night they are served in bowls of milk—thin toasted wafers, easy to digest.

Homes which don't serve Puffed Grains miss every day some very dainty dishes.

THE YOUNG PEOPLE'S MEETINGS

NOTES ON THE CHRISTIAN ENDEAVOR, EPWORTH LEAGUE AND BAPTIST YOUNG PEOPLE'S UNION TOPICS

A Prisoner of Hope*

YUN CHI HO'S first great adventure was his escape from assassins who rushed in with enormous two-handed swords to kill a group of young nobles who were feasting, during the year 1884, in celebration of the victory of the movement for postal relations between Korea and other nations. It is only about thirty years ago that Korea began to have any dealings with the outside world. On this occasion a number of the young nobles were killed, some were seriously wounded, and some, among whom was Baron Yun, escaped.

He took refuge in the residence of Commodore Foote, the American minister to Korea, who aided his escape to Shanghai, where he entered the Anglo-Chinese College, an institution conducted by the Southern branch of the American Methodist Church. He was converted and in 1890 came to America to continue his studies, attending Vanderbilt University, at Nashville, Tenn., and Emory College, at Oxford, Ga. He was exceedingly popular as a student, and left many friends behind him in America when he returned to Shanghai to become a teacher in the Anglo-Chinese College. He fell in love with a young Chinese woman, the organist at a Methodist church in the city, and they were soon happily married.

Soon after this the baron was made vice-minister of education of Korea and given the task of organizing an educational system for the kingdom. Then began his magnificent work of building up the new civilization of Korea, while he strove with every breath to build up also the kingdom of Christ there. The Southern Methodist Church established its mission in Korea, and Baron and Baroness Yun were its leading members.

After some further service to the government, Mr. Yun gave up diplomatic and political life and devoted his time to missionary work. But the interests of his country were upon his heart, and he, with a small group of younger leaders, began the publication of a paper called the Independent, whose purpose was to attack the corruption and oppression of the royal court. The first editor was exiled, and Mr. Yun took his place. A conspiracy against him and nineteen other members of his party was discovered, and Mr. Yun went into hiding in the Methodist mission, but continued to write his fiery editorials for the Independent. His nineteen friends were arrested, but the people made such an outcry that all were released, and he himself came from his hiding. He was now the great champion of the people, and wrung from the king promises to right their wrongs.

His influence became so great that the king removed him from the capital by making him governor of a distant province, but when the war broke out between Russia and Japan he was recalled to Seoul. At about this time Mrs. Yun died, leaving the memory of a singularly beautiful Christian life and the record of sweet and splendid Christian service.

Baron Yun was given one important position after another, being finally made vice-minister of state. He is said to have been "the widest-known and best-loved Korean of the empire." But nothing could prevent the subjugation of his homeland by Japan, so again he turned his back upon diplomatic life, determined to give all his strength to the upbuilding of the spiritual kingdom of Jesus. The tremendous Christian revival was sweeping over Korea and Prince Ito, the Japanese governor, tried in vain to induce Baron Yun to take a government position. He was at this time head of a boys' school at Song Do, and could only reply to the prince: "I am a minister of Jesus Christ; I cannot be persuaded or purchased; my future business is to make men out of Korean boys."

In 1910 he visited America, delighting audiences east and west with his report of Gospel work in Korea. It was on his return from this trip that he was arrested, together with a number of missionaries and other Christians who were accused, on what seemed ridiculously flimsy evidence, of plotting against the life of Count Terauchi, the Japanese governor-general of Korea. The foreign prisoners were released, but the natives were tortured. Under excruciating torture Baron Yun, with the others, made some sort of confession, but upon regaining his self-composure repudiated his confession. He remains still a prisoner, and the Epworth League is urged to join in prayer for this fellow Methodist and fellow Christian who, after so many years of toil for his country and for Christ's kingdom, is shut away from the opportunities of service.

In Training*

THE way to make a blacksmith out of a boy is to set him to work in a blacksmith's shop. The way to make a good nurse out of a young woman is to set her at work taking care of sick people in a hospital. So the way to make good and useful church members is to set young people at work in the church.

This is the purpose of the Christian Endeavor Societies and the Young People's Union. Young Christians begin there to do work like that which they will do for the church all the rest of their lives.

The boy who shirks his work in the blacksmith shop when he is an apprentice will be a poor blacksmith; the girl who does careless work in the hospital will be a poor nurse. The Christian Endeavor or Union member who is an inefficient and indifferent worker in his society will make a poor church member.

Begin now to be a success. These are days when efficiency is being demanded everywhere. It surely ought to be demanded in the church, and if it is to be demanded in the church it must be demanded in the young peoples' society.

But who is to demand it? There is no authority there. No pressure can be brought to bear. It is a real democracy. It is up to you, young Christian, to make of yourself an efficient worker for Christ in this training school.

Begin now to learn how to get others to come to church. Begin now to win others to Christ. Begin now to master your Bible so you can help others to learn its message. Begin now to sacrifice and give for Christ's cause so that when you have more to give you will have the spirit of giving and can persuade others to give. Begin now to visit the sick and care for the poor so that you will always not only desire but know how to help them. Begin now to learn about missionary work and to care for those needy souls in distant lands who are hungry for Christ. Begin now to learn to pray, not only for yourself but for others. Begin now to bear personal testimony to the saving power of Jesus. Begin now to develop the special gift you have—of singing, or teaching, or helping with finances or social work. Begin now to catch the vision of Jesus for winning and saving the world. Above all begin now to insist upon getting better and better acquainted with Christ and learning more perfectly every day how to have faith in him and how to obey him.

* "Our Society a Training School." Christian Endeavor and B. Y. P. U. Topic for Sunday, March 22, 1914. (Prov. 22: 6.) [Led by the pastor.]

ANSWERED PRAYERS

IF THE members of the Prayer League could step into the Brotherhood meeting on Sunday evening at the Bowery Mission they would be thrilled and overwhelmed at the signs of interest these newly redeemed men take in the requests for prayer which are sent in from north and south, east and west. Mr. Charles Balevre, the leader of the Brotherhood, states that the requests for prayer are transforming the whole character and atmosphere of the Sunday evening meeting. The room is crowded, and scores of men try to get in for whom there is no room. Mr. Balevre spends about half an hour reading the requests; then he and others offer prayer for the fulfilling of these desires of many hearts. Later, from his place in the organ loft where he presides at the mission organ, Mr. Balevre, when requests for prayer are being called for, sums up the number of requests with the number of States from which they come, and these are included in the prayer offered in the auditorium. The whole movement is creating and strengthening a wonderful tie between all the members of the CHRISTIAN HERALD family and these men who are being redeemed from lives of want and sin.

Dr. J. G. Hallimond, the superintendent of the Mission, has himself been seriously ill, and the prayers of the Prayer League are requested for his speedy and complete recovery.

Prayers Answered

Mrs. W. L. South writes from Point Marion, Pa.: "I wish to acknowledge God's goodness to me in giving health again to my sister who was very sick." E. T. C., of Swarthmore, Pa., writes, thanking God for providing employment for a son who was in financial need. Mrs. A. writes, from Kansas City, Mo.: "Our Father says: 'Owe no man anything but to love one another.' I prayed for a financial blessing that I might obey the command. It has been abundantly answered." E. D., of Dundee, N. Y., praises God for deliverance from the appetite for strong drink. He says: "God came into my heart one year ago, and I have no appetite for drink any more."

Acknowledgments of answered prayer have also been received from:

Mrs. D. C. M., Miss I. S., Mrs. H. I. R., A. T., S. V. S., I. M. F., Mrs. H. S. U. K., Mrs. K. P., L. T. S., Mrs. H. A. K., S. S., Miss L. D., Mrs. E. A. S., Mrs. H. L. W., B. B., W. D., Mrs. M. W. Requests for Prayer

An interesting letter comes from Pastor Stephanoff, written at Kustendil, Bulgaria. He asks prayers for his wife, who is an invalid. Her illness is chiefly the result of the horrors of the recent wars in that much-troubled land. Pastor Stephanoff also requests prayers for his country. He writes:

"I am a Bulgarian. Perhaps you know how my country was wronged, first in Bucharest and later in Constantinople. Macedonia, which was freed by our brave army, is now under a more terrible yoke than the Turkish—that of the Greeks and Servians. My nation is in a deplorable condition. So many widows, orphans and invalids from the war! So many refugees 160,000 from Macedonia, hungry and destitute. We do not know what will be the future for our poor nation. So many enemies from inside and so many bad signs from within. Will you please pray for our country, for our king and state ministers, that my nation should be spared and that God may give wisdom to our king and his ministers."

Mrs. E. M. W. and E. J. P. ask prayers for their own conversion; Mrs. G. M., to know her sins are forgiven; W. W. H., "to fully know I am a Christian"; E. W. and Mrs. S. K. to become true Christians; P. O. B., to be brought nearer the Saviour; G. W. H., for a deeper work of grace.

Prayers are asked for revivals in Richview, Ill.; Peetz, Col.; Coalings, Calif.; New Lyme, Ohio; Sharpstown, Md.; Middle River, Minn.; also for victory of temperance crusades in Peetz, Col.; Pateros, Wash., and in San Francisco.

WHAT WOULDST THOU, LORD?

WHAT wouldst thou, Lord, require of me?
And what thy wish to have me be?

Wouldst have me strive my days to bless
With deeds of love and kindliness?

Forgetful all of self and mine,
Remembering only thee and thine?

Bearing for weaker ones the cross,
Unmindful as to pain and loss?

Wouldst have me consecrate to thee
All that I have and hope to be?

Wouldst have me in my humble way
Live to thy honor every day?

Make every hour of sweetest price,
Enriched by love and sacrifice?

Wouldst claim my scanty store of gold,
All for thy use to have and hold?

To help the needy, stay distress,
Making each gift a blessedness?

To find for homeless ones a door,
A table for the hungry poor?

Wouldst have me truly learn of thee
The meaning of Gethsemane?

O Heart of Love, thy will be mine,
Make me and all I have as thine.

Howe, Ind. S. B. McMANUS.

IT'S READY TO-DAY

Your Light Lozier Four

$2100

YOU'VE DREAMED—as thousands of others have dreamed, "Some day I'll own a Lozier, too."

THAT DREAM is now possible of realization. This Lozier at $2,100 is within your reach at the price you want to pay.

YOU'VE ASKED many times, as others have asked, "Why doesn't some concern like Lozier build a car of quality and yet at a price within my reach"—or appropriation, which is the same thing.

LOZIER HEARD—heard you and heard thousands of others ask the same thing—for a car bearing the Lozier name-plate as a guarantee of Lozier quality and yet selling "around $2,100."

AND THIS LOZIER FOUR is the response to that demand—that need—that desire. A Four built just as well as Lozier knows how—and what concern knows better or has a better reputation for embodying the best it knows in its product?

A "ONE HUNDRED PER CENT. CAR" in every last detail—including the "hidden excellence" for which all Loziers are famous—seating up to seven passengers and yet selling for $2,100.

NOT A "SIX," BECAUSE we found after going into the matter thoroughly, that a six could not be made at that price—and you said "around $2,000," you will recall. Not at that price without skimping at many points in materials, work and finish. Points you might not notice when the car was new, but which Lozier would know all the time—and Lozier standards permit not such practice.

SO IT'S A FOUR, as it should be—as it must be in a car of that passenger capacity and that price and made as it must be made before we will attach that Lozier name-plate.

THIS CAR IS BUILT FOR YOU—assuming now that you are one of that rapidly increasing class of buyers who ask about maintenance cost before asking the price, and who insist on proof—not mere claims or assertions.

YOU'LL WANT TO SEE THIS CAR because it is the Four that stemmed the tide of big, cheap sixes—big only in terms of wheel base and bulk and cheap only in first cost.

OF COURSE YOU KNOW that more Lozier Fours were sold at retail during the New York Show than of any other make in that class. Hundreds of demonstrations booked since—and we can only get so many Lozier Fours. So that's another—and perhaps the best—reason why you'll want to see this car at the earliest possible moment.

Last Week's Corns

Made these shoes impossible. But Inez told me of Blue-jay.

I applied it, and the pain stopped in a moment. In 48 hours all three corns came out.

No soreness whatever. I never thought of the corns from the moment I used Blue-jay. And now they are gone, to never return, unless tight shoes cause new ones.

This is the story of millions of corns which have been ended by Blue-jay. It will be the story of your corns when you use this one right method.

Don't pare them. Paring never ends a corn. Use the modern method.

A famous chemist, by inventing Blue-jay, has made corn troubles needless. Blue-jay takes corns out, without any trouble, without any annoyance. Apply it in a jiffy, then forget the corn.

It is taking out about one million corns a month. It is the method now used and endorsed by physicians. You owe to yourself a test.

When Scrimp Gillen swung herself over the threshold of the high school at Callenville, she seemed to emerge from that murky atmosphere of poverty and ignorance of which she had always been so acutely sensitive in her home town, to walk forth into the clear light of all the beauty and wonder of life. In this place of enchantment, more marvelous to her than any land of fairy tale, where a vista of endless opportunity to satisfy the longing of her starved heart opened before her dazzled eyes, she was no longer Scrimp Gillen, weighed down by the wrongs about her, but Marietta Gillen, the carefree, holding out eager hands for her birthright of happiness.

For the first few weeks, she lived in a dream of exquisite joy. Would any one believe that just the perky shine of a pink satin bow on the hair of the girl ahead of her thrilled her beauty-loving heart; that the common courtesy with which she was treated, so far removed from the brutal teasing that she had come to expect as the inevitable accompaniment of her deformity, opened her eyes to something higher than she had ever dreamed; that the mere voicing of the words in her books brought visions of ineffable wonder? Who knows what these things meant to her?

And then, one evening, all the old worry and responsibility of home-life came back to her with a rush. She looked up from her studying to see a strange expression on her mother's face. Mrs. Gillen was watching Will as he took his hat from the nail behind the door.

"Where you goin', Will?" she asked anxiously.

"Out."

"Out where?"

The boy opened the door, then turned and shouted impatiently, "With the fellows! Anything more you want to know?" He banged the door shut, and Scrimp could hear his heavy footsteps on the walk outside. Her eyes met her mother's.

"Where does he go evenings, mother?"

"I don't know—" Mrs. Gillen hesitated.

"Where do you think; down to the corner?" In the Gillen family, that expression "down to the corner" was used in speaking of Casey's saloon, Mr. Gillen's favorite retreat.

"His father 'ud kick him out if he came there."

"Where do you think, then?" Scrimp's voice was sharp with anxiety.

"They say that Canal Street gang held up a man and 'most killed him, over on the docks last night," Mrs. Gillen answered indirectly. "Scrimp, do you s'pose Will goes with them? I thought I saw him, around nine o'clock last night, on the corner where the gang hangs out. I'm not sure 'twas him; he stepped out of sight into a doorway. Oh, what are we goin' to do, Scrimp?" she asked helplessly. "What can we do about it? You know what that gang is, you know—" One of the children called her and she rose and left the room.

Scrimp sat staring down at her open book. Yes, she knew what that gang was. She had not lived all her years in this factory town without knowing something of the crime and the wrecked lives about her. And was Will one of that riff-raff of humanity? Scrimp shuddered with the horror of it. She thought of him as he used to be; a jolly, winning boy, always ready to play with her, to carry her on his shoulders, to take her part against the teasing of her schoolmates. What had come over him in the last year or two? What had put those hard, sullen lines in his face and set his lips so grimly? She thought of his dull, machine-like life at the factory, and suddenly she whispered: "Why, he's never had a chance! Nobody's ever given him a chance!"

It was after this that Will was greeted every evening, very much to his annoyance, with some remark such as this: "Will, did you ever hear about cave-men? It's the most wonderful thing! Listen while I read this little bit."

And Will would reply, "Aw, shut up! Wha' do I care about your old cave-men?"

Or, "Will, we're reading a book called Ivanhoe at school; it's all about knights and—"

"Aw, quit it, will you?"

But Scrimp would not give up. Evening after evening she made her advances; evening after evening she met with the same repulse. Eagerly, desperately, she held before Will's eyes the one gift which was hers to offer. She would share with him the knowledge which seemed so wonderful to her; she would win him to some realization of the better things of life which she had come to know, not only through her books but through association with people of more refinement than those to whom she had been accustomed. She realized that she was fighting; fighting against the burden of unceasing toil and poverty, against lowered ideals and the attraction of the gang. She must make her gift doubly alluring.

Unceasingly she talked of the things she learned at school, of the things she saw there; how the boys had clean hands and faces; how they said "thank you"; how they opened the door for her to pass through; how in the English class she had first learned the story of King Arthur and his Round Table. Breathlessly she gave her version of this story, watching eagerly for the slightest glow of interest in Will's face. It was with those things that she fought, pluckily carrying on the battle day after day and week after week.

But she seemed to make no advance. Then, one day, her crutch slipped on the icy sidewalk and she was thrown violently to the ground, and when the doctor said that she must lie in bed for six weeks, it was not so much the fact of missing school which distressed her, although that was a heavy enough cross to bear, but the thought that she would not be able to carry on her plan of giving Will "a chance."

Day after day she lay there with her schoolbooks around her. Every evening she listened for Will to come in; every evening she said to her mother, "Ask Will if he won't come up here. There's something I want to read to him, something I want to tell him. Tell him it is wonderful; something I know he'll like to hear about." And every evening Will refused, and Scrimp had to whistle hard to keep back the tears.

Again and again she begged the doctor for permission to be carried down to the kitchen. "There's the sofa in the corner," she pleaded, "I could lie there. Oh, please, please!" But he shook his head gravely and told of the danger it would be to move her.

One evening Mrs. Gillen came down from Scrimp's room with an anxious expression on her face. She went straight to Will and, standing before him, said: "Will, Scrimp hasn't opened a book to-day. She's laid there on the pillow, little and white and limp, just touchin' a book soft, now and then, like her fingers was full of love for it, and she hasn't whistled even once! You know how she always whistled, no matter what happened, Will? She hasn't whistled all day; she hasn't whistled all day!" Mrs. Gillen looked appealingly at Will. "Won't you go up just this once and listen while she reads, Will?"

The boy turned away with an ugly scowl upon his face.

"If you won't come, she says won't you read some in this book? She sent it down for you."

Will looked for an instant at the

THE PROTEST AGAINST ROMANISM

IN THE great protest against Romanism which was uttered in Washington on December 14 last, when a great audience of over wo thousand filled the New National Theater and listened to eloquent addresses by leading pastors representng the Protestant Episcopal, Methoist, Lutheran, Baptist, Presbyterian, nd other churches, there were many eatures which made it an epochaking event. After the meeting inoors, addresses were delivered to the ast crowds who had been unable to btain admission. The whole event vas a magnificent declaration of the ttitude of Protestant America in opposition to the activity of Rome in our ational politics and in exposition of he avowed purpose "to make Amerca Catholic."

At the time of its occurrence, THE HRISTIAN HERALD devoted considerble space to an account of this hisoric meeting, but there were many oints made by the speakers which nerited fuller attention. These are iven at length in the February issue f the Protestant Magazine. In his ddress on "Why We Are Protestnts," Rev. Randolph McKim, rector f the Church of the Epiphany, Washngton, after dealing ably with the octrines of Rome and its attitude oward Protestants as "heretics and eparatists," directed his attention to ne attitude of the Protestants of merica. He said:

"We are Protestants because we ve our country. We cannot contemlate with equanimity the possibility nat this land of the free and home of ne brave should be brought under the ominion of the Supreme Pontiff who ules the Roman Catholic Church.

"'Absolute obedience, it is boldly eclared, is due to the Pope, at the eril of salvation,' says Mr. Gladtone, 'not alone in faith, in morals, ut in all things which concern the iscipline and government of the nurch. Thus are swept into the pal net whole multitudes of facts, hole systems of government, prevailg . . . in every country of the orld. Even in the United States, here the severance between church nd state is supposed to be complete, long catalogue might be drawn of ubjects belonging to the domain and ompetency of the state, but also unenjably affecting the government of ne church; such as, by way of xample, marriage, burial, education, rison discipline, blasphemy, poor reef, . . . religious endowments, ows of celibacy, and obedience.' The Vatican Decrees, page 30.)

"Pope Pius IX solemnly condemned ree speech, a free press, toleration of onconformity, liberty of conscience. e claimed the right to use physical orce, and proudly asserted that the opes of the Middle Ages, who deosed princes and laid kingdoms unr interdict, and excommunicated onarchs who offended them, did not xceed their powers.

"Do we want our beloved country ubjected to the yoke of a Pontiff who thus at war with progress and librty, and who claims a universal doinion over the consciences of mannd?

"But I shall probably be told that ne most illustrious Roman Catholic relate in America has just delivered sermon in the Baltimore cathedral, which he vehemently rejected the ea of any union of church and state America, and pronounced a noble anegyric on civil and religious librty, which, he said, the church ever eartily supports. Well, our answer that is that we wish the dear Carnal Gibbons godspeed, and we hope will succeed in converting his urch to that view; but Cardinal ibbons is not the Pope, and when he ntradicts the Pope, as he did in that rmon, his words, in the last analy, really count for nothing. It is ne infallible and absolute monarch tting on his throne on the Seven ills whose decrees govern the mind and the conscience of Romanists. Not all the cardinals in the church can nullify the decrees of Pius IX and Leo XIII and Pius X anathematizing those who maintain that church and state should be separated, and condemning free speech, a free press, religious toleration, liberty of conscience.

"Now, could anything be more absolutely contrary to the fact than the assertion that the Church of Rome has been the friend and supporter of civil and religious liberty? Does His Eminence the Cardinal think that we have forgotten all the history we ever read?

"Now, what are the facts that confront us in the United States to-day in reference to the attitude of the Roman Catholic Church? Let me recite some of the doings of the priesthood and the hierarchy, and especially of 'that insolent and aggressive faction,' as Cardinal Newman called the Jesuits:

"They are using the ballot as a club to intimidate our politicians.

"They are using the boycott to punish merchants or any other class of business men who offend them.

"They have recently boycotted a great newspaper in this city, and, it is said, have brought its owner to his knees.

"They interfere with our public libraries, and often successfully demand the exclusion of books which they choose to consider contrary to the interest of their church.

"Though they wield almost despotic power over their people, yet Roman Catholic mobs have frequently attacked without rebuke Protestant lecturers who dare to speak out against Rome. (Such cases of mob violence have occurred within four months in Kentucky, in Ohio, in Iowa, and in Pennsylvania.)

"They have in many States driven the Bible out of our public schools.

"They are the open enemies of our American public schools, denouncing them as godless.

"They profess never to grant a divorce, and yet in numerous cases they have declared lawful marriages null and void, and have separated husbands and wives, and parents and children.

"Professing that they are the supreme guardians of the purity of the family, they corrupt its purity by granting dispensations for marriages between a man and his niece, an abominable union, regarded with abhorrence by the ancient Romans, pagans though they were.

"Thus the Church of Rome is this day abridging the liberties of Americans in various ways and among many classes of our people. By the absolute control which she exercises over many thousands of her adherents, she is establishing a tyranny over increasing numbers of our citizens.

"I ask you, then, my fellow citizens, Is it not time for all Protestants to take counsel together for the security of our liberties, for the preservation of the heritage of personal freedom, freedom of conscience, freedom of speech, and freedom of action, which we received from our forefathers? Colonial America was Protestant, overwhelmingly Protestant, and the statesmen and patriots of the Revolution were also overwhelmingly Protestant, though there were many Roman Catholics who nobly and bravely labored and suffered and fought with them.

"But the ideas which gave birth to the Revolution were the offspring of the Protestant Reformation. The principles which lay at the root of the American Constitution were born of that same Reformation. And it behooves us, whose ancestors pledged their lives, their fortunes, and their sacred honor for American independence, to guard those principles from every open and secret assault."

HOW WEAK EYES ARE STRENGTHENED BY EXERCISE

By C. Gilbert Percival, M. D.

IN this, which is undoubtedly the most active period in the history of man, every one of our faculties is called on to do more, and to respond to a longer continued extraordinary strain than ever before.

"Take things easy" may be very good advice, but most of us, who know how our competitors are hustling, fear that the practice of it would furnish us with a free seat on a bench in the park, instead of a cash income.

More energy, more concentration, are required to keep up with the leaders nowadays—hence our nervous exhaustion is greater. Busy city life with its clang, clatter and rush, even most of our time-saving inventions and modes of travel, keep the nerves on edge, and give them no opportunity to rest during our waking hours.

Now the eye is one of the most delicate centers of the nervous system. This is clearly proven by the fact that the first place a physician looks for symptoms of paralysis is at the base of the optic nerve—if there are none in evidence it is taken as positive proof that there is no danger.

This will clearly evidence that nerve exhaustion means eye exhaustion and finally eye affection if nothing be done to correct it.

If, however, the blood circulation in the eyes is kept normal by the proper kind of simple and safe exercise, they continue healthy, normal and strong.

Beside this nervous strain that I speak of there are many other features of modern life which tax the eyes unduly.

Our schooling, once confined to the simple rudiments of education, is now so extended that the books of a schoolchild of to-day would cause a child of thirty years ago to look aghast—hence at the threshold of practical life we start to unduly tax our eyes.

The glitter of city streets—the speed of traffic—the riding in fast trains—the viewing of scenery from train windows as it flashes quickly by—and above all, the habit of reading every time we have the opportunity in our busy careers, under all sorts of unfavorable conditions—these all add to the extraordinary burden which our eyes are asked and expected to carry without assistance of any kind.

And, remember that though your arms may rest, your body may recline, and every limb and other sense may be to a great extent dormant at times, your eyes are always seeing unless they are closed—always active during every waking hour.

Hardly any wonder, then, that eye strain is so common and up to recently so many have had to call on artificial aid in order to see at all.

You know the eye is just like a little camera. It has the lens with the iris opening which enlarges and contracts agreeably to the amount of light existing. It also has a dark chamber which may be compared to a camera bellows, and the retina corresponding to the sensitive plate. It has three sets of muscles—one turns the eyes in any direction, one contols the iris, and one operates the focus.

When, through nervous exhaustion or over-taxation, the circulation of blood in the eyes becomes weaker than is normal, these muscles become flabby and refuse to act up to their usual standard, and the eyes do not focus easily if at all. Premature old-sight is the result.

The muscles still do their best to focus properly; eagerly struggle and strain to properly do the work which your brain commands them to do—strain and struggle so hard in fact that they affect the tired nerves, and not only cause headaches, of which this is the most fruitful cause, but put the entire nervous system under a pressure which extends to the stomach and digestive organs, and brings on nausea and dyspepsia.

What eye specialist is there who has not heard from his patient: "Why, I had no idea in the world that it could be my eyes." There are many physicians, in fact, who look to the eyes for one of the first causes of stomach trouble.

It is perfectly amazing in reviewing the progress of science, surgery and medicine in the last fifty years, that the methods of correcting eye affections, even of the simplest kind, seem to have been entirely overlooked.

Science in physiology is correcting deformities which used to require harnesses or mechanical support. Surgery is correcting displacements which heretofore caused lifelong confinement. Physicians are departing more and more from the old-fashioned practice of continual drugging, and using more rational methods of restoring and preserving health.

But, until the recent discovery of this system of exercise to which I refer, no matter how simple your eye-trouble was, you were told that you had to wear eyeglasses.

Now, eye-glasses are not necessarily to be despised. They are a great invention in their way—so are crutches.

But you would not relish the anticipation that you had to use crutches all your life—nor would you. Just as soon as your sprained ankle, for instance, was in condition to stand it, your doctor would instruct you to touch it to the ground gradually and exercise it to bring back the normal circulation necessary to enable you to discard your crutch. Exactly the same with a broken arm—exercise it as soon as possible to bring it back to normal.

The wearing of eye-glasses is just exactly like using a crutch for life. Instead of growing stronger by their use, the eyes grow weaker, and you probably are well aware of the fact that in order to see perfectly the wearer of glasses must change them from time to time for new and stronger ones.

Let us see what authorities say on the subject of eye massage: Doctor De Schweinitz, of Philadelphia, Professor of Ophthalmology in Jefferson College, makes the statement that in treating so serious a condition as dreaded cataract of the eye, massage of the eye-ball "has been followed by improvement in vision and deepening of the anterior chamber." The Medical-Record, in writing of the same serious ailment, urges the great value of "any means that would bring an increased blood supply" and considers that "the most feasible plan seems to be properly applied massage."

It would, of course, be impossible to satisfactorily or even safely give this massage (or exercise) with the hands, but this problem was successfully solved a few years ago by a New York specialist, who realized through experience how many troubles of the eyes could be quickly corrected by this method.

The greatest and most practical inventions usually seem the simplest and most obvious once they become known, and this one is no exception to that rule. So simple is it that any one can use it in their own home without instruction, yet it is so safe that there is not the slightest chance of giving the eyes anything but great benefit, no matter how long they may have been affected.

This system of exercise is fully explained, also many interesting scientific facts about the eyes are given in a little book on the subject, which will be sent without cost if you address Charles Tyrrell, M.D., 134 West 65th Street, New York, and mention having read this article in THE CHRISTIAN HERALD.

It may, with reason, be suggested that at no time could this system have been perfected more opportunely than now. At no time has the world demanded more perfect men and women; and if your eyes are weak, whether you wear glasses or not, it is not necessary for any one to point out its disadvantages—perhaps you even consider glasses a disfigurement to a certain degree—surely they are an inconvenience.

Of course you cannot put new muscles in an eye, as you would a new tire on an automobile, but you can restore health to these muscles and give them the renewed strength that assures the thorough performance of their natural work.

Personally I have seen this system in a few months make a boy of eighteen entirely independent of glasses who had worn them continuously for twelve years; also enable old folks over sixty to discard their glasses in an incredibly short time. Therefore, I believe it is safe to assume that many thousands of spectacles will cease to be useful as this system becomes generally known, and I am sure that every one whose eyes are affected in any way, whether a wearer of glasses or not, will be greatly interested in the little book which tells so much about the eyes and their care.—Advt.

FREE—8 ROSES—FREE

BY a happy arrangement with other publishers we are enabled to offer four (4) magazines:

The Pictorial Review The Modern Priscilla
The Ladies' World The Christian Herald

at a lower rate than they have ever been offered before, and in addition to give every person who takes immediate advantage of the offer eight guaranteed rose bushes absolutely Free.

Think of it! Four magazines—three monthlies designed to keep the woman of today up-to-date on all matters that pertain to household economy, dress, home matters of all kinds; and one weekly, The Christian Herald, which brings you the illustrated news of the world from the Christian standpoint in such plain, straightforward language that every reader is kept abreast of the times.

And furthermore, an opportunity to secure the making of a beautiful rose garden without cost. Spring is almost here, and you will enjoy planting these eight hardy bushes which, with simple care, will blossom and yield you a harvest of beauty. Read the description of the plants below, and imagine how they will look blooming in your own garden. If you have never had a garden before, begin to have one now, and watch the result—the everbloomers tastefully arranged in the garden, the climbers beautifying the front porch.

This offer is limited to March 31. · Order at once and take advantage of this opportunity to secure the eight rose bushes FREE.

Here Are the Roses

EVERBLOOMERS

BESSIE BROWN—Snow-white, delicately tinted pink. Flowers large and beautifully formed, lasting a long time after being cut. One of the finest roses of late introduction.

KAISERIN AUGUSTA VICTORIA—Delicate creamy white. Buds are elegant, long and pointed; flowers full and double; very fragrant. One of the most beautiful of all roses for open ground culture, being perfectly hardy.

MRS. B. R. CANT—A beautiful rose of splendid habit of growth, being very strong and free-blooming, bearing large double flowers of a beautiful carmine red. Valuable for outdoor culture.

PERLE DES JARDINS (Pearl of the Garden)—Rich golden-yellow. Often sold in cut flower stores for "Marechal Niel," so close is the resemblance. Buds of immense size; flowers globular, and very fragrant. Dark, thick, shiny foliage.

WELLESLEY—Clear rose-pink, reverse of petals silvery rose. A vigorous grower and free bloomer, with extra large double flowers.

PINK MAMAN COCHET (The Queen of all Pink Garden Roses)—The buds are beautiful, large, full and firm and exquisitely pointed; as they expand they show great depth and richness, sometimes measuring two and one-half inches from base to tip. Perfectly hardy in all sections of the country. The color is clear, rich pink, changing to silvery rose.

CLIMBERS

LADY GODIVA—A new climbing rose. This rose is similar in habit of growth to the Crimson Rambler. Blooming in immense clusters it is a beautiful sight. Its color is most pleasing, being a pale flesh, the lightest of all the pink shades. A very rapid and free branching sort, hardy as an oak, deserving a place in every garden.

TAUSENDSCHON (Thousand Beauties)—The most wonderful climbing rose yet introduced, blooming profusely from the beginning of June until the last of July. The roses appear in large clusters. The color runs from delicate flesh or tender rose through the intermediate shades of bright rose and carmine, with white and creamy tints showing. There is no other rose in cultivation like it. It is a strong grower, with but few thorns and absolutely hardy.

MORE ABOUT A "GOOD" KITCHEN

IN HOW many homes do we find the Martha of to-day busy in the kitchen, while Mary, even as Mary of old, improves the hour learning some greater lesson of life? To be sure, somebody must do the work, and, if there is no hired maid, or one incompetent, the task of serving the meal must fall upon one member of the household while another entertains the honored guest. Such is the apology of many an unselfish woman when you ask how it is that the other sister, or the grown daughter, finds so much time for self-culture when she, the housekeeper, has none.

Because of her ceaseless toil in providing for her loved ones the best that can be had, many a modern Martha, "troubled about many things," becomes so hampered by the thousand and one petty cares of the household that she finds no time for self-advancement; for books, recreation, art, friends and interests outside the four walls of her home. Many a golden opportunity she loses for want of an hour "to spare." For her there is no "margin of time."

The Price of "a Dollar Saved"

Our sympathies go out to the women who give themselves, the best and all there is in them, ungrudgingly to the duties of the home. Yet we wish they were often less patient and uncomplaining than they are. For hundreds of women who see the value of, and long to possess, this or that time- and labor-saving device feel that no other member of the household "understands," so, rather than complain, they "put up" with tools and methods long out of date. What we desire but cannot afford we must learn to do without, but let us be sure that our "economy" is not figured blindly, at a high price paid in health or the sacrifice of greater things than "a dollar saved." That is why we wish that the modern Marthas were not so patient as they often are.

From a little Western town comes the story of a woman accustomed to doing all her own work, who was taken ill; during that week her husband was obliged to get very well acquainted with the kitchen; when the housewife took up her duties again it was he who suggested that a "fireless" would be a "good investment" and that this, that or the other thing ought to be "looked into." You see, a small dose of unsweetened experience suggested to this man that his wife might possibly make a better investment of the hours spent in "pot-watching" over a hot stove; also that with five or ten minutes' preparation after supper the oatmeal for breakfast could be safely left to "cook itself" and thereby give "mother" a much needed "forty extra winks" in the early morning.

Other Helps

As a matter of fact the advent of the fireless cooker has not only meant that a woman may spend hours and hours away from the kitchen that a few years ago she had to spend in it, but affords another proof that the easiest and most attractive way to do a thing is often economy as well. With fireless cooking one may prepare with a clear conscience inexpensive cuts of meat such as "chuck," "flank" and others which are very nutritious but not palatable if cooked by ordinary methods. Under the slow, even temperature of "the fireless," and away from the drying influence of hot air, these pieces are rendered tender, whereas by other methods the hard fibers are only made more tough.

We might take up pages describing the many improved devices that are among the things which every woman ought to know. For instance, the scrubbing machine that looks like a carpet sweeper but will hold two gallons of water and uses a brush to scrub the floor; no back-breaking; no soiled skirt; no labor that any well woman would hesitate to do, with the result as good, if not better, than by the old way. Our worthy ancestors took three separate receptacles for the cooking of any three kinds of food; to-day the progressive housewife cooks three dishes over one burner of an oil or gas range, or a single opening in the range, in the many instances where it is practical to use a triplicate pail. Also she has found an improved tea kettle having a small inset boiler in which cereal or custard may be prepared while water is being boiled.

Of long-handled brushes and pans and floor mops and the washing machine, indispensable in servantless homes where health is of value and time counts, we have already spoken. As much might be said of the vacuum cleaner; that never-tired servant which has banished the trials and tribulations of old-fashioned housecleaning in thousands of homes. Even where there is no electricity for motor power, satisfactory models operated by hand may be found.

Last, but by no means least, let us mention the kitchen cabinet; a space-saver which means a step-saver as well. These cabinets come in a number of good models, some with porcelain or aluminum tops and some of steel construction with a white enamel finish, as well as in wood. As a combined pantry and kitchen table the housewife finds here all her utensils and staple supplies right at hand; all the things necessary for ordinary cooking without having to take an extra step for any one.

The Kitchen Beautiful

Now a word as to the kitchen beautiful: if we spend hours upon hours in this room we have a right to insist that it shall be beautiful. Happily, order, that is heaven's first law, is likewise the first law of beauty in the kitchen, and utility the key-note of its wise decoration. So we find that even a row of knives, can openers, strainers and small utensils hung up in orderly and convenient arrangement above the work table, may become an ornamental feature of the room. So, too, a well-arranged display of pots and pans conveniently hung near the range, instead of tucked away in a dark closet, is a decorative asset not to be despised. But if we mix indiscriminately together gray agateware and blue, tin, iron and aluminum the sought-for "effect" is lost.

A plate shelf can be made highly decorative if set out with casseroles, platters, jugs and pitchers of one kind or another, providing only that the things are suitable, harmonious in color and not too many of them. A plate shelf that becomes a "catch-all" is infinitely worse than none at all.

Finally no kitchen can be attractive that is ill-lighted; and the color of the walls has almost as much to do with this as the size of the windows. Since, as we pointed out last week, a woman can, as a last resort, paint the walls herself—adding perhaps a pretty stencil border—there is no good excuse for having them other than cheerful and bright. It is not necessary to be an artist; directions given in the booklets published by our best paint houses are simple and the cost small.

Cleanliness, efficiency and beauty. In these three words we summed up last week the requirements of a good kitchen; by which we mean a kitchen planned and equipped to lighten the burden of housework; to lessen the monotony of routine tasks; to save the time and spare the strength of the housewife so that she may have greater opportunities for "getting the most out of life." Only by efficient tools and methods can the woman of to-day who does all, or most, of her own work, go about her duties as a queen, rather than a servant, in the kingdom of her home.

book in his mother's hand, then he took it and put it on the table.

"Ain't you goin' to read it, Will?"

"Naw, quit botherin' me!"

Mrs. Gillen turned away with a sigh and left the room. She did not quite understand why Scrimp wanted Will to read her books, she only knew that the girl's heart was set upon it.

Will sat staring at the book. Finally, after looking around carefully to see that the children were not noticing, he reached over and opened it. Scrimp's eager little lectures had not passed over him without making some impression.

Mrs. Gillen, coming into the room a little later, found him reading. He was so absorbed that he did not notice her entrance. She glanced up at the clock and saw that it was past the time when he usually went out to the gang. Eagerly she rushed up the stairs to tell Scrimp.

It was only a few days later that Will sheepishly asked his mother if Scrimp had any more of "them books." Then one evening he stamped awkwardly up the stairs to ask the meaning of some point he did not understand and stayed, in spite of himself, to listen until bedtime to Scrimp's enthusiastic explanation. After that it gradually came about that Scrimp and Will were studying together. No longer did Mrs. Gillen have cause to mourn that Scrimp had ceased to whistle, for the house was filled with her cheery piping, and her eyes glowed, and a soft pink came to her cheeks.

"I can keep up with the lessons at school by teaching them to Will!" Scrimp explained joyously to her mother. "Isn't it wonderful! Mother, he hasn't been out with the gang lately!"

"That's a fact, Scrimp!" Mrs. Gillen said happily.

But that evening she watched Will anxiously as he prepared to go out. "Ain't you goin' up to study with Scrimp?" she asked.

"Naw."

"Where you goin'?"

"Nowheres."

Scrimp waited impatiently for Will. She had been studying for hours in preparation for the evening lesson. Finally she called, "Mother, mother! Why doesn't Will come up?"

"He—he's gone out, Scrimp!"

"Gone out!" Scrimp's voice shook with the fall of the hope which she had been so joyously upbuilding.

"Yes."

"Oh!" Scrimp turned her head helplessly back and forth on the pillow. Had she failed then, after all? Had Will gone back to the gang? The evening seemed endless. Scrimp lay there in the darkness, listening, listening. The clock struck nine, half-past, then ten. She heard her mother moving about in the kitchen; she seemed to see her strained, anxious face.

"Mother!" she called; "has he come?"

"Not yet," her mother answered.

Three times Scrimp repeated this question, and each time came the same reply. At last she could endure the suspense no longer. In spite of the pain in her back, she rose from bed and struggled somehow into her clothes. Slowly, painfully, she made her way down to the kitchen.

"Scrimp, child!" her mother rushed to her side. "Oh, Scrimp! the doctor said you mustn't move! You'll hurt yourself! Oh, Scrimp!" she moaned, "why did you, why did you?"

Scrimp sank weakly into a chair. "I—I couldn't stand it any longer," she panted. "Oh, I wish Will would come! I wish he would come! I think I'll die if he doesn't come soon!"

"Oh, Scrimp, Scrimp!" Mrs. Gillen stood over her, fanning her with a newspaper.

Just then the door opened and Will stepped in. There was a strange light in his eyes. Under one arm he carried a pack of books. He looked about him as though just waking from a happy dream.

"Will!" Scrimp suddenly rose to her feet, her eyes going from his face to the books he carried. "Oh, Will! Where have you been?"

"Over to Callenville," the boy grunted sheepishly.

"Callenville?" Scrimp almost sang the word.

Will walked over to the table and began to fumble his books. "They've got an evenin' school over there," he flung out.

"Will!"

"Guess I'll go to it. Say, Scrimp, ever hear that there's a way poor fellows can go to college if they want to? Man over there was tellin' us. Say, they've got a gymnasium and a swimmin' pool and—and it's great! Aw, what you cryin' about, Scrimp?"

DEATH OF THE COUNTESS SCHIMMELMANN

WORD has just been received by THE CHRISTIAN HERALD of the death of Countess Adeline Schimmelmann, which occurred on November 18, 1913, in Germany. This exceptional Christian woman was well known to our readers. She was born in the Castle of Ahrensburg, in Holstein (where her body is now buried), July 19, 1854. At the age of eighteen, the Empress Augusta bestowed upon her the rank of lady of honor. She resided at court for eighteen years, toward the end of which she visited the prisons and came to know much of the condition of the poor. She gave up the life of the court and, after a period of solitude on the Island of Ruegen in the Baltic, took to ministering to the fishermen of that region. Her work was encouraged by the emperor and empress, but her family opposed it. She was seized in the streets of Copenhagen and imprisoned as insane. Regaining her liberty and also possession of her jewels, she resumed her work amongst the fishermen, and, in order to buy a mission ship, disposed of her personal belongings. In the yacht Duen she crossed the Atlantic in 1898, and by way of the St. Lawrence and the Great Lakes reached Chicago. There the ship was transferred into a public meeting place for homeless men among the German, Danish and English population. During the remainder of her lifetime, assisted by her adopted son, Paul Shimmelmann, this noble woman did great good in the name of her Saviour. She was loved and will be long remembered by many. "Precious in the sight of the Lord is the death of his saints." (Ps. 116: 15.)

THE CHRISTIAN HERALD'S INFLUENCE

I do not know where I should have been today had it not been for the influence of the dear old CHRISTIAN HERALD. It has bridged over many muddy, mucky places for poor old me to walk over dryshod. One night in 1881 I was lying awake thinking of its influence, and it must have led me so close to God that I reached out and touched the hem of his garment, for I was made whole that hour. P. W. R.

AMONG THE WORKERS

—THE CITY PLANNING BOARD of Boston has turned its attention to mothers and children who are compelled to work and live in damp cellars. In order to have healthy mothers and children, the board urges we must compel landlords to give them a fit place to live in.

—AMONG THOSE prominent in connection with Y. M. C. A. work among the lumbermen in the Oregon forests is Mr. J. A. Goodell, international industrial secretary, Y. M. C. A., for the Northwest, Portland, Ore. In a recent article on the subject in THE CHRISTIAN HERALD, written by Lucius Willard, this work was vividly described and credit should have been given to Mr. Godell for his service.

—THE BROOKLYN FEDERATION OF JEWISH CHARITIES is supporting a moving-picture education campaign, to show how the Jews care for their poor and to educate the public as to what is being done and can be done by properly organized charity. It is to the credit of the Jewish societies that they faithfully attend to the material needs of their unfortunate co-religionists, and do not permit them to become dependent upon public charity.

—MISSIONARY W. C. TERRIL (M. E.), writes from Inhambane, East Africa: "The results of the famine here are many, but possibly sickness caused by the famine of the last two years is the worst of all. Hundreds, and I can venture to say thousands, are sick, and some of them sick unto death, as a result of the lack of food during the past two years. We have scores who are coming to us each week pleading for help. We are able to do a little for them, but not much."

—T. J. BACH, missionary of the Scandinavian Alliance Mission, writes from Maracaibo, Venezuela, South America, January 6: "Just before Christmas, I returned from a six weeks' trip to the Andes. On foot and on mule-back, I made a trip through three States and sold or gave away about five big boxes of Bibles and evangelical books. I also visited Cucuta, Colombia, a city with about 30,000 inhabitants, but without missionaries. Indeed, the field here is large, and the workers are few."

—IN THE TENNESSEE MOUNTAINS much Christian uplift has been accomplished. On entering many of the cabin homes you meet a ragged crowd of children who often take their meals of corn bread and milk sitting on the floor. There are no books or papers of any kind. The American Sunday School Union is doing much to lift the destitute mountaineers of the South out of their ignorance and superstition, by distributing Bibles, library books, Sunday school lesson helps, etc. The Sunday school missionary is A. E. Browne. It is a life full of toil and self-sacrifice, and beset with danger to health and life itself.

—MORE THAN one hundred members of the New York Police Department are now members of the physical department of the West Side Young Men's Christian Association, Eighth Avenue and Fifty-seventh Street, New York. Most of the men are patrolmen, but quite a few are plain-clothes detectives who use the gymnasium as a means of keeping in physical trim for their work. According to Physical Director Dr. Louis R. Welzmiller the policemen, as a class, are more regular in attendance and harder workers than any other class of men. Track running is a favorite exercise with the policemen, and, according to the director, he would match any one of the hundred patrolmen against the fleetest-footed criminal and is certain the policeman would win out.

—THE ALDRICH-CARR EVANGELISTIC campaign in Portville, N. Y., during January and February was conducted in a building which forty men put up. When the mercury stood at thirty-four below zero it was as warm as toast in the tabernacle. For more than five weeks the building was filled to its limit. Many men and women became Christians, many Christians consecrated their lives for a more abundant service. Men confessed they had been saved from a drunkard's life. Whole families went to the altar together. Evangelist Aldrich is a strong speaker and organizer, and the youngest tabernacle evangelist in the United States. He presents Bible truth in a logical and forceful manner, and does not believe in "pulling or hauling" men to the altar. Those who decide to become Christians have to decide for themselves and do not come forward because they have been overurged. His instruction to converts is very thorough and they are well established and unite with the churches before the meetings close. Four whisky towns in which Mr. Aldrich and his party conducted a campaign last year went dry the following election.

LIFE'S ROAD

Smoothed by Change of Food.

Worry is a big load to carry and an unnecessary one. When accompanied by indigestion it certainly is cause for the blues.

But the whole trouble may be easily thrown off and life's road be made easy and comfortable by proper eating and the cultivation of good cheer. Read what a Troy woman says:

"Two years ago I made the acquaintance of Grape-Nuts and have used the food once a day and sometimes twice, ever since.

"At the time I began to use it life was a burden. I was for years afflicted with bilious sick headache, caused by indigestion, and nothing seemed to relieve me.

"The trouble became so severe I had to leave my work for days at a time.

"My nerves were in such a state I could not sleep and the doctor said I was on the verge of nervous prostration. I saw an adv. concerning Grape-Nuts and bought a package for trial

"What Grape-Nuts has done for me is certainly marvelous. I can now sleep like a child, am entirely free from the old trouble and have not had a headache in over a year. I feel like a new person. I have recommended it to others. One man I knew ate principally Grape-Nuts, while working on the ice all winter, and said he never felt better in his life."

Ever read the above letter? A new one appears from time to time. They are genuine, true, and full of human interest.

Helping Colored Mothers

FOR thirty years a work for colored mothers has been maintained under many difficulties at Haddonville, N. J., under the auspices of the Woman's Christian Temperance Union. Mrs. Isabel Shipley is the superintendent, and has succeeded in bringing a great deal of comfort into the lives of working women of the colored race who have homes dependent upon them. These mothers are brought together in cheerful meetings and both helped and taught to better their lot. Arrangements are made to assist them in their necessary purchases and to help them in their earnings. This winter the work has been extended to take in a larger district, the need being great. Mrs. Shipley found herself confronted with many pleas for a larger circle of those who could enjoy the benefits of these mother-meetings, and in the face of the heavily increased expense has undertaken to meet the call. These helpful meetings are but one line of the excellent work among colored people conducted under Mrs. Shipley's direction.

Our Cover This Week

"WHERE the Trails Cross" shows Renard in a dilemma. From the brilliancy of the snow and the deep blue of the sky we see that it is still night—a white night with a dazzling moon—probably three or four o'clock in the morning. The fox has arisen early for his breakfast, but his quarry has outwitted him. Following the scent Renard has come upon the spot where the animal he has been pursuing has doubled on his tracks. The fox stands perplexed, in doubt which way to turn.

The painter of this picture, Eugene Ludwig Hoess, is one of the modern German artists who is attracting considerable attention at the present time. The color scheme is admirable. Nothing could be more attractive than the deep royal blue of the night-sky in contradistinction to the luminous whiteness of the snow.

"WHEN THE WEST WITH EVENING GLOWS"

From the painting by Joseph Farquharson

After 10,000 Miles

We Require Reo the Fifth to Stay New

This is why Reo the Fifth has so long held a unique and envied place.

It is built for extremes of service. Built by a man who for 27 years has been learning what cars must stand.

Test cars with this chassis have been subjected to hard usage. They are run at high speed, night and day, on rough roads. After 10,000 miles of this use and abuse we take them apart and inspect them. And we require that vital parts show little evidence of wear.

Must Stay New

Every steel formula, every specification is based on these radical tests. The question is not what will serve for one season. Not what is safe under normal conditions.

We require every gear and bearing, after 10,000 miles of reckless driving, to show up in good condition. Then we know that you won't have troubles. We know that your car will stay new.

Then, to insure this super-strength, we have steel made to formula. And each lot is analyzed twice.

We have a four-story laboratory for testing every part and material.

Each must meet the standards that we fix, based on 10,000-mile tests.

Our Radical Tests

Gears are tested in a 50-ton crushing machine. Springs are tested for 100,000 vibrations. Engines get five tests, lasting 48 hours.

All driving parts must stand a test for 50 per cent. over-capacity. That is our margin of safety.

We use 15 roller bearings to avoid the risk of ball bearings. We use 190 drop forgings to avoid risk of flaws. In close-fitting parts we require utter exactness.

Our clutch is of a very costly kind. It avoids the clashing of gears which so ruins transmissions. The gears are shifted by a light center rod—by a three-inch movement of the hand. This easy method of gear shifting is exclusive with us.

By slowness and care and costly extremes we add 25 per cent. to the necessary cost of each car. But it comes back to users, over and over, in longer service and lessened cost of upkeep.

Now We Save $220

Now all the costly machinery we built for this chassis has been charged against previous output. We enter this year with that item wiped out. This saving, with others, we deduct from our price —$220 in all.

Reo the Fifth, with electric starter, last year sold for $1,395, equipped. This year's model, better equipped, sells for $1,175. Mainly as a result of clinging for years to one perfected chassis. That a car like this can be built at this price is the marvel of the times in Motordom.

This Year's Newness

This year we adopt the beautiful streamline body, now European vogue. We adopt the best type of electric starter and lights. We give you dimming searchlights, a flush-set instrument board, and all you can wish in equipment.

We give you luxurious upholstery, perfect finish, big tires. We have made the beauty of this car match our engineering.

The Car to Keep

Reo the Fifth appeals to men who buy their cars to keep. Men who want cars to stay new. The demand has grown and grown. Last year's sale exceeded all records by 30 per cent. And the evidence is that this year's demand will far exceed our output.

More and more, experienced motorists have come to demand a car like this — the utmost in an honest car — the best that R. E. Olds can do.

CARRYING THE CHARM OF THE COUNTRY INTO THE TOWN. ROCHESTER, N. Y.

DELANCEY STREET—THROUGH THE HEART OF NEW YORK'S SLUMS

MAKING AMERICA BEAUTIFUL

BY F. A. COLLINS

A WIDESPREAD campaign of education is being carried on throughout the country, looking to the beautifying of cities and towns through intelligent planning. Evidences of this movement may be observed on every hand in the establishment of civic centers and in the effort to provide sanitary, convenient and economical houses and the laying out of logical and beautiful street systems.

There are two general groups of city planning advocates in America, those who advocate the "central" group system, and a second school, which favors the "departmental" group. The former group, as the name indicates, believes in a central, harmonious plan radiating from a common center, while the second group would unite a number of different centers or groups. In practically every large city in America will be found to-day a permanent organization in charge of an expert city designer for better city planning. One radical movement looking to the beautifying of cities consists in establishing residential and industrial districts. The law in any city will prevent the erection of buildings which hes under the head of a blic nuisance, but the movement actually stricts the encroachment factories, for instance, n residence neighborhds, as well as protects industrial groups from ldings of any other ss. The residential sec-s, for instance, may er from the encroachnt of factories, the exsive smoke, the noise of hinery. On the other d, a real hardship may worked for the factory up which is not pertted to expand. By conng buildings used for ilar purposes to defi districts the rights of are observed. Such uping is of course of greatest value in workout a general scheme ity planning and beauing. The new plan ks well in Minneapolis, h has been the pioneer in this reform.

practically every American city will found some organizaworking for housing reform. In many cases the object is to provide model cottages or flats for workingmen. In these model settlements a common architectural scheme is usually fixed upon, and the laying out of the streets and the designing of the houses is entrusted to skilful engineers and architects. An up-to-date system of drainage, artistic planting and parking is decided upon in advance. There is besides a national organization for investigating the conditions in the slums in large cities and devising means of relieving such conditions. The most attractive work of this kind is to be found abroad, principally in England and Germany.

An excellent work is being done throughout the country in regulating the heights of buildings. Special commissions have been appointed to study the subject, the general public is being educated as to the importance of the movement and legislation is being sought to give the new ideas effect. Although it is desirable, of course, that the height of buildings be made uniform for the sake of symmetry, this movement has a far greater significance. Investigations have been made in a score of American cities to determine the effects of such regulations on property and rental values, and on the general growth and development of the community. Most people would say off-hand that the highest buildings in our modern cities are the office buildings. As a matter of fact hotels have the greatest average height. Tables have been prepared showing the number of people on each floor of high buildings and the amount of air and light which is possible in streets of a given width. The height of buildings, it is shown, directly affects the health and even the morals of the community. In eighteen cities in the United States the limit has been fixed by law; in Boston, for example, the limit is 125 feet; in Chicago and Cleveland, 200 feet, and in Milwaukee, 225 feet.

SWOPE PARK, KANSAS CITY, MO. A CITY PARK OF MORE THAN A THOUSAND ACRES

No detail of our cities receives more intelligent attention to-day than the public parks and breathing spaces. In planning new cities the amount of parking space is greatly increased, while in the most crowded cities these beauty spots are distributed with a prodigal hand. A special study has been made as to the best plan of locating the parks that they may be most accessible to the class most dependent upon them, and their value is supplemented by a variety of public playgrounds. Largely as a result of this study landscape gardening has become a fine art in America. The parks are losing their conventionality, and becoming more livable. The natural beauty of the land is preserved, while by planting native flowers and shrubs an entirely new element of beauty has been introduced.

The development of a new taste in all civic improvements is especially noticeable in the treatment of city bridges in all parts of the country. Many millions of dollars are spent every year for bridges in our cities, and a great opportunity is thus afforded for producing really beautiful structures. In the past bridges have been built too much with an eye to their utility alone, and little thought has been expended in making them a delight to the eye. Now it is realized that the presence of an ornamental structure increases the value of land, and from every point of view is desirable. In many cities the designing of bridges has become a live civic issue, and vigorous campaigns are being waged to make the structures attractive. One evidence of this is found in the greater variety of building materials now employed, whereas a few years ago only bare steel girders were used.

The designing of artistic and suitable standards for street lamps to-day receives far more attention than formerly. An attractive standard costs no more than an ugly one, but, as a rule, this detail is overlooked. In St. Louis prizes were offered for the best designs, conducted by a municipal art committee. As a result an attractive standard of real artistic merit will now replace the cast-iron horrors in many miles of city streets.

Even in the busiest city street there is room for foliage which will relieve the eye and soften the outlines. A unique work of this kind is being carried on successfully in Minneapolis, for example, where window boxes and hanging gardens have been introduced into the business thoroughfares. Last year more than 15,000 feet of hanging gardens were maintained in the busiest streets. The business houses are regularly canvassed for the purpose, and agreements are made for installing boxes of flowers or shrubbery. A private subscription was started furthermore to instal hanging gardens upon the ornamental lamp-posts of the city. More than 500 of these attractive miniature gardens have been installed by an association which regularly waters the plants and replaces the flowers when they wither. As the result of this public-spirited work and at very trifling expense Minneapolis has won the enviable title of the "City of Flowers and Hanging Gardens."

A transformation has been worked in the streets of many cities by organizing campaigns to improve the system of refuse cans and educate the public to their use. An examination of the problem in Philadelphia recently led to the conclusion that success depended upon the close co-operation of the tenants. A trial area of eight blocks in one of the dirtiest sections was laid out and sixty street cans of an improved design were installed. A circular printed both in English and Yiddish was prepared and distributed to every family. The teachers in the public schools in the neighborhood and the settlement workers were interested in the work. So successful has been the experiment that the city has authorized the purchase of 1,492 cans to continue the experiment. To advance this campaign for clean streets Philadelphia has appointed a lady who has made a special study of the work to devote her entire time to awakening interest in civic organizations and among the women and children in the work of keeping the streets clean.

Another of the evidences of the awakening of the civic spirit throughout the country will be found in the celebration of Fire Prevention Day. There is a national association for arousing interest in th movement. In many States and cities October 9 set aside for the celebration. One of the plans is t dramatize the fire history of the city, and thus brin to the attention of all the importance of takin every possible precaution against this danger.

The extent of the work accomplished in establisl ing forests and preserving wooded districts com as a pleasant surprise. The public is being educate throughout the country to realize the value of tre for shade and esthetic purposes, as well as f lumber, and is being taught how to care for then A well-organized and active State forestry associa tion, for example, is working a revolution in Mass chusetts. The plan in this case has been to divi the State into twelve districts, and place a traine forester in charge of each section. The forest creates interest in the cities and towns and organiz branch associations. The district is systematicall canvassed. A list of those likely to be interested the work is prepared and circulars, letters and othe literature are sent to them. A letter addressed t the woodland, orchard, and shade-tree owners then published in the local papers, announcing tha the forester will be pleased to call upon them an offer expert advice free of charge. By dropping postal card to the forester an engagement may made for the forester to call at an early date. this way new members are secured for the associa tion. There are at present more than 4,000 activ members. In case there is forestry work to be do of any kind the forester estimates on the work an carries it out. Any one in the State may thus hav the service of the consulting forester and the wo is intelligently planned and executed. The examp of a piece of first-class forestry work is often fa reaching in cities of every class. The man who ow a single shade tree, for instance, may have a skilf piece of tree surgery performed which will have widespread influence upon his neighborhood.

HELPING THE MEXICAN REFUGEES

IN a recent issue of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD there appeared a letter from an army chaplain —Rev. John T. Axton, 20th Infantry, U.S.A.— making a strong appeal for the women and children among the Mexican refugees at Fort Bliss Detention Camp. It was represented that over a thousand of the Mexican women fugitives and several hundred small children were in sad need of undergarments, shoes and stockings.

That Chaplain Axton's appeal has been effective is shown by the following letter just received:

DETENTION CAMP, FORT BLISS, TEXAS,
February 22.

The Christian Herald, New York.

DEAR FRIENDS: Enclosed is a complete list of donors to the relief of the Mexican refugees. These forty-four good friends have done a wonderful amount to relieve the suffering of women and children. Through their generosity we have been able to provide for all of the widows and orphans, all of the sick women and children and some of the wounded men, and for all of the very poor among the soldiers' families. Nearly a hundred pairs of good shoes came, several hundred pairs of stockings, underwear in abundance, dresses, skirts, coats, baby clothes, pin blankets, and little bootlets. Every package seemed to come from a heart that was filled with love for those who are unfortunate. One day I put baby clothes on nearly fifty infants, most of them brought to me naked, wrapped in dirty blankets.

One good woman sent a whole trunkful of fine things, and another two big bales by express. The packages are arriving by every mail, but I felt that you must have full acknowledgment of that portion already here.

We have been here five weeks, and are daily expecting the Mexican government to do something for the women and children, as they have for the men. There is no further distress, and my only need from now on will be for baby things for infants that are being born in camp nearly every day. Smallpox (we have lost five cases) has kept us in rigid quarantine, so I have had no helpers except as I could find them among Mexican women.

To every donor a letter of thanks has been se promptly. Will you add my word of gratitude CHRISTIAN HERALD readers? Tell them I shall lo them always, and that they deserve a special mea ure of sweetness in their lives for their though fulness in this matter. May God bless them a richly.

JOHN T. AXTON,
Chaplain, 20th Infantry.

This camp is a unique spot on our geography present and equally extraordinary in our histor Here has been transported a foreign city in poi of population without preparation for their rece tion or, on their part, for the strange change whi has taken place in their fortunes. It is just possib that international questions will arise after t settlement of Mexico, because of this forcible d tention of involuntary tourists. Washington, ho ever, decided that the United States would be the safe side of any controversy in treating th host from a humane point of view; and it is reaso able to suppose that when these refugees at la return to their country they will give their fello countrymen new opinions concerning Americ habits of life, our sense of justice and fair play, a our friendship for their distracted country.

A STREET IN THE REFUGEE CAMP

THE BATTLEFIELD OF OJINAGA

BY A TEXAS RANCH SUPERINTENDENT ON THE PECOS RIVER

Copyright Inter. News Service

ON MY return from San Antonio, I took a day off and went to Ojinaga. The papers have already described the affair, but possibly you would like to hear about what I saw. From what I can learn there were about forty-five hundred Federals in the Ojinaga garrison and some six thousand of the attacking rebels. Probably a thousand men were killed. It is said the rebels killed all the wounded Federals who were captured. From Alpine we went to Marfa. Nearing this place we came upon a small pasture of two or three sections, where we found the two thousand horses, mules and burros on which the Mexican Federal soldiers, after their defeat at Ojinaga, escaped across the Rio Grande to Presidio, Texas. Major McNamee, U.S.A., and his command used these animals in conveying the great horde of refugees, soldiers, women, children, cats, dogs and chickens over the seventy-five miles of mountain road to Marfa. At a distance, these animals resembled a great herd of cattle, as they were of many colors, most of them very thin with great saddle-sores on their backs, and in many instances the old worn-out saddle blanket sticking to the sores. There were about five hundred burros in the lot.

At Marfa we found some of the refugees, among them General Castro. The greater number had already been shipped to Fort Bliss. Those remaining were camped near our soldiers and carefully guarded. These people looked poor and were scantily clad, footsore and tired, but they seemed contented and reasonably happy, as they had been fed by the generous hand of Uncle Sam. It was curious to see the great pile of Mexican saddles, all of the large horn or pommel kind, with scarcely any leather rigging. There must have been several carloads stacked up and they were being hauled off in wagon-loads, to be stored, I suppose. And bridles! There were thousands, all in one great mound!

An American soldier asked how long it would take us to go to Presidio. Being answered, about four hours, he said: "Why, it took us four days to drive these people up here."

Leaving Marfa, we followed the wide, dust-beaten road to the southwest. The bushes and grass for hundreds of yards on either side are grayish white from the settling of clouds of dust stirred up by the passing of this great caravan of misery.

At Presidio, seventy-five miles from Marfa, we hired a Mexican driver with a hack and two little white mules to pull us through the sand. The mules did the work. Across the Rio Grande and to Ojinaga was a distance of about two miles. Nearing the river, we began to see more signs of the Federal rout. Coats, trousers and caps were scattered everywhere, particularly on the banks of the river and in the mud and water. One explanation of this is that Mexican soldiers, when defeated in battle, discard their uniforms in hopes that if captured their identity will not be so easily proven, for it is not a very healthy thing to be a prisoner of war in Mexico. Entering the Land of Liberty we climbed the river bank and passed across a low, sandy plain, covered with scattering bushes and hillocks of sand, the latter constantly moving and changing about by contrary winds. Every few hundred yards, and sometimes more frequently, we could see little piles of adobe, about two feet high and three feet wide. These were for the protection of the Federal pickets and sharpshooters. These little mounds were always placed in a bush and carelessly covered over with other brush, so as to escape observation. There were many horses on this plain, shot in battle.

We were soon climbing the mesa, on top of which the little adobe town is built. The elevation is possibly sixty to seventy-five feet and the angle of ascent about thirty to forty degrees. On top it is about a mile long and from two to six hundred yards in width. The plains surround it on three sides and the Rio Grande is on the fourth. The edges of the mesa are broken up by innumerable gullies and miniature cañons, which afforded good natural protection for the besieged fighters. On all the exposed points there are rifle pits and entrenchments, and across the gullies are hastily thrown up adobe walls.

GENERAL ORTEGA AND FEDERALS APPROACHING OJINAGA

Judging from a limited experience, I should say the man who planned these fortifications had an eye to business and little feeling for the fellow on the other side. They are built on different lines and angles, so that if one should be captured, the defenders could retire to a new position and "smother" the one just vacated with rifle fire. However, had I been an occupant, I would have wanted a little more labor expended on the job, even if it had been my own. The pits are usually about three feet in diameter, eighteen inches to two feet in depth, with an adobe wall on the enemy's side one foot high with port-hole, the excavated earth being banked up against the wall on the outside. The trenches are merely a prolongation of these pits, sometimes a little deeper and the walls a little higher and particularly so where field-guns were stationed. In these little holes those Federals ate, slept, fought and many of them died. Evidently they were not vacated for days at a time. The ashes of the camp-fires with cooking utensils—consisting mainly of tin cans, some still filled with food, others overturned and contents spilled—showing the hasty departure of the cooks, could be seen within easy arm's reach of these pits.

There were about thirty fieldpieces engaged on both sides and a great many machine guns. Evidence of their deadly destructiveness could be seen. Innumerable pieces of cannon shells could be found all about these trenches, and bloody garments, too, with great gory splotches on the ground. Most of us say the Mexicans won't fight, but it would have taken some mighty force to have held me there with those fellows, or to have driven me with the rebels charging across those barren plains, up that hill and to the muzzles of those belching, roaring, death-dealing tubes of steel. And just think—ninety per cent. of these people really don't know why they are fighting! They are children of ignorance, in the ditch of despair, fighting to escape brutal oppression and peonage in their most revolting forms. Who can blame them for trying to climb out to safety? Not I.

On driving into the town of Ojinaga, the wounded could be seen everywhere, some hobbling about, others lying in the wrecked houses or on the sidewalks in the shade, with their blood-dried dressings still on the wounded limbs.

We were driven to the cuartel, or military headquarters, where I alighted and asked the young unmilitary-looking sentinel—a mere boy (I noticed that most of the rebel soldiers appear to be between fourteen and twenty years of age)—if I could be permitted to see General Toribio Ortega. He said: "Yes; go in." As we entered, the general arose, shook hands with us and appeared glad that we had come. He is the commanding officer who planned and executed the attack on Ojinaga. He treated us with every consideration and courtesy, giving us the freedom of the town. He talked entertainingly of their hopes and how they appreciated the sympathies of the civilized peoples in their struggle for liberty. However, I don't want to be his prisoner of war. The town is shot to pieces. Not many houses are unscarred by cannon balls. I remember noticing one in particular that somehow had been untouched. It was plastered on the outside and showed the effect of small-arm fire. It must have had hundreds of bullets in its walls. The town was vilely dirty, with no sanitation apparently, and was filled with soldiers, filth and flies. Not over a dozen women were seen and few children except those in the army; no chickens or cows, just one poor little pig with a string around his leg, that had somehow escaped execution.

Speaking of the discarded clothing again, I think I am safe in saying we saw thousands of perfectly good caps, coats and trousers, enough to clothe the poor of San Antonio for years to come, lying where they were thrown. I found a captain's epaulets some thirty yards from the trenches, evidently where he had torn them from his shoulders as he ran.

SUMMARY OF THE WEEK'S WAR NEWS

EVENTS in Mexico during the week just closed take their importance chiefly from their relation to the question of possible intervention by one or more foreign powers. The Benton incident was closely followed by revelations of the seemingly deliberate murder of a Texas ranchman named Clemente Vergara, who, according to accounts, had been robbed of horses by a band of Federals and later lured across the border on the pretense of receiving payment and there captured, slain and his body hung from a tree. It had been supposed that Vergara was still alive but a captive, and the United States Government had demanded his release. The positive news of his murder aroused Governor Colquitt of Texas to represent to Secretary of State Bryan that Texas might feel warranted in sending State rangers across the border to recover the body. To this Secretary Bryan opposed national interests in view of the tense situation.

At that time Villa, under pressure, finally agreed to allow a commission to examine the body of the English ranchman, Benton. General Huerta issued a note to diplomats objecting to the lifting of the arms embargo, and ascribed the Benton incident to that act. Secretary Bryan made formal demand upon the Huerta government for the punishment of the Federal soldiers concerned in the killing of Vergara, and was assured of action by the Federal powers. Governor Colquitt explained that his communication to Secretary Bryan did not threaten an invasion of Mexico, but was directed to learning from the United States Government from whom in Mexico to demand justice as between two neighboring States. Secretary Bryan advised him to recognize the governor of the State of Nuevo Leon.

The commission appointed to go to Chihuahua City and examine the body of Benton was prevented from proceeding by orders from General Carranza, and the situation is thereby further complicated. The commission was about to board the train when forbidden to proceed. The Carranza action was looked upon as a move by the Constitutionalists to force recognition. The delay will frustrate the purpose of the commission, and the patience of President Wilson is known to be strained. The disposition of foreign governments is to wait upon action by the United States Government. Sir Lionel Carden, the British minister to Mexico, arrived in Washington en route for London, and was received by President Wilson on March 3.

PREMONITIONS OF FAITH

A SERMON

BY

TEXT: "There is a sound of abundance of rain." I Kings 18: 41

PRAYER has a threefold meaning and message. First of all, it means fellowship with God, talking to him while he talks to us. If we are out of fellowship with God, we cannot be in a prayerful mood; and if there were nothing in it but this—simply coming into God's presence—there would be blessing. If there were only worship with its reverence and adoration, the reflex influence on the soul would be profitable.

But prayer means also receiving from God. "Ask, and ye shall receive." "Ye have not, because ye ask not." "My God shall supply all your need."

But, more than fellowship and receiving, prayer is doing things through God. It is, of course, God doing things in us and through us, but we are "workers together with him." "If ye shall ask anything in my name, I will do it"—not give but do it—"that the Father may be glorified in the Son." We need fellowship, we need the gifts of God; but more even than fellowship and gifts, we need the activity of God—God doing things.

Elijah was a man of fellowship; he walked with God. He was also a man who received large gifts from God in answer to prayer. But he went further. He was not satisfied with simple fellowship and receiving. He accomplished things through God, because God works in answer to prayer. The old adage, "Prayer moves the arm that moves the world," is not out of date, and as we read the biography of Elijah, from the first verse when he springs out like a thunderbolt from the sky, we realize he is doing things because he is linked with God; God is working through his character, his faith, his prayers, to the overcoming of evil and the establishment of good.

In the text is a premonition of faith. "There is a sound of an abundance of rain." As yet Elijah had not seen the cloud the size of a man's hand; as yet the sky was clear; as yet the ground was parched. There was no visible token that the rain was coming; and yet Elijah had a premonition of faith that the rain was coming. He could hear it further than he could see it; he did not need the cloud to convince him that the rain was on the way. The Septuagint translates this in a very beautiful poetic way: "There is a sound of the feet of rain." I hear the footfalls of the raindrops; they are coming. I cannot see them; my outer ear does not catch the sound, but the inner ear hears the patter of their feet.

The Forerunner of Faith

This premonition in Elijah was reasonable. It was not a superstition; it was not a mere presentiment; it was not a feeling or emotion. He had good solid reason for the premonition of faith that stirred his soul. And this premonition of faith was an energizing power in his heart and life. The premonition of faith was reasonable, because it was founded upon God's word of promise and warning. God hath said, "If the people turn to idols, I will withhold the dew and the rain." He had said, "Whenever the people turn from their idols back to me, with a confession of their sins, I will send the dew and the rain." Elijah simply brought this word of God before him and said, "Lord, the people have turned to idols; be true to thy word and withhold the rain." After they had turned from their idols back to God, he said, "Be true to thy promise." When he went before Ahab and said, "As the Lord God of Israel liveth, there shall be no rain and dew, but according to my word," he was speaking according to the word of God; he believed that God would be true to his threatenings. As to the coming of the rain, he had the promise. He believed the general promise: "Let the people repent, and the rain will come." He also believed the definite promise: "Go to Ahab, and I will send the rain now." We should have a premonition of blessings when we have been pleading God's promises; and we may well have a premonition of judgment if we have been disobedient. God is as faithful to his threatenings as to his promises.

Elijah's premonition of faith was based upon strict obedience. Elijah did exactly what God told him, he did not ask any questions; with childlike simplicity he obeyed the Father's commands. Though the prophets of Baal were more numerous and stronger than he, he stood in the midst of them and bore testimony to Jehovah. Have you done what God told you? Have you been praying for a blessing? Have you gone out into the highways and the hedges to constrain the people to come in? Have you been seeking the lost, letting the Son of man use your feet and hands and tongue? Have you been obedient in waiting upon God for the baptism of the Holy Spirit? Are you trusting the Spirit of God or your power? A consciousness of such strict obedience cannot fail to bring the premonition of faith that blessing is coming.

The Assurance of Faith

Again: this premonition of faith was based upon the experience of answered prayer. Elijah had been dealing with God in prayer. If the Holy Spirit had not told us through James, we had never known the exact secret of that drought. Elijah came forward and told the king that there would be a drought; the rain and dew would be withheld. But in the Epistle of James we are told that Elijah prayed and it rained not; the secret of the drought was Elijah's prayer.

Then the prophet was told: "Go to the brook Cherith and hide thyself, and I will send the ravens to feed you." That brook Cherith was doubtless to Elijah what the back side of the desert was to Moses. Elijah came flashing out before Ahab ready for the fight. But God knew that he was not quite ready. There was a bit too much of Elijah in it. He needed the quiet of this brook experience to fit him for the emergency of Mount Carmel. The command to hide himself by the brook is very suggestive. If we would have the air full of ravens bringing us all we need, we must put self out of sight and we shall be ready for the crisis that may come.

When the brook failed, God sent him to Zarephath, where he was supplied with the oil and meal of the widow, evidently in answer to prayer. Elijah had seen God working by the brook in preserving his life, and then in preserving his life with the life of the widow. And while he is in that home the widow's son dies, and there is another problem, a greater perplexity; and Elijah, placing his own body beside the corpse, prays God to give the life back, and the life comes. God had answered prayer in supplying his need through the brook and the ravens, through the multiplication of the meal and the oil; and now he answers prayer in raising the dead. On Mount Carmel Elijah has seen the fire in answer to prayer fall from heaven; and the God that answers by fire can surely answer by water. The experience of such answers to prayer gives a premonition of faith that God will continue to answer prayer in sending the rain.

If you have had an experience that God answers prayer—for you have put him to the test and you have no doubt of it—it gives a premonition of faith that he will continue to answer. The God you trusted in the past will not fail in the future. The God who fed you by the brook, multiplied the oil and meal, raised the dead child to life and sent fire out of heaven upon the sacrifice, will certainly bring the rain. Though we see no sign in the heavens, we can hear its footfall, in the fact that the God who has answered prayer will continue to answer.

The Test of Faith

I know that God answers prayer. I had heard that wireless messages can be sent across the ocean. Now I know it, for a few days ago, as I was sitting at table in the dining room of an ocean steamer, a porter came in with a telegram in his hand, and I confess that, as I broke open the envelope, I was filled with awe, if not a bit agitated—it was so marvelous! Here on the Atlantic Ocean, five hundred miles from Liverpool, somebody was talking with me across the waves. I opened the telegram and read something like this: "Welcome to our home in Liverpool." A dear friend whom I had not met till two years ago was kind enough to send that message five hundred miles to sea. It warmed my heart toward this island; it warmed my heart toward all Christian people; it warmed my heart toward God. As I sat there and read that telegram, for which Mr. Marconi was responsible, I said to myself, "My Father in heaven has been sending me Marconigrams ever since I was born. He has been welcoming me to the home in the skies; he has been telling me things to come. And now man is doing something like it. I am certain that this message is from our Liverpool friends, for it is just like them to do it, and it has their name signed to it. And I am just as certain that these messages are from God, for it is just like him to do it. It is all very wonderful, but it is true, and fills me with praise and thanksgiving.

Several decades ago a learned professor delivered a course of lectures, in one of which he proved to his own satisfaction that the Atlantic Ocean could never be crossed by steam. Steam power had been discovered and applied on land, but he was confident it could never be applied to the ocean. Under the peculiar conditions of the heaving waves, the danger of storms, the rolling of the tide, and so forth, you could never apply steam to navigation across the Atlantic. The book in which that lecture was published was on the first steamer that crossed the Atlantic. The captain took it along as a sort of curiosity. That book di I not have a very large sale, but there has been quite a run of steamers ever since, and the professor ceased to argue that steam could not be utilized on the ocean. Put God to the test by trusting him to answer prayer, and when the answer comes you have an answer to all the infidel books ever written. Better still, you have a premonition of faith that the God who answered prayer will continue to do so.

The Triumph of Faith

Lastly, this premonition of faith was based upon the assurance that God's condition had been fulfilled not only by Elijah, but by the people. At first the people stood aloof. Here was Ahab with the priests of Baal, and the people were looking to see the result. When Elijah invited them to draw near to him, they refused. But he went to the people and said, "If the Lord be God, follow him; but if Baal be God, then follow him." "And they answered not a word." Oh, Elijah, we can sympathize with you in talking to the people who make no response, who answer not a word! But Elijah builds his altar, God's altar restored. Has it fallen down in your home? Go and build it to-day. Look about you for the old stones, among which may be the Bible, thumbed and worn by your mother's reverent handling. Call your family about you and read from the old book. Then kneel with them and pray. Restore the broken down family altar before you sleep to-night.

Look for a moment at the energizing power of this premonition of faith. Does Elijah say, "Now that I hear the sound of the coming rain I will sit down and let it come. God is faithful to his promise, and it is no use to pray any more. Since God is sovereign, there is no need for human effort"? That is hyper-Calvinism, just leaving things with God without doing what God tells us. But Elijah was a Calvinist after the truly Calvinistic type, after Calvin's own pattern, which he took from the apostle Paul. He believed in a sovereign God whose command is to be obeyed; and when God tells us to pray and work, he expects us to do both, just because he is a sovereign God. Elijah put his face between his hands and continued in prayer. A premonition of faith made him pray more earnestly, energized his soul to take hold of God with a firmer grip.

During the past week we have had some of the first-fruits of the harvest. God has been working among the young people for their salvation. I believe it is the "sound of abundance of rain." What are we going to do? Just sit down and believe that God is going to work without our co-operation? Because he has given us this premonition of faith, are we, therefore, going just to be quiet and have no more concern about the matter at all? God forbid.

A little company of Christians thought that they saw signs of God's working in the town of Northampton, New England, and they spent hours together in prayer. One Saturday evening they met for prayer, and they forgot to go home. They

FOR EVERY DAY IN THE YEAR, BASED ON THE WORDS OF JESUS

BY PROFESSOR W. H. T. DAU

SUNDAY, March 22. Matthew 13: 24-28a; 37-39a. "The kingdom of heaven is likened unto a man which sowed good seed in his field: but while men slept, his enemy came and sowed tares among the wheat." "He that soweth the good seed is the Son of man; the field is the world; the good seed are the children of the kingdom; but the tares are the children of the wicked one; the enemy that sowed them is the devil."

At the end of his creative work God saw all that he had made, and behold, it was very good. God had made man upright, and righteousness and truth were reigning throughout the world. Then came the fall, and after that the never-ending warfare of the serpent's seed against the Woman's Seed and his followers. The parable of the tares among the wheat is a big chapter in this warfare. The remarkable feature in this parable is that the seed is not, like in the former parable, the Word of God which quickens hearts that were dead in trespasses and sins into new life, but men themselves. God wants good men, true believers, Christians to live upon this earth, and he is busy planting Christian communities in every land. There is a righteous seed growing apace in all parts of the world. But the forces of unrighteousness are also busy. Silently the enemy plants wicked men among the sincere believers. The righteous have to live and move in the midst of unrighteous men. Their work meets with opposition and checks and delays and disappointments from evil elements round about them. Not even the churches are spared from these sinister inroads of the forces of evil. "While men slept," during seasons of tranquillity, when everybody feels secure and is optimistic, and the work of the Lord is progressing quietly, Satan does his evil work. Within the Christian societies there spring up evil tendencies which the Spirit of truth and holiness has not started. Hypocrites are found in every body of professing Christians. This is one of the greatest offenses under which the church must labor. It is chiefly to warn us against being offended at this sad phenomenon that the Lord has told this parable.

MONDAY, March 23. Matthew 13: 28b-30; 39b-42. "The servants said unto him, Wilt thou then that we go and gather them up? He said, Nay; lest while ye gather up the tares, ye root up also the wheat with them. Let both grow together until the harvest: and in the time of the harvest I will say to the reapers, Gather ye together first the tares, and bind them in bundles to burn them: but gather the wheat into my barns." "The harvest is the end of the world; and the reapers are the angels. As therefore the tares are gathered and burned in the fire; so shall it be in the end of this world."

What are the righteous to do with wicked men in this world? What is to be done with members of the Christian Church when they have been revealed as wicked and refuse to repent and amend their lives, is plain from many a Scripture. "Put away from among yourselves that wicked person," is Paul's order regarding the adulterer in the Corinthian congregation. But in the same chapter Paul declares the absolute separation from all evil persons is not possible for Christians, or else they "must needs go out of the world." Christians are not authorized to extirpate wicked men by violent measures, such as the Mohammedans and the Roman Inquisition adopted against people whom they considered wicked. There are occasions when Christians are tempted to resort to drastic measures, to persecution and forcible suppression, against wicked men. In their zeal they may want fire from heaven to fall upon the wicked. Such a spirit is alien to the teaching of Christ. Christians must only try to convert the wicked by the grace of God. What wickedness they cannot overcome in this way they must commit to God for final settlement at his righteous judgment. By violent measures they would only harm the work of the church. In their hot haste to destroy the wicked they might destroy the righteous. God, who makes no mistakes, will in his own time effect the correct separation of the tares from the wheat.

TUESDAY, March 24. Matthew 13: 43. "Then shall the righteous shine forth as the sun in the kingdom of their Father. Who hath ears to hear, let him hear."

The righteous are lights now, shining in the Lord's kingdom of grace. Their profession of the truth as it is in Jesus, their chaste and pure lives, their deeds of mercy, are lights amid the darkness of this present life. But these lights are feeble glims compared to what will be when all impurity will have been purged from their hearts, all ignorance and weakness will have vanished, and when the wicked elements too will have been put out of the way which now surround them and oftentimes succeed in shutting in the light that streams from a noble profession or a virtuous deed. Then, when the state of grace passes over into the state of glory—then shall the righteous shine as "just men made perfect." Every evil force will then be subdued. There will be no limitations, no checks, no obstacles to the effulgence of the glory with which the mercy of their Lord shall fill them body and soul. As the sun in its noonday brightness soaring majestically in a cloudless sky, the righteous shall illumine the new heavens and the new earth wherein dwelleth righteousness. They will reflect the glory of God which lights up the eternal city, and of the Lamb which is the light thereof. Let the imperfect saints while dwelling in this nether sanctuary remember these consolatory words of Jesus amid the imperfections which they observe in themselves and all around them. The longing of the imperfect for perfection will be stilled—then.

WEDNESDAY, March 25. Mark 4: 26-29. "So is the kingdom of God, as if a man should cast seed into the ground; and should sleep, and rise night and day, and the seed should spring and grow up, he knoweth not how. For the earth bringeth forth fruit of herself; first the blade, then the ear, after that the full corn in the ear. But when the fruit is brought forth, immediately he putteth in the sickle, because the harvest is come."

Between sowing and reaping there lies the period of growth. That period is filled with much anxiety, as every husbandman knows. But the uselessness of such anxiety is also known to every farmer who has taken time to reflect. When the seed has been consigned to the earth, a work begins which God alone controls. The farmer has done his work well when, after sowing his field, he stops at the last furrow, takes off his cap, and commits his field to God in prayer. The increase must come from the Lord. How the germ shall split its shell, how the tiny root shall be sunk into the earth, how sufficient moisture shall be sucked up into the feeble halm that begins to protrude above the ground, how the plant shall form knots at regular intervals, how the bud and flower are to grow, and lastly, how the soft, milky grain shall properly harden—all these things are beyond the farmer's power to direct. He must fertilize and cultivate; but he goes home after his work, and sleeps, and leaves it to the Lord when the harvest shall come, and what kind of a harvest it shall be. He must gather strength for the reaping, while the Lord tends to his plants in the field. "So is the kingdom of God." The Word of God sown into men's hearts by the preaching and reading of the Gospel will do its work in God's season. It will not return void. No preacher, no mission board, can do more than to scatter the seed. Let them not worry about the harvest. It will come.

THURSDAY, March 26. Mark 4: 30-32. "Whereunto shall we liken the kingdom of God? or with what comparison shall we compare it? It is like a grain of mustard seed, which, when it is sown into the earth, is less than all the seeds that be in the earth: but when it is sown it groweth up, and becometh greater than all herbs, and shooteth out great branches; so that the fowls of the air may lodge under the shadow of it."

From the humblest beginning—a Babe lying in a manger in an obscure corner in Judea, a Prophet publicly executed as an impostor—the religion of Jesus Christ has grown into the greatest power in the world. Other powers—haughty Pharisaism, Greek philosophy, Roman imperialism, pagan superstitions—which looked down with contempt upon the religion of the Nazarene, have decayed and perished. The mustard seed of the Gospel preaching has developed into a tree that overshadows the continents and the isles of the sea, and shelters millions of contrite and believing sinners from the just anger of their heavenly Judge and from the snares of wicked fowlers. What preparations did Napoleon make to conquer a single country, Russia! And how did his mighty expedition fail! On St. Helena the exiled emperor mused on the power of the kingdom which Christ had raised in this world, and compared it with his own. Paul says: "God hath chosen the foolish things of the world to confound the wise; and God hath chosen the weak things of the world to confound the things which are mighty; and base things of the world, and things which are despised, hath God chosen, yea, and things which are not, to bring to nought things that are: that no flesh should glory in his presence." In a smaller way the parable of the mustard seed applies to every undertaking of the Christian Church. First comes the day of small things; let us not despise that; afterwards, the era of mighty influence; let us not become puffed up in that.

FRIDAY, March 27. Luke 13: 20, 21.. "Whereunto shall I liken the kingdom of God? It is like a leaven which a woman took and hid in three measures of meal, till the whole was leavened."

In the kingdom of God we may observe external and internal growth, the phenomenal development of the mustard seed and the silent working of the leaven, the hidden energy of the grace of God in men's hearts. The Gospel of Jesus Christ has entered the thought and speech, the aspirations and enterprises of mankind, and has quietly changed, from within, the aspect of affairs of individual men and entire nations. It has implanted in men reasons for believing, purposes of living, motives for action, rules of conduct which, by a slow and steady progress, have put the intelligent worship of the true God in the place of the idolatrous worship of an unknown god, have transformed the mercenary and letter-worshiping Pharisee, boasting a worthless righteousness, into a jubilant possessor of God's free pardon in Christ; a slave of sin into a servant of righteousness. The leaven is still in the dough. The Gospel of Christ is working God's gracious will in our lives. Gradually old things are passing away, and the Lord is renewing us by the unseen operations of his grace in our hearts.

SATURDAY, March 28. Matthew 13: 44. "Again, the kingdom of heaven is like unto treasure hid in a field; the which when a man hath found, he hideth, and for joy thereof goeth and selleth all that he hath, and buyeth that field."

"I am found of them that sought me not," says Jehovah by Isaiah. The establishment of the kingdom of God in a believing heart is not a matter of human forethought. There is a "finding" of the grace and truth that came by Jesus Christ without a previous "seeking." By what seems a mere accident a person who had been engrossed with the affairs of this life and had given no thought to the barrenness and poverty of his soul is suddenly placed in view of the priceless verities of the Christian faith. They had been before him all the time but he had not seen them. He has veritably stumbled upon them. It may be that he casually took up a Bible and leisurely turned its pages, when his eye suddenly lighted upon some striking passage or phrase. It may be that he chanced into a church, out of polite deference to a Christian friend or neighbor, and some utterance from the pulpit startled him, and made him see a blessed fact which he had never before recognized. But oh, the joy of such finding! All the wealth which that person formerly possessed loses its value in comparison with the newly discovered treasure of salvation. He gladly parts with his earthly goods to secure the heavenly; he wants the entire field in which the treasure was found: he wants the Bible and the church and Christian comradeship, because there the treasure lies.

HOW NEBUCHADNEZZAR BUILT BABYLON

BY PROFESSOR EDGAR J. BANKS

DURING the last year or two, the Arabs of Babylonia have turned archæologists. They have learned the mercantile value of the inscribed tablets buried in the ruins of the ancient cities, and in bands they go from mound to mound, and dig deep to find the hidden treasure. It is against the law of the Turkish government for any one to excavate for antiquities without special permission, but the Arabs take the law into their own hands and dig whatever they will. Though their work lacks system, the results have been remarkable. Large numbers of tablets from almost every period of Babylonian history have found their way to Europe and to America, and occasionally with them come other objects of great value to the student of the Bible and of ancient history.

The most valuable of these objects are several cylinders, or more properly truncated cones, which Nebuchadnezzar, King of Babylon from 604 to 561 B.C., had written and placed in the walls of his great buildings throughout Babylonia. One, now in the possession of the writer, measures eight and a half inches in height and eighteen in circumference. It is made of finely molded clay, formed on a potter's wheel, and is hollow, as if it were a large vase without a bottom. It was burned until the clay became so hard that it resembles a yellow stone.

The cylinder is covered with a beautifully distinct inscription of three columns, containing 145 lines, or about 1,500 cuneiform characters. So well have these records upon clay been preserved that every sign is distinctly legible, as those upon the Nebuchadnezzar cylinder of which the New York Public Library is the proud possessor. When Nebuchadnezzar constructed a building of importance he had the cylinders inscribed with an account of his building operations and placed in niches prepared for them in the thick walls. There they have been protected as if in an air-tight case, until the Arabs have broken into the walls and revealed them.

Though several of the cylinders have been found, their inscriptions are not always the same; they vary according to the building whose erection or reconstruction they describe. However, they all tell of the great public works of the great king, and end with a prayer to the deity of the temple in which the cylinder was found. The cylinder before us was found by Arabs in a ruin called Wana-Sedoun. The inscription says that the name of the ancient city was Marad. Thus another ancient city, called Marad, situated a short distance to the south of Babylon on the Euphrates River, is added to the map of Babylonia.

The entire translation of the inscription contains nearly fifteen hundred words. At the beginning, in a somewhat boastful way, Nebuchadnezzar tells who he is, but does he spare words in his self-praise. He describes the building of the great walls of Babylon, and the moats at their base, and how he decorated the city gateways with images of bronze. These were the very walls which the ancients regarded as one of the seven wonders of the world, but now those walls have so completely disappeared that in places scarcely a trace of them has survived. He mentions the walls about the smaller quarter of Babylon on the west of the Euphrates, and from this inscription alone a general plan of the city could be formed.

A translation of the inscription is as follows:

"I am Nebuchadnezzar, King of Babylon, the great, the mighty, the favorite of Marduk, the powerful prince, the beloved of Nabu, the ruler who knows not weariness, the protector of the temples Esagil and Ezida, who is obedient to Nabu and Marduk his lords, who does their bidding, the wise one, the darling and the joy of the heart of the great gods, the first-born son of Nabopolassar, King of Babylon.

"When Marduk, the great lord, made me the rightful one to rule the land, to be the shepherd of his people, to care for the city, to rebuild the temples, he bestowed upon me his great power. Tremblingly I was obedient to Marduk, my lord. I completed Imgur-Bel and Nimitti-Bel, the great walls of Babylon, his mighty city, the city of his exalted power. At the entrance of the great gates I erected strong bulls of bronze, and terrible serpents standing upright. My father did that which no previous king had done. With mortar and bricks he built two moat walls about the city, and I, with mortar and bricks, built a third great moat wall, and joined it and united it closely with the moat walls of my father. I laid its foundation deep to the water level; I raised its top mountain high. I constructed a moat wall of burned brick about the west wall of Babylon.

"My father built the moat wall of the Arahtu canal securely with mortar and bricks. He built well the quays along the opposite shores of the Euphrates, but he did not finish all of his work. But I, his first-born son, the beloved of his heart, completed the moat walls of Arahtu with mortar and bricks, and joining them with those of my father, made them very solid.

"Esagil, the wonderful temple, the palace of heaven and earth, Ekua, the temple of Marduk, the lord of the gods, Ka-hili-sug, the dwelling place of Zarpanit, Ezida, the temple of the king of the gods of heaven and earth, I clothed with shining gold, and made bright like the day. Etemin-anki, the tower of Babylon, I rebuilt. Ezida, the favorite temple, the beloved of Nabu, I restored in Borsippa. With gold and jewels I made it beautiful as paradise. I overlaid with gold its great beams of cedar, and arranged them in threes to cover Emahtila, the shrine of Nabu. I rebuilt and made lofty Emach, the temple of Ninharsag, in the center of Babylon, and E-kiku-ini, the temple of Ninlilanna, near the wall of Babylon.

"I did a thing which no king before me had ever done. To the west of Babylon, at a great distance from the outer wall, I constructed an enclosing wall 4,000 cubits in length about the city. I dug its moat to the water level; I walled up its sides with mortar and burned bricks, and I united it securely with the moat wall of my father. Along its edge I built a wall of mortar and burned brick mountain high.

"I rebuilt Tabisupurshu, the wall of Borsippa. To strengthen it I built the wall of its moat about the city with mortar and burned brick. In Borsippa I rebuilt the temple of Tur-lil-en, the god who breaks the weapons of my foes. Ebarra, the temple of Shamash in Sippar. . . . E-anna, the temple of Ishtar in Erech, Ebarra, the temple of Shamash in Ellasar, E-gisg-shir-gal, the temple of Sin in Ur, the sacred temples of the great gods, I restored and completed.

"The support of Esagil and Ezida, the restoration of Babylon and Borsippa, which I made more magnificent than before, I accomplished according to the instructions. I wrote on a stone tablet and fixed for future days all of my noble deeds, as the support of the sacred temples of the great gods, which I did better than the kings my fathers.

"May the wise men who come after me read of all my works, which I have written upon a tablet. May they comprehend the glory of the gods. In fear and without rest I accomplished the building of the cities of the gods and goddesses, the mission which Marduk sent me to do, and kept urging my heart to undertake.

"Then for Ninharrak, my beloved mistress, who watches over my life and gives me good dreams, I excavated and saw the ancient foundation of Eharsagil, her temple in Babylon. In ancient times it had fallen to ruins and no ruler had restored it; . . . but the temple was not suitable for the abode of Ninharrak. To strengthen the wall of that temple, and to make of mortar and burned brick a temple worthy of Ninharrak, I sought earnestly. Upon the day when I asked my gods to reveal the future to me, Ramman and Shamash commanded me in their faithful answer to make three burned bricks sixteen fingerbreadths in size, and of mortar and burned brick to make an image as a charm against disease. And so I made three bricks sixteen fingerbreadths in size and an image of baked clay as a charm to drive away disease, and I placed it at the base of the foundation. With mortar and burned bricks I erected the temple mountain high.

"O Ninharrak, majestic mistress, when with joy thou enterest Eharsagil, the house of thy pleasure, may words in my favor be ever upon thy lips; lengthen my days and establish my years; may long life and an abundance of offspring be granted me; give peace to my soul; make my body sound, protect me, and make my visions clear. Oh, command, with Marduk, the lord of heaven and earth, the destruction of my foes, and the ruin of the land of my enemies.

"Then I sought and beheld in the temple of Lugal-Marada, my lord, in Marada, the ancient foundation stone which no former king had seen since the days of old, and upon the base of Naram Sin, the king, my ancient ancestor, I placed its foundation. I made an inscription with my name, and placed it therein.

"O Lugal Marad, lord of all, hero, gladly look with favor upon the work of my hands. Grant the gift of a life of many days, an abundance of posterity, security to the throne, and a long reign. Smite the evil-minded; break their weapons; devastate all the lands of my enemies. Slay all of them. In truth stretch forth thy fearful weapons which spare not the foe, and may they be sharp for the defeat of my enemies. May they ever be at my side. Before Marduk, lord of heaven and earth, make my deeds seem acceptable; intercede for me!"

SPECIAL NOTES OF GENERAL INTEREST

ALBANIA AFTER THE WAR

BY C. TELFORD ERICKSON

I AM enclosing you copy of a letter just forwarded to me with regard to the condition of Albania. I have also just received a report from my colleague, Rev. P. B. Kennedy, verifying all that Mr. Howard has written, and adding that smallpox and other diseases have broken out among these people, thus complicating the situation. He says: "Unless further assistance continues to come to us, these poor, starving, unsheltered refugees will die before our eyes." I am in this country at present trying to secure funds for a hospital and two medical men to open a medical mission among these people, also money for schools, evangelists and teachers. If we can meet the present emergency with genuine Samaritan compassion, we can speedily win this people for Christ and his Gospel.

The Albanian nation has a remarkable history. The oldest race in Europe, once a world-empire under Alexander the Great, recipients of the Gospel from the apostle Paul, its people have been the defenders of that faith against Mohammedanism in a lone and desperate struggle lasting over fifty years, while Christian Europe remained supine and indifferent. Four hundred and thirty-five years under Turkey have reduced Albania to a condition of poverty and wretchedness scarcely to be conceived, and probably unparalleled in any other nation. The country, by nature rich in resources, has been turned back to wilderness. The population, wasted by war and famine, disease and emigration through persecution, has been thus reduced by more than half. The nation is without railroads, wagon roads, factories, modern agriculture, national schools, literature, or the common comforts and necessities of civilized life.

The Balkan War brought the climax to calamity and woe. Themselves non-combatants in the war, the Albanians were nevertheless overwhelmed with large invading armies, Servian, Greek and Montenegrin, which determined in spite of Europe to occupy and hold that territory. The people were terrorized, their homes were plundered, their women outraged, grain and food supplies, flocks, herds, horses and other farm animals were taken, at least a thousand villages were totally destroyed and thousands of unarmed men, defenseless women and helpless children slaughtered often in the most barbarous and inhuman fashion. The object was to exterminate this people, whose only crime was an undying love for their land and nation and hearthstones, which they had successfully defended for over two thousand years.

A "BREAD LINE" IN ALBANIA

Now, by the decision of the European Powers, a million and a quarter Albanians, together with their territory comprising at least a third of the whole, have been divided among Servia, Montenegro and Greece, where the above processes of forcible assimilation are still being carried on. The rest of Albania, now free, but surrounded with enemies, overrun with refugees who have sought asylum there, in her helplessness and dire extremity is appealing for help.

Rev. and Mrs. Kennedy, my wife and self, have been charged by the Albanian provisional government and the leaders of the nation with the task of providing Christian schools for their children and a Christian medical mission. Albania is a nation three million in number and contains a million and a half Mohammedans. The cleavage between these people and Turkey is absolute and final and the cleavage between them and Mohammedanism grows wider and deeper every day. Who shall say that, like Israel in Egypt, the Albanians have not had their more than four hundred years in bondage for such an hour as this, to carry the Gospel into the Moslem world?

Mr. Howard's letter, enclosed in the foregoing, says the writer traveled four hundred miles through the mountains of Albania in September and October on a relief trip. "On my expedition to the Goloborda district," he says, "I was accompanied by the Rev. Phineas B. Kennedy, who went to make further inquiry into the condition of the refugees who had returned to their destroyed villages. There are in Albania now more than 100,000 homeless people. There are many thousands in outlying villages. I met many refugees wandering about the mountains, seeking food. What is needed in Albania right now is industrial relief, which should be the foundation for permanent evangelical and educational work."

THE PRIMA DONNA

BY HELEN CHAMPION GREEN

MRS. BRANT, sewing at her open window, heard distinctly every word of the conversation. The Day house stood close beside that of the Brant's, and in the still summer air, the voices came as distinctly as though they were speaking in the same room. Mrs. Day had callers and she was showing them Eugenia's photographs. Two new ones had lately arrived and nearly every one in Benton, to Mrs. Brant's certain knowledge, had stopped in to marvel over them. Eugenia had grown up in the village and had been called Jenny Day; now that she had become a prima donna, she was known as Eugenia Montague and Benton saw her no more.

"That dress she's wearin' in that big picture is all made of pink satin and gold trimmin's," Mrs. Day was explaining, "and in that other photo, it's all white tarlatan just covered with silver spangles that shines like sparks every time she moves. Eugenia wrote me all about 'em; she always does. She says the first time she come out in that sparklin' tarlatan the audience clapped so loud it was just like thunder, and they handed her a bunch of pink roses that was as big 'round as the top of that air-tight stove. Eugenia says there must have been hundreds of them roses and goodness knows how much they cost!" Mrs. Day gave a little sigh of ecstasy. "Well, folks always loved Eugenia wherever she was, and I guess they always will."

Mrs. Brant bent lower over her sewing, but her lips quivered and her eyes filled with angry tears. "'Taint nothin' in this village but Eugenia, Eugenia, Eugenia! Any one might think there never was another girl worth thinkin' of or mentionin'." Her eyes turned wistfully toward her own daughter, placidly wheeling her baby back and forth at the front of the house, and for the moment Mrs. Brant's face softened. Then the look of hot rebellion came in her eyes again. "I guess my Susie's just as smart and likely and a good sight prettier than Eugenia ever was, and I guess nobody's ever seen anything prettier than that picture taken with the baby in her arms. Nobody comes taggin' 'round askin' to see that picture, though; nobody thinks a dutiful, home-lovin' girl's worth thinkin' twice about. 'Seems though I just can't stand it, I can't, I can't."

Susie had been Jenny Day's playmate and school friend, and the two little girls had grown up together. Then just at the time of Susie's marriage with a thrifty young grocer who had lately come into town, Jenny Day had heard the call of the great world and gone out from the limitations of Benton to become famous as a singer.

To Mrs. Brant it had been a sorrow and humiliation. That her little girl had settled down into the eternal routine of the commonplace, while great cities did homage to Jenny Day, were things to be neither forgotten nor forgiven, and had become the relentless specter which haunted the mother's heart night and day, stealing from her all the happiness and satisfaction that her life might have contained.

At the front of the Day cottage stood a great lilac bush, gorgeously arrayed, just now, with magnificent clusters of lavender blossoms; the scent of them came to Mrs. Brant with especial exasperation. On the morning of Jenny's departure from the little station, where half of Benton had collected on the platform to wave her farewell, she had carried in her arms a huge bunch of these flowers, and the fragrance of them now seemed to Mrs. Brant the very incarnation of Jenny's jubilant triumph; a merciless reminder of the day when Jenny had stepped forth from their midst to attain a height which bewildered and dazzled them.

The voices from the next house had ceased, and Mrs. Brant, glancing up, saw the visitors walking down the narrow front path, still exclaiming over the beauty and achievements of Eugenia. Then Mrs. Brant turned and saw her husband standing in the doorway.

"What's the matter, mother? What's troublin' you?" he asked wearily, but he waited for no reply; the question had been asked and answered too many times. "How'd you like to take a little trip to the city and be gone a week? Maybe it'd do you good."

Mrs. Brant looked up in half alarm. "To the city, Hiram? You don't mean New York? Land sakes, when you goin'?"

"Thought we'd start to-morrow."

Mrs. Brant laid aside the sewing in her lap and taking off her spectacles looked up at her husband in speechless amazement. "Why, Hiram Brant, I guess you've lost your senses," she exclaimed finally, "startin' off to New York to-morrow without any plannin' or fixin'."

"Ain't you been plannin' to go for the last five years? I should think that was about long enough."

But Mrs. Brant's exasperation only increased. "What's that got to do with to-morrow? We hadn't ever said anythin' about goin' to-morrow. Here's the house not swep' and nothin' cooked up, and you sayin' go to New York to-morrow."

"'Twon't be for more'n a few days," her husband reassured her. "Pack up that big valise; I guess it'll do for both. And mebbe," he paused and brought out the word with impressive solemnity, "mebbe we'll go to hear Eugenia Montague sing."

Mrs. Brant stiffened suddenly and the color rushed back into her cheeks. "Hiram Brant," she returned hotly, "If that's your idea of enjoyin' New York, it ain't mine; I guess I've heard Jenny Day singin' right here in the Baptist church, every Sunday for two years, and I guess I ain't goin' to pay out money to hear her now just on account of her changing her name to Eugenia Montague!"

Her husband smiled in a peculiarly exasperating manner that he had. "You suit yourself, mother," he returned, "I've took a real notion for seein' little Jenny Day standin' up before all them grand folks and hearin' them all take on the way she writes about in her letters to her mother. I always liked to hear Jenny sing; used to remind me of the robins when they first came in the spring, it was so clear and sweet. I guess it's just like a breath of fresh country air to those city folks. She was a real nice little thing, Jenny was; I dunno what's possessed you to take such a turn, mother."

Mrs. Brant made no reply, but she had already begun preparations for their hurried departure.

Antagonistic as she had been toward the idea of going to hear Eugenia, it was nevertheless a disappointment, almost a vexation to her that the first three days passed, with no allusion to the matter. And determined as she had been, it was she indeed who first tentatively approached the subject. They were making their way slowly down a crowded street when Mrs. Brant pointed excitedly across the way. "That says Metropolitan Opera House," she exclaimed.

"So it does," responded her husband, absently.

"I guess that's where Eugenia sings," she continued suggestively.

"Why, sure enough." There was such evident purpose in his voice this time that Mrs. Brant promptly regretted the step she had taken. Mr. Brant was already crossing the street.

"I'm not goin', father, I'm not goin' one step," she wailed plaintively; "if you've got to go, you go by yourself."

Backbone in Religion

DURING the great rally of Christian students held recently in New York, among the notable addresses delivered was one by Dr. Charles A. Eaton, in which he made this startling accusation: "The reason that the churches and synagogues have more or less lost their hold with men is because the backbone is gone out of their religion."

This is strong language. Is it also true language? It is far truer than it ought to be. There is need to-day of stalwart Christians. Christians with backbone. Christians who know how to believe and give and work and suffer, and who will keep on believing and giving and working and suffering, no matter who opposes, no matter what the odds against them nor the cost of the endeavor. There are too many wishy Christians, too many compromising Christians, too many faint-hearted Christians.

The founder of Christianity was meek and lowly, the Prince of gentleness. His great apostle Paul preached and insisted upon a complete submission to the divine will and a complete absence of self-confidence and self-assertiveness in the tasks of the Gospel. But in endeavoring to carry out these ideals there has been a danger of overemphasizing the gentler side of religion and forgetting that Christ and the men who followed him were men of granite courage. Paul could boast: "I am crucified with Christ"; he could tell how Christ had whispered to him: "My strength is made perfect in weakness"; he could call himself "the least of all the saints." Yet he could also declare: "So fight I, not as one that beateth the air"; he could recall that he had fought with wild beasts at Ephesus; he could declare, when warned that bonds and imprisonment and disaster awaited him: "None of these things move me." And he could assert, when at last his hour came to die: "I have fought a good fight."

"O God, my heart is fixed," the psalmist testified. The Christian heart should be so fixed in faith, so rooted in the love and strength of God that it will not waver nor be overthrown. There must be courage and vigor and enthusiasm in the work of God. Into these modern days of ease and luxury and the tolerance of injustice and evil there needs to come the spirit of the old Crusaders, the spirit that rises to the challenge:

> For sons of God you have to war,
> A noble cause to gain,
> His word on earth to proclaim afar;
> Who knows it not in vain?

The matter, after all, comes to the pointedly personal: What kind of a Christian am I? Do the forces of evil battle and fear me? Am I a damage to their cause? Can I be counted on every time to take the side of God and of right and fight the fight with divine courage till the battle is won?

Sowing Social Strife

IT IS a fortunate thing for the organization which bears the imposing title of Industrial Workers of the World that but few people take it seriously. It has a record of disturbance and lawlessness that does not inspire confidence. East New York is a tolerant city. In this big, cosmopolitan center, the people believe in allowing reasonable latitude to all sorts of men, short of actual law-breaking. When the I. W. W. undertook to invade the churches, demanding food and shelter, and even threatened to take the churches from unbelief and other sins, people smiled, knowing that the first attempt at such a course in New York would bring the lockup for those demagogues who were inciting their dupes to crime, hoping themselves to win some fame on the first pages of the newspapers.

This is precisely what happened. Leader Tannenbaum's brigade, after a few trivial exploits in which they were not successful, finally collided with the majesty of the law when they broke into a prayer service in a Catholic church, and all were placed under arrest on a charge of unlawful entry and inciting riot. As a matter of fact, the churches are heartily in sympathy with labor when it is in distress through unemployment. Many of them have willingly thrown open their doors to welcome the homeless, at the appeal of the Rescue Mission and other organizations, and doubtless some would have done so had the need been sufficiently urgent. But in the present instance, so far as the case of the I. W. W. band led by Tannenbaum was concerned, the need could not have been urgent, as much confused the fact that several of the disturbers were well supplied with money. They were simply a band of dupes led by a few noisy adventurers, whose sole object was to create disturbance and sow the seeds of social strife. It is significant, too, that the indifference of the working classes in the metropolis to the whole affair shows that they have not a particle of sympathy with the I. W. W., but regard them as fanatics. At the same time there is a feeling of genuine commiseration for their deluded dupes. They have learned a lesson at severe cost, and they now know that, while Father Knickerbocker keeps open house for the unemployed and unfortunate, he has no welcome for disturbers of the peace.

The Babylonian Tablets

IT is a wonderful story, that of the famous cylindrical tablet of King Nebuchadnezzar, which is related by Prof. Edgar J. Banks in another part of this issue. This tablet, written on soft clay by some scribe to royalty in ancient Babylonia about 2,500 years ago, was laid away among the archives of the great king, where it was securely hidden until dug up and brought to the light of day by an American archeologist. Reading the translation of those strange characters in what is known as "cuneiform" (or wedge-shaped) writing, we get a glimpse of the personality of this mighty Oriental monarch, who built what was probably the greatest, strongest and most magnificent capital the world has ever seen, and who was so proud of his achievements that he took infinite pains to impress posterity with the facts concerning them. His mighty kingdom vanished, his power crumbled to nothing, the very site of his great capital hidden for twenty centuries—all we knew of him is what the Old Testament and the brief records by ancient historians state. But now we know from this tablet and others like it the very mind and character of Nebuchadnezzar. These queer-looking hard-baked bricks, dug up from the ruins of Babylon, tell the story.

But these same wedge-like characters which appear on the Nebuchadnezzar cylinder were used nearly 2,000 years before his time. Away back in the earliest dawn of history, about 2400 B. C., the cuneiform alphabet was used by the Chaldeans and the ancient peoples who were contemporary with Abraham and the patriarchs. It is the simplest and earliest form of writing, although the alphabet, which is composed of wedge-and-angle signs, puzzled the world's best scholars until Layard and Rawlinson worked out their meaning. Then what a mighty revelation! It seemed as if the dark curtain that obscured the early history of the Bible lands had been suddenly raised. A new light was thrown on the personality of many of the characters mentioned in the Bible, and others of whom recorded history made no mention were brought into the light. At the same time, some remarkable apparent discrepancies in the Scriptures were shown to be truths instead of errors, and thus in many ways the Old Book was confirmed and supplemented by the revelation that came through these long-hidden tablets and inscriptions. No student of Bible history can now be considered well informed unless he knows the story of the tablets.

The writer had in his hand the other day six clay tablets of varying sizes, each of which would be valued by Bible students as a priceless treasure. We give a brief description of them:

The first and largest tablet—a square one—contained a royal inscription of Sin-gashid, king of Erech (Gen. 10: 10), who lived about 2200 B.C. The second largest tablet bore a contract dated in the reign of Samsu-iluna (time of Abraham, about 2000 B.C.), from Larsa Ellasar (Gen. 14: 1). A darker tablet is a promissory note dated in the fortieth year of Nebuchadnezzar, 565 B.C. A small closely written tablet is a record of the payment of messengers who went from one city to another. It is dated in the reign of Gimil-Sin, king of Ur (Gen. 11: 28), about 2300 B.C., and was found at Jokha. The other remaining tablets were found at Drehem, near Nippur and Jokha, and were written during the Ur dynasty, about 2300 B.C. They are from the temple archives, dealing with temple receipts and expenditures.

One of the tablets is of peculiar interest, from the fact that it is a "letter tablet"—an inner tablet fully inscribed and enclosed in an outer tablet, also of baked clay, on which is written the address and character of the inner message. This is probably the first letter with an envelope that has ever come to light.

When we reflect that all the characters on this little group of tablets were written (with the exception of the third) by scribes who were probably contemporary with Abraham, who came from Ur, the Bible connection becomes clear. They can be studied with the open page of the sacred Book turned to the contemporary record, and they give an altogether new view of the civilization and customs of that far-off time.

THE CHRISTIAN HERALD has secured a number of these Babylonian tablets covering the time of various reigning dynasties from 2,200 to 2,400 years B.C. All are fully authenticated by Prof. Albert T. Clay, of Yale University, the eminent archeologist. We shall have more to say about these wonderful tablets hereafter. We are so planning that our readers may share with us the pleasure and profit of possessing some of these strange relics of the people and civilization of "the morning of the world."

The Women and the Warships

WHILE there are many who will differ with the arguments advanced by the committee of representative American women who have memorialized Congress in opposition to the movement for an increased navy, it is not to be denied that there is a good deal of common sense in their presentation of the case. They point out that no overture on our part for arbitration has ever been refused; that with one insignificant exception we have had no war with a foreign Power in a century, and that foreign war "scares" are mainly attributable to gun manufacturers, naval alarmists and interested technicians who are engaged in "looking for trouble."

Instead of entering the mad contest of the nations for sea-power, these ladies suggest we should devote the money to the checking of preventable diseases and the conservation of child-life, and they point out that the entire cost of conducting the Children's Bureau in Washington, which is fighting almost single-handed the appalling mortality among infants, is "less than the annual repairs on two torpedo boat destroyers." There is little danger, we imagine, of Congress losing its head on the naval armament question. With the example of conditions in Europe, we are likely to avoid being swept into the same maelstrom of wild extravagance.

Our navy, however, should be maintained at the standard of power and efficiency demanded by the needs of the nation, home and colonial. A policy neither wasteful nor unduly parsimonious is one that will command public approval.

Electric Signs Warm Birds

DURING the last bitter cold spell some of the illuminated electric signs of New York grew dim. The company found that the dimness was caused by the roosting of thousands of birds upon or about the electric bulbs. Most of the birds thus seeking warmth by nestling on the bulbs were sparrows and pigeons, though larger birds also were found among those huddled about the lights. A man who was sent to the top of one of the leading hotels of the city to replace some burnt-out bulbs, found the lights all right, but he also found some pigeons and four large seagulls which had crept up close to the bulbs and gone to sleep and obscured the lights. The men from the electric company say that the warmth radiated from these sign bulbs, though small, has been sufficient to keep many birds alive that otherwise would have perished. People, like birds, fly to cover in a storm; they love to nestle up to something warm when chilled by disappointment or misfortune. The human heart furnishes sympathy, which not only gives life to the mind and soul, but often to the body as well. In describing the soul's craving for the loving warmth of the Lord's house and presence the psalmist says:

Yea, the sparrow hath found a house, and the swallow a nest for herself, where she may lay her young; even thine altars, O Lord of hosts, my king, and my God. (Ps. 84: 3.)

Militants Wreck Another Church

THE sound of the explosion by which the English suffragettes wrecked an historic church with valuable records had scarcely died away when the bursting of another suffrage bomb seriously damaged the famous St. John's Church, Westminster. The explosion occurred half an hour after the evening service had been dismissed. The bomb had been placed beneath a seat in the gallery above the pulpit. The explosion caused considerable damage to the interior of the church, including the shattering of some beautiful stained glass windows. The church is near the House of Parliament and faces the residence of Reginald McKenna, the Home Secretary. Archdeacon Wilberforce is the rector of the church. The women militants, in their lawless attempt to terrorize Parliament into voting for their measure, have postponed the success of female suffrage in England for a quarter of a century. These female house-burners, church-wreckers, and destroyers recall the language of the prophet:

Their works are works of iniquity, and the act of violence is in their hands. (Isa. 59: 6.)

Alps Avalanche Kills Three

THREE Swiss Alpine climbers, Richard Meylan, Henry Dentard and Marmilled Drouget, were killed the other day while ascending the Rose Blanche peak. The men, roped together, had attained a height of 5,000 feet, when an avalanche swept them down a precipice. The bodies of Meylan and Dentard were recovered. From the earliest centuries the Alps have been hard to climb, and there is a long line of victims that have fallen down over the precipices to their death. The steeps of life, temporal and spiritual, are hard to climb. The perils are always thick and many climbers are swept off by the avalanches, or by unsteady footing plunged to a fearful death below. Amidst these dangers on the mountains or on the plains it is necessary in order to save life to maintain the most careful footing of faith in God. The apostle thus expresses the thought:

For now we live, if ye stand fast in the Lord. (I Thess. 3: 8.)

China Wants Deer Horns

CHINA wants deer, reindeer, and wild sheep horns, which are used in Chinese medicine, and United States Consul George E. Anderson, writing from Hongkong, says that city, as the chief center in the trade of Chinese medicines, imports a considerable quantity of such goods annually. These horns are ground into powder and mixed with other ingredients to form a sort of tonic. At present the chief source of supply at enormously high prices is Siberia. Mr. Anderson sees no reason why reindeer horns from Alaska and stag horns from other American territory should not be exported with profit. In the Far East now as in olden times there is much ignorance, superstition and charlatanism in the treatment of disease. In China particularly, as missionaries and others have noted, the medical art is hopelessly behind the age. Its condition calls to mind the medicine-makers of Bible times, of whom the prophet Jeremiah was thinking when he wrote:

In vain shalt thou use many medicines; for thou shalt not be cured. (Jer. 46: 11.)

SWEPT BY FEARFUL BLIZZARD

MARCH came in with the fiercest snowstorm the nation has known since the blizzard of 1888, in which Senator Roscoe Conklin among others perished. The storm ranged from Maine to Georgia and from the Great Lakes region over the Middle West and as far south as Florida. The lowest temperature ever recorded in March was reached in Charleston, Macon and other points in the southeast. The property destruction broke the record of a quarter century, and many lives were lost, some while clearing the railroad tracks. New York and other cities were cut off from the outer world for a time. Local trains and electric cars were lost in the snow drifts in some cases for a day and night, and scarcely a trunk line brought in or sent out a long distance train from New York for twenty-six hours. Comparatively little business was transacted on Monday, March 2. Miles of wires were down everywhere, demoralizing the telegraph and telephone service, and there was isolation of every kind. Many places were without milk and coal deliveries, and famine threatened. The danger of fire was great. Providence sent a hot sun on Tuesday, and with the improved methods of clearing railroad tracks and city streets, the wheels of transportation and communication began to move in a normal condition again. The storm claimed the sad toll of a score of lives. God sends the snow to purify the atmosphere and fertilize the earth. "Great things doeth he, which we cannot comprehend. For he saith to the snow, Be thou on the earth." (Job 37: 5, 6.)

The Unemployed and the Churches

DURING the present winter there has been considerable suffering among the poor and unemployed, and New York—to which many unfortunates are attracted at such times—has had to deal with the problems of poverty on a larger scale than usual. Missions, charitable societies and churches have all done their share in helping the unfortunates. A new development which caused some excitement was the appearance in the streets of marching bands of homeless and unemployed, who, under the leadership of members of the Industrial Workers of the World, visited several of the churches, demanding food and shelter. One minister declined to receive them, another took up a cash collection from his congregation which provided the strangers with food and lodging, while a third invited them into his church, had the women members serve sandwiches and gave permission for 200 men to sleep in the "church house" overnight. It was evident to an observer that these men for the most part were simply being used by a few shrewd demagogues to make a demonstration, even to the point of lawbreaking. Some of the speeches made to them by their self-appointed leaders were clearly meant to incite riot. The climax came on Wednesday night, March 4, when a young I. W. W. agitator, Frank Tannenbaum, led some 200 of his followers to the Roman Catholic Church of St. Alphonsus, on West Broadway, demanding food and shelter. The worshipers were frightened as the priests, greatly excited, denied the demand. Then the police came on the scene in force and Tannenbaum and his band were arrested and taken to jail. The charge was inciting to riot. One of the so-called "unemployed and homeless" men had over $700 on his person. The people have a genuine sympathy for the suffering and would gladly aid all who really need work with food and shelter, but they have a hearty detestation for agitators who seize the opportunity to transform the unfortunates into criminals. That this was the object of their wild harangues there is no doubt. The situation recalls the saying of the psalmist:

I have seen violence and strife in the city. (Ps. 55: 9.)

Bible Institute Buys Building

THE National Bible Institute has just purchased a new site for its headquarters building and McAuley Cremorne Mission, at 214 West Thirty-fifth Street, New York City. The building was formerly the property of the First German Evangelical Church. Although only seven years old, the Bible Institute has grown to be a strong force for righteousness and warm spiritual evangelism. Its activities now include four rescue missions, an evening school, a summer out-of-doors evangelistic campaign, and a publication department. Last year 2,400 district evangelistic meetings were held. Thirty thousand dollars additional will be devoted to remodeling the church property for the uses of the institute. The two dominating ideas of the institute are: old-fashioned faith in the divine authority of the Scriptures, and a deep longing to bring men to a saving knowledge of Jesus Christ, obedient to the command in the parable:

Go out into the highways and hedges, and compel them to come in, that my house may be filled. (Luke 14: 23.)

Poisonous Snake Kills Scientist

FREDERICK FOX, M.D., an Australian scientist, who had devoted much of his life to the treatment of snake bites, died in Calcutta, India, recently from the bite of a snake which he was using for experimental purposes. Dr. Fox fell a victim while he was attempting to prove the efficacy of what he had claimed was a sure antidote to the virus of the snake. He had just finished treating a goat which had been bitten, and had succeeded in saving its life when he was attacked by a krait, a deadly snake. The krait has grooved poison fangs, and solid upper teeth behind them. In its attack on the doctor the snake inflicted five punctures. Dr. Fox, who had often voluntarily submitted to snake bites in order to demonstrate the efficacy of his cure, smilingly incised four of the punctures, but the fifth escaped his notice. Later in the day, symptoms of poisoning developed. The antidote made by Dr. Fox himself was used, but it was too late. The snake is the type of moral evil; its bite is death. No human agency can save men from its poison. This truth was taught by Moses, who put the brazen serpent on the pole, the sight of which cured those bitten by the serpents in the wilderness, and which fact was pressed upon the attention and heart of the race by Jesus when he said:

And as Moses lifted up the serpent in the wilderness, even so must the Son of man be lifted up: that whosoever believeth in him should not perish, but have eternal life. (John 3: 14, 15.)

SAVING THE CHILDREN OF CHINA

EVERY passing week adds to the number of the good friends whom God is raising up for the orphans of distant China. Men and women in every walk of life, old and young, Sunday schools, Bible classes and Young Peoples' Societies are making the cause their own, and forwarding their offerings to aid the missionaries in supporting and training the thousand little boys and girls who have been providentially placed in their care.

Not a few of the gifts are donated in memory of some dear one who has passed away. A lady in Danville, Ky., sends $2 "in memory of a dear teacher, who has been in heaven for forty years. . . . I feel that THE CHRISTIAN HERALD helps us to try to live the better life. God bless your every effort to help poor human beings, for by so doing you surely glorify him."

R. E., Akron, Ohio, writes: "I send $2 for the China Orphan Fund. We would be glad to double it many times if it were possible. We are praying God to put it into the hearts of your readers to help to provide a way for the orphans. I myself have been a motherless orphan and God has heard and answered many prayers for me. I know he will answer and provide the money needed for the orphans. May he bless all your efforts."

"The two dollars I am sending," writes M. E. B., Williamstown, Ontario, Canada, "are but as a drop in the bucket, but I trust it may do a little good."

Enclosing a draft for $7, George E. S., Watertown, N. Y., writes: "This is the result of an offering taken in my Bible Class in the Arsenal Street M. E. Church of this city in response to your appeal for the little orphans of China. The prayers of the class go with the offering that you may have the greatest possible success in behalf of this worthy cause."

Mr. and Mrs. F. W., McGraw, N. Y., send $5, and their letter says: "This is just a little thank-offering In His Name, for the restoration to health of our little girl who has been seriously sick, and we pray it may help one of the little ones of China to learn to walk the road that leads upward, Godward, heavenward. May God richly bless you in all your work for him!"

Mrs. J. F., Cokato, Minn., sends $5 and writes: "This is a donation to the Orphan Fund in memory of dear grandma Armstrong, who during the closing years of her beautiful Christian life often requested that her friends would not spend any money in flowers for her funeral, but, if at that time they had any to spare, that they should send it to the missionaries instead. So in accordance with this request, her friends in Howard Lake have so done to help forward the cause she so dearly loved."

"The picture of the little tots in the last issue of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD has made a deep impression on my heart," writes Mrs. D. S. N., Brooklyn, N. Y., "so with prayer and gratitude to God for the privilege I hereby enclose a check ($5) for the little orphans. I would like to have about thirty-five copies of the little booklet, The Abused Leaf, to distribute in the Sunday school."

Mrs. S., Warren, Pa., sends a "mite" ($1) for the Orphan Fund. "I am interested," she adds, "in the many helpful causes in which THE CHRISTIAN HERALD is interested and wish to aid them and keep in touch through the paper."

H. F., Wickenburg, Ariz. ($1), writes: "I believe your training of the China orphans will produce some excellent Christian workers."

"Mother and I send this ($1) In His Name, and hope it will be of some help, though so little. May God bless the China orphans," is the prayer of K. M. and K. M. of Pikeville, Tenn.

Very touching is a short letter from W. H. W., of Aiken, S. C., which encloses $1.03 with this simple explanation: "Our little boy went to heaven on January 11, the day he was sixteen months old. I send his pennies to benefit some other little boy."

In the same mail comes a letter from Mrs. J. A. H., Manchester, N. C., which says: "I am sending my mite ($20) to the Orphan Fund, and I hope other readers will feel that they must do the same, and may God add his blessing."

Strong in faith and hope is the brief note from M. C. P., Tyrone, Pa., which encloses a check for $2 and adds: "This is from one who loves the little ones and who desires to see them all brought to Christ."

As the period is at hand for the next quarter's support of the 1,005 little Chinese orphans, we trust that all who have the cause at heart and who have not already sent in their offerings will do so quickly. Every dollar and every dime will help to feed, clothe and train the children, and we pray that every gift may be made a means of joy and blessing. Address China Orphan Fund, THE CHRISTIAN HERALD, Bible House, New York.

stayed the whole night praying to God, and next morning they did not go to breakfast. They went in a body to Jonathan Edwards's church, and heard him read from manuscript that awful sermon on "The Sinner in the Hands of an Angry God." The people trembled; wicked men in the audience took hold of the pews in front of them, feeling that they were sliding into hell, and God began a revival that swept New England, the United States and the world.

In New York City a little group realized that God was working, and that while he worked they must work. They spent the night in prayer, and the pastor said to me, "I did not know they were in prayer, but I knew that God was present with us at the morning service in mighty power." Sinners were saved, a score of them, that Sunday morning.

The premonition kept Elijah at prayer, and he began to look for tokens. He said to his servant, "Go to the hilltop and look; keep on looking; go seven times." And when the token began to appear, the cloud the size of a man's hand, did he say, "Well, clouds frequently appear like that, and it is the last of them. I have seen thousands of clouds the size of a man's hand, and they have vanished in a moment"? No, he took the token of a small cloud as a proof that a great cloud was coming; and he sent word to Ahab, "Get ready, for the rain is coming." This energizing power of the premonition of faith not only led him to pray more earnestly, and look for tokens of greater things, but it made him bolder to stand up and make confession before the king and the people. He might have said, "I shall be put to shame if I tell Ahab that the rain is coming; that cloud may disappear; if I stand up for God in this matter, it may be that God will delay."

This morning I have a premonition of faith that God is about to give us the greatest blessing that he has given in years. The early prayer meeting filled the Bible class room. The leader tells me it was the largest number he has ever seen in that prayer meeting. God can hear two, or three, or four, but there is a spirit of prayer that is growing deeper and wider as the days go by. When I looked into the faces of those seven young people last Thursday evening—four from one family—who came seeking baptism, and when another came to me and said, "I have wandered from the Lord and I am coming back to him; pray for me," then I realized that God is working. "There is a sound of abundance of rain."

God said to David, "Do not march against the Philistines now as you did the other day. Go behind them, and when you hear 'a sound of a going in the tops of the mulberry trees,' that means that God's hosts are on the move for your help. Then bestir yourself. As God is moving, move with God."

The hosts of Israel are in the valley, and there is a drought. There are three kings against one; and these three kings come to the prophet and say, "God, it seems, is going to deliver these three kings and three nations into the hands of the enemy, for we have no water!" The prophet at once says, "Dig ditches," and I can see those soldiers digging in the dust, the dry dust filling the air as they dig the ditches. There is not a drop of water, but God says, "Dig the ditches, and I will fill them with water." Let us dig the ditches of preparation for a revival and expect God to send the showers of blessing that will fill them.

A premonition of faith gives a premonition of heaven. I met a man the other day, once active in Christian work, who said, "I am nearing the end. The doctor says it may be only a short time; and I am ready." There was no shadow on his face. His eyes beamed with a radiance of hope. He had a premonition of heaven. Oh, the sweetness of it, the joy of a premonition of heaven based upon faith in Christ! And we do not have to wait for the near approach of death to have it. A premonition of heaven is in every Christian's soul.

A preacher held a meeting in a public hall one week night. Among the men present he noticed one who had just come out of the mines, begrimed with soot, sitting by the door with his dinner pail by his side; and as the preacher continued, that man listened intently. By and by the preacher noticed him wiping his eyes; then he watched the big tears running down the man's cheeks. After the benediction that fellow came to the preacher and said, "Oh, sir, I have not been to a religious service for many years. My mother and father were Christians, I came from a Christian home; but out here in the mines I have become a wicked man. As you preached tonight, I thought I would like to have a talk with you. Just come and tell me how to do what you have talked to us about to-night." The preacher took him into a room and talked to him. The man said he would like to be a Christian. "Well," said the preacher, "won't you pray about it with me?" The man said, "You pray." The preacher prayed, and then he said, "Won't you pray?" "I cannot pray," he replied; "I have not prayed since I was a lad." "Well, just try." The man closed his sooty hands, shut his eyes, and began,

> Gentle Jesus, meek and mild,
> Look upon a little child;
> Pity my simplicity,
> Suffer me to come to thee.

It was the only prayer he could remember, the prayer he had learned at mother's knee. But he rose from his knees a new man in Christ. God had heard his child prayer. Your heart may be yearning for something, and you do not know how to express it. Is a man or woman here who has not prayed for years? The prayer mother taught you may be most fitting. It is related that when a great American statesman was dying, among his last words were,

> Now I lay me down to sleep;
> I pray the Lord my soul to keep.

God heard the child-hearted prayer. "Except ye become as little children." May God bring us back to the simple faith, away from the jangling noises of modern speculation, and the premonition of such faith will fill our hearts with joyful hope.

A WEEK IN THE WORLD'S NEWS

For and Against the Fair

FOLLOWING upon recent despatches announcing the definite decision of the government of Great Britain not to favor participation in the Panama-Pacific Exposition, comes news of the signing of a memorial by a strong majority of the House of Commons representing all political parties, to be presented to Premier Asquith, desiring the government to reconsider its refusal and to participate in the exposition. Ex-Premier Balfour and the Opposition leader, Andrew Bonar Law, are named as among the signers. The administration at Washington is said to be much pleased at this manifestation of interest. Resenting the attitude of United States customs authorities toward Limoges porcelain exporters, pending outcome of suit charging falsification of entries, the Paris Chamber of Commerce has petitioned Parliament not to pass the appropriation for French participation in the exposition at present.

Fighting Bubonic Plague

BY RAT-PROOFING over six hundred buildings within a defined area, the Health Department of Seattle is ridding that city from all danger of spread of the plague, which is brought to this country by infected rats on vessels sailing from Oriental ports. The system of the United States Public Health Service is so comprehensive that the ports of all the world are now quickly informed of the existence of any communicable disease which may be carried by rats in the shipping of any nation, and the precautions which have been so thoroughly taken at Seattle are seldom necessary once a port of entry is put on its guard.

Opium Smuggling Frustrated

HOBOKEN, N. J., has recently been the scene of an opium smuggling conspiracy on a scale calculated to net the Chinese conspirators over one and a half millions a year. Customs inspectors learned of the plot and were able to arrest the ringleaders and seize considerable gum opium, of Persian importation though prohibited. Plans to import some eight hundred pounds monthly by the help of confederates employed on liners were discovered.

Race Uprising in Brazil

SEVERAL of the northern States of Brazil, where the negro population predominates, face a revolutionary uprising because of racial differences. Business is virtually suspended in those States, and the disaffection has reached into the southern section. Rio de Janeiro is reported in a state of siege and martial law has been declared in suburban towns. Censorship in despatches from Brazil makes accurate judgment of the situation impossible. The disturbances began some months ago. Colonel Roosevelt visited Rio de Janeiro in October and discussed the possibility of the absorption of the negro race in Brazil through intermarriage.

Better City Health

AN aggressive educational campaign has been begun in New York by Dr. S. S. Goldwater, Commissoner of Health, which will include the distribution by mail of 10,000 copies of the Health Department's weekly bulletin containing the names of persons prosecuted for violation of the sanitary code, and the extension of exhibits and lectures and the use of moving pictures. The publication in the bulletin of the names of offending citizens has already proved a salutary measure; articles and news items of an educational character are also extensively used in the publication in line with the department's work.

Home Rule Compromise

LONDON despatches assert that the compromise on the Irish Home Rule question which the government would propose consists chiefly in a provision that should the Home Rule Bill be passed, any county of Ireland, by a vote of its electorate, may secure exemption from the operation of the act for a term of probably three years. This vote must be taken before the Irish Parliament assembles. It is stated that the government will push the Irish Home Rule Bill to a settlement this term, and that rumors of dissolution are unfounded.

Novel Surgical Feat

ON NOVEMBER 28, 1913, two French children were born, apparently perfectly healthy and lively but joined together after the manner of the famous "Siamese twins." On March 4 an extremely delicate surgical operation was performed by which the children were separated, and they appeared to stand the operation well; it was, of course, performed with anesthetics and lasted fifteen minutes.

Bryan to Tour South America

AT a recent meeting of the governing board of the Pan-American Union, of which Secretary of State Bryan is chairman, it became known through Mr. Bryan's acceptance of an invitation from the government of Chile, through its minister, to visit that country in September on the occasion of the fifth Pan-American conference, that Secretary Bryan has planned a tour through South America, beginning in August, and to include the principal countries of that continent.

Oldest Methodist Bishop Dies

BISHOP THOMAS BOWMAN, of the Methodist Episcopal Church, died at Orange, N. J., aged ninety-seven, on March 3. Bishop Bowman was a farm boy, but at an early age attended an academy in Massachusetts and later the Cassanovia seminary in New York, where, at the age of sixteen years, he joined the church. As a minister his first charge covered a mission route of seventy miles and his salary was $100 a year. Later he founded the Dickinson Seminary in Pennsylvania, of which he was president for ten years, after which he became president of Asbury University, now DePauw, at Greencastle, Ind., one of the first universities to provide co-educational courses, an innovation of Dr. Bowman's.

Aggressive Religious Work

IN THE first week of March a four days' session of religious workers was held under the auspices of the Student Christian Association, the keynote of which was evangelistic advance throughout the world. Different leaders presided, and some fifteen hundred students, representing many colleges and organizations, attended the meetings. The addresses covered the influence of religious workers in the Orient and the need of following up every advantage already won; also the field of religious work in the colleges. Dr. John R. Mott, secretary of the World's Student Christian Federation, defined plans by which religious work is advanced among students. The sessions were characterized as a revival, and it is believed that a great stimulus has been given to all evangelistic work.

Conditions in the Philippines

THE press reports great business depression from the Philippine Islands, attributed chiefly to the policy of displacing white men with Filipinos in public office. If the observations of commercial men are reliable, the benefits conferred by American occupation have been in some measure undone and a tendency toward a return to ancient conditions is noticeable. The administration policy in the Philippines is under fire from many quarters, but the foregoing is the view of the representative of a large merchandise firm who has just returned from an extensive tour in the islands.

The President Speaks for National Honor

AT HIGH noon, March 5, in the House Chamber, in the presence of members of the diplomatic corps, excepting the British embassy, and crowded galleries, President Wilson personally addressed Congress on the subject of the repeal of the Panama tolls exemption, and with such effect that within ten minutes after the address a resolution had been introduced in the Senate, authorizing the President to suspend the tolls, and an unmistakable spirit of acquiescence prevailed throughout both branches of the Congress. The importance of the occasion will best be understood from a careful reading of the address, the text of which follows:

"Gentlemen of the Congress: I have come to you upon an errand which can be very briefly performed, but I beg that you will not measure its importance by the number of sentences in which I state it. No communication I have addressed to the Congress carried with it graver or more far-reaching implications to the interest of the country, and I come now to speak upon a matter with regard to which I am charged in a peculiar degree, by the constitution itself, with personal responsibility.

"I have come to ask for the repeal of that provision of the Panama Canal act of August 24, 1912, which exempts vessels engaged in the coastwise trade of the United States from payment of tolls, and to urge upon the justice, the wisdom, and the large policy of such a repeal with the utmost earnestness of which I am capable.

"In my own judgment, very fully considered and maturely formed, that exemption constitutes a mistaken economic policy from every point of view, and is, moreover, in plain contravention of the treaty with Great Britain concerning the canal concluded on November 18, 1901. But I have not come to you to urge my personal views. I have come to state to you a fact and a situation. Whatever may be our own differences of opinion concerning this much-debated measure, its meaning is not debated outside the United States. Everywhere else the language of the treaty is given but one interpretation, and that interpretation precludes the exemption I am asking you to repeal. We consented to the treaty: its language we accepted, if we did not originate it; and we are too big, too powerful, too self-respecting a nation to interpret with too strained or refined a reading of words of our own promises just because we have power enough to give us leave to read them as we please.

"The large thing to do is the only thing we can afford to do, a voluntary withdrawal from a position everywhere questioned and misunderstood. We ought to reverse our action without raising the question whether we were right or wrong, and so once more deserve our reputation for generosity and the redemption of every obligation without quibble or hesitation.

"I ask this of you in support of the foreign policy of the administration. I shall not know how to deal with other matters of even greater delicacy and nearer consequence if you do not grant it to me in ungrudging measure."

A Suffrage May-Day

MAY 2, 1914, has been named in an official call by the National Woman Suffrage Association to the women of the nation as a rallying day upon which to adopt a nation-wide appeal to Congress for the enfranchisement of women. The president of the association, Dr. Anna Howard Shaw, Vice-President Jane Addams, and other noted women are signers of this call, which is expected to arouse all suffragists to a compelling demonstration. The Senate is at present debating a proposed constitutional amendment giving all women the suffrage.

State Department Loses Counselor

ON March 4, the counselor of the State Department, John Bassett Moore, resigned his office as a result, it is said, of wide differences of opinion between himself and the administration upon the Mexican policy. In the absence of a Secretary of State, the counselor ranks as Acting Secretary, and as yet no appointment of a successor has been announced, and Washington offers no suggestions. The retiring counselor was selected for this position because of his invaluable knowledge of international law and procedure. It is stated that he has not favored the conduct of the Mexican situation at any stage, and that he would have approved the recognition of Huerta. Mr. Moore has filled important governmental positions under other administrations and now returns to Columbia University as professor of international law and diplomacy, from which post he had leave of absence in order to serve the State Department.

HELPFUL MEMORIES*

SUNDAY SCHOOL LESSON BY DR. AND MRS. WILBUR F. CRAFTS

GOLDEN TEXT REVIEW

Gird yourselves with—
It is not ye that speak—
Thou shalt love—
Inasmuch as ye did—
Ask—
Look therefore—
Be not deceived—
Every one who shall confess—
Where your treasure—
Blessed are those servants—
The Sabbath was made—
Not every one that saith—

THESE are the first words of each Golden Text for the quarter to be repeated in order by the teacher and completed by the whole class in concert. We heard a class of eighty-five Chinese boys, ranging from five to eight years of age, in the Pin Kei boys' school at Canton, China, repeat without hesitation, in strong voice, all the Golden Texts for two years. Certainly we may expect American boys and girls to do equally well for one quarter.

The review in the children's class is best conducted by the use of the Bible picture roll, or of the "Little Bible Lesson Pictures," if the class is few in number. (We saw in Amsterdam, Holland, a large window filled with these picture rolls, and a crowd of twenty-five or more people looking at them with great interest. The pictures looked very American, excepting the topics and the Golden Texts, which were printed in the Dutch language.) There is no method that so appeals to children as the pictorial. Just show them the pictures, and they will do all the talking themselves, telling what they have learned about them with very little effort on the part of the teacher. These picture rolls cost but seventy-five cents per quarter, the small cards, twenty-one cents. They are beautifully colored, and quite correct in Oriental features. If the children have been receiving the small cards, they will delight to make them into books, meeting at the home of the teacher or in the class-room on a Saturday afternoon to do it.

The Review in Junior Classes

Each lesson should be assigned to an individual scholar a week or even two weeks beforehand. And each of them should be expected to come with the lesson at his tongue's end, while the class is appointed as a "committee of the whole" to listen most attentively and be ready to supply any part omitted, or correct any false statements. It would be well to offer the distinction of "honorable mention" to those who have drawn the best maps, or made the best handwork, or written each week a review of the lesson in their note-books.

The Review in Senior Classes

By this we mean those of the "teen age" and older. Let the review be taken up by topics such as:

First Lesson: Jesus' understanding and sympathy with the young.

Second Lesson: Gospel mission work as inaugurated by Jesus.

Third Lesson: All sorts of neighbors and how to do our duty toward them.

Fourth Lesson: Loyal service.

Fifth Lesson: Efficacy of prayer.

Sixth Lesson: All kinds of demons to be cast out of men's hearts.

Seventh Lesson: Present-day hypocrisies.

Eighth Lesson: Height, depth and breadth of faith.

Ninth Lesson: The pursuit of riches.

Tenth Lesson: Holding ourselves in check against intemperance.

Eleventh Lesson: The Sabbath for man.

Twelfth Lesson: The greatness of Christendom.

These topics should be assigned at least two weeks before Review Sunday and persons asked to prepare papers upon them to be read in the class. Or let the teacher prepare questions on each topic, and write them on slips of paper, and give them out one week beforehand, requesting those who receive the questions to state their opinions on review Sunday.

If well done the superintendent's review might take the place of the review by class teachers. Here are some suggestions:

1. What is being done for the children in our school?
2. How is our school carrying on Gospel work?
3. What is our school doing to promote Christian friendship and helpfulness?
4. Would it not be well for us to have a weekly Sunday school prayer meeting at the close of the school to last only fifteen minutes?
5. Are we making all we might of Decision Day, and how many of our scholars are church members?
6. To what extent is the Bible our charter?
7. What efforts are we making to develop stalwart Christians?
8. What are we doing to establish righteousness in our community?
9. What are we doing for right training in Christian benevolence?
10. What are we doing against the evil of strong drink?
11. How are we safeguarding the Sabbath?
12. What is our school doing for the great work of missions?

We would suggest that the superintendent would do well to put each of these topics in large letters on manila paper, which could be fastened to the blackboard as each subject was being considered. The reports on the remarks might be made by teachers or scholars selected beforehand by the superintendent. However, we think it would be most impressive for the superintendent to do the talking himself. It will be noted that each of the topics is an outgrowth of a lesson studied during the quarter. Great good should result in applying the truths taught to the whole work of the school.

The Pastor's Review

Let this be given on a week-day evening when parents as well as scholars will be expected to come. We have seen such a review conducted in the Foundry Church Sunday school in Washington, D. C., by the pastor, Rev. W. R. Wedderspoon. It was done by use of the stereopticon, and sixty or more slides were shown, representing all of the lessons for the quarter. The lecture by the pastor was filled with incidents of travel in the regions depicted, and gave interesting facts concerning recent research in Bible matters. It was called "a lecture," and the title given was "From Nile to Nebo."

Those of our CHRISTIAN HERALD readers who desire to have a stereopticon review are invited to correspond with Dr. and Mrs. Crafts about where slides may be obtained. A stereopticon is a good thing for a Sunday school to own. (A good, practical instrument need not cost over $30.) It would be a great aid to Sunday school work and church work, and make it possible to give instruction and profitable series of lectures and entertainments. A class of young men, or young ladies, might well undertake the care and use of the stereopticon.

From everything our Saviour saw,
Lessons of wisdom he would draw:
The clouds, the colors in the sky,
The gentle breeze that whispers by,
The fields all white with waving corn,
The lilies that the vale adorn,
The reed that trembles in the wind,
The tree where none its fruit may find,
The little birds that fly in air,
The sheep that need the shepherd's care,
The pearls that deep in ocean lie,
The gold that charms the miser's eye—
All from his lips some truth proclaim,
Or learn to tell their Maker's name.

Let this poem be recited by some young lady or gentleman who can do it well, and then it might be pointed out how in the lessons of the quarter these illustrations had been verified: the children He saw in the crowd in the first lesson; the harvest fields and laborers in the second lesson with whom he compared the Gospel laborers he was sending out; tender care needed shown in the third lesson; the plowman in the field, faithful in his work illustrating the way of serving God in the fourth lesson; the way of neighbors with each other, illustrating prayer in the fifth lesson; the light and darkness of day and night, picturing good men and evil ones, in the sixth lesson; the customs of Pharisees in many washings of hands and feet before meals, while their hearts were unclean with sin, being used by Jesus in the seventh lesson to show how hateful hypocrisy is; the sparrows not forgotten of God, used to teach perfect trust on the part of people like ourselves, in the eighth lesson; the wrong idea of the use of riches, by the story of the man who thought only of building larger barns, in the ninth lesson; unfaithful servants who gave themselves up to self-indulgence rather than to the service of their Master, warning the people against unfaithful service of God, in the tenth lesson: referring to the care needed to be given to the ox and the ass on the Sabbath day, teaching men how to discriminate about things lawful to do on the Lord's day, in the eleventh lesson; the small grain of mustard-seed and the tree-like plant it develops into as illustrating the kingdom of God, in the twelfth lesson.

The Home Review

Why not? The home should co-operate with the Sunday school. Beginning on Monday, let two lessons of the quarter be reviewed each day, and thus will all the lessons be gone over, and the scholars will be prepared to take a lively interest in the review exercises, and be helpful to others. It greatly encourages the teachers to have such help from the home. Parents themselves will be benefited in their own study of the Bible.

Review Day

Make the room particularly attractive. If the pupils have been doing hard work on the lessons, have it placed on exhibition. If any of the classes have banners, let them be brought out. Of course there should be a United States flag conspicuously placed. Cut flowers and potted plants should be brought in to make the place beautiful. Parents should receive special invitations to be present. If possible, all departments should be brought together, even if it should require the use of the church audience-room.

Make each Quarterly Review day an epoch in the school. Let all aim to do their best and be their best.

"What doth God require of thee, but to do justly, and to love kindness, and to walk humbly with thy God?" These words were spoken by the prophet Micah to the people of Samaria and Jerusalem more than seven hundred years before Jesus was born in Bethlehem. They were ringing words to call them back from the apostasy into which they had fallen. He pleaded with them to return unto Jehovah, for so should the mount of the temple become glorious, and foreign nations (the heathen) would acknowledge Jehovah as their God. If we turn to the sixth chapter of Micah, the eighth verse, in our Red Letter Bibles, we shall find the words of this text printed in red, showing that Micah's words were quoted by Christ (see Matt. 9: 13 and Matt. 12: 7). Jesus was then reproving the Pharisees for the manner of their worship, which consisted rather of forms than heartfelt service. These same ringing words are needed to-day.

* REVIEW, March 29, 1914. GOLDEN TEXT: "What doth Jehovah require of thee, but to do justly, and to love kindness, and to walk humbly with thy God?" Micah 6: 8.

OUR SUNDAY SCHOOL SUPERINTENDENTS' ROUND TABLE

—How much time should the superintendent give the teachers for teaching the lesson? J. C. S.

—Not more than thirty minutes and not more than a fifth of the school session, which has a class-room of its own. There are some teachers who feel that an hour is not a little. We have never met them but we more careful attention to their pending part. Some time a pressing wanted to set having a definite method in order to prevent the waste. There are other teachers who feel that time too long, because they are not prepared to teach the lesson. We know of one such teacher who learned through the lesson itself to study and get out of it. Only by so doing does it become a real joy to teach. Yes, we do not it was not good for them. If you needing the Bible with contempt. What can we do with such teachers? The superintendent should model a teacher's meeting and perhaps arrangement will be a great source of help in training leaders. Possibly it had better be called an institute.

—TEACHERS AND COMMANDMENTS. In Cincinnati, How to do it—connect some handwork with the teaching. Draw on the blackboard two and one-half or three feet high the number one, and print in it: "Thou shalt have no other gods before me," and on successive Sundays follow a similar plan with 2, 3, 4, 5, 6, 7, 8, 9, 10. Give to each child the same figure sketched on cardboard or paper to cut out at home and write the commandment, or get mother to write it as the child tells her what to write. Write to THE CHRISTIAN HERALD office to secure cards already prepared for this work.

—WHEN DOES IT seem best to hold Sunday school session before or after church services in the morning, which are held now at 10:30 A.M.? It is a downtown church with a large suburban membership and also a large roaming floor element. E. C. J.

We know of one church in particular with conditions similar to yours, which changed the morning Sunday school before church service. The result was, the Sunday school was quadrupled in attendance, and a young men's class numbering eight hundred was developed. The attendance at the church service was also increased, for people who had become accustomed to come at the early morning hour to Sunday school found it easy to keep up the habit, and not easy to break it. And many who had not hitherto been connected with the Sunday school were glad to join when they were just on hand. Generally speaking, the afternoon hour is not the best time for the Sunday school, because it separates the scholars from any church service, which they should be trained to attend. For this reason, the Sunday school should not be dismissed if held in the early morning, but invited to attend church, and if held at the noon hour, the church should not be dismissed, but rather the closing part of the church services should form the opening exercises of the Sunday school, after which the various departments would repair to their class-rooms. We saw this most effectively done in Dr. Goodell's church in St. Louis.

—ONE OF THE superintendent's greatest difficulties is to hold Sunday school boys of high school age. The plans adopted in North Dakota and Colorado, which are under consideration in many other States, show one way to do it. There the high schools in many towns and cities give credits for outside "studies of the Bible as literature," which count in the total required for graduation just the same as an equal amount of inside study of English literature. A class of young men is organized in any Sunday school, under a capable teacher, for ninety hours' study of Bible history, Bible poetry and Bible ethics, usually occupying the Sunday school hour for two years, after which those who can pass a written examination of the same quality as the high school requires for other studies receive a credit equal to one-thirtieth of the total required, in recognition that Bible study trains the mind no less for a college course or for the work of life than studies of God's works in nature and in modern history. Both Catholics and Protestants are availing themselves of this encouragement to Bible study in Sunday schools. Further particulars may be had by applying to International Sunday School Association, Mallers' Building, Chicago.

WHERE LOYALTY WON

HISTORIC "Old St. John's English Lutheran Church, Philadelphia," is the oldest Lutheran church in the world, rganized to worship in the English anguage. Among those who were active in its organization was General Peter Muhlenberg," who was a Lutheran minister and left he pulpit in hat memorable scene at Woodstock, Va., to become a general in he Continental rmy. He never again took up he ministry, but as a layman was active in church affairs and helped to organize the first English Lutheran congregation. This old hurch, which in its entire history has had but three pastors, at last faced the problem of city down-town conditions. Pews which once were crowded at very service, eloquently told of fading greatness. Twenty-five years ago a movement was instituted to merge he congregation with another uptown and dispose of the historic property. But love and devotion gained the day and the congregation continued; yet diminishing attendance and revenue threatened the future.

f approximately $100,000 has been born there and who lived there still, nsured the future by giving and bequeathing funds until an endowment f approximately $100,000 has been accumulated. Last year the church board determined to devise ways and means to reach the community anew. The Rev. A. C. Carty was called and associated with the Rev. E. E. Sibole, D.D., who has served the congregation for forty years.

For years no evening service had been held, because it was not deemed advisable for the members to attend services in that section after nightfall. In the early autumn, however, in addition to the regular morning service, the 2.30 P.M. Sunday school and the 4 o'clock vesper services, an evening service for the neighborhood was started, and a steadily growing evening service has been maintained. Out of the boys of the neighborhood the organist and choir leader are organizing a vested choir.

THE CHILDREN HAVE BECOME INTERESTED

The climax of the first year's revived effort was reached at Christmas, when Pastor Carty demonstrated to the church the fact of the presence of available children in the neighborhood. A thousand invitations were carefully distributed to the children living within a few squares of the old church, and all who were invited were present and several hundred besides.

The children of that downtown community have become interested; the mothers are coming to the mothers' meetings, and the people who are attending the evening services for the community are contributing offerings which give promise of soon making this experiment self-sustaining. New members are enrolling in the Bible school, and are giving in their names for catechetical instruction.

Historic old St. John's, fathered by historic men and figuring prominently in the great movements in the Lutheran Church in this country, is demonstrating to American cities that a Protestant church located in the most congested district of a great city has a mission, a duty and a fruitful field.

(REV.) WILLIAM L. HUNTON.

"AS SILVER IS TRIED"

SEVERAL friends were once conversing together concerning certain verses of Scripture. One said that the fullers' soap and the refiner of silver were the same image intended to convey the same meaning of the sanctifying influence of the grace of Christ.

"No," said another, "they are not just the same image; there is something remarkable in the expression in this verse: 'He shall sit as a refiner and purifier of silver.'"

The others thought it might be so, and they suggested that this friend call on a silversmith, and report to them what he said on the subject. She went, without telling the object of her visit, and begged to know the process of refining, which he fully described to her.

"But do you sit while you are refining?" she asked.

"Yes, madam, I must sit with my eyes steadily fixed on the furnace, since if the silver remain too long it is sure to be injured," said he.

"And how do you know when it is sufficiently refined?"

"Whenever I see my own image reflected in it, I know that the process is completed."

She at once saw the beauty and comfort of the expression in that verse of Malachi: "And he shall sit as a refiner and purifier of silver: and he shall purify the sons of Levi, and purge them as gold and silver, that they may offer unto the Lord an offering in righteousness." He will refine us as silver and gold is refined; but he will sit before the furnace, and when he sees his image reflected in us, he will take us from the purifying fires of affliction, disappointment, or other trial, and bring us forth to glorify him, "to offer unto the Lord an offering in righteousness."

Surely it is a beautiful image! We are his chosen vessels, tested and purified in the divine crucible, and then fashioned into the shape best fitted for his use. We all have friends who have been thus refined and molded. How beautiful are their lives! How efficient their service! Out of trial and apparent defeat they have come forth as pure gold and silver. He has not tried them beyond what they were able to bear. He has sat before the furnace. When he has seen his image in their lives, he has been satisfied.

What a privilege it is to become more like him, and to be a vessel unto honor, sanctified, and meet for the Master's use, and prepared unto every good work! Let us not shrink from the ordeal, but trust his skill and love. We are more precious to him than all the gold and silver of earth. He will watch carefully that the heat shall not harm us. He tests, purifies, and fashions our lives. Then he desires us to put into these vessels of his all the special gifts he has bestowed upon us, whatever talent we have; and to present it all unto him as an offering in righteousness and for his service. Shall not his will be ours? What is more beautiful than a pure and consecrated life? Let us sing with Charles Wesley:

> Refining fire, go through my heart;
> Illuminate my soul;
> Scatter thy life through every part,
> And sanctify the whole.

Hamilton Watch

"The Railroad Timekeeper of America"

The Hamilton has a record for accuracy that is enviable indeed, for while accuracy in a watch is something everybody admires and desires, it is something the railroad man must have. Accuracy is the one consideration that governs the choice of the "Limited's" engineer who must locate a signal every 30 seconds. Think what a wonderful tribute to the accuracy of this watch is the fact that

Over one-half (56%) of the Railroad Men on American Railroads where Official Time Inspection is maintained carry the Hamilton Watch.

Begin to talk accuracy to your jeweler and he will begin to talk Hamilton to you.

Write for the Hamilton Book—"The Timekeeper"

It pictures and describes the various models of the Hamilton Watch for men and women—showing the complete watches selling at $38.50 to $150.00 and other Hamilton models of which movements only are sold. Your jeweler can fit one of these Hamilton movements in your present watch case for $12.25 and upward.

BIBLE STUDY AND THE PRAYER LIFE

BY CLAYTON S. COOPER

HOFFMAN, the great painter, said that he sought the figure of his masterpiece, the boy Jesus, from a perfect Jewish youth, but the face he gained by prayer.

Prayer is chiefly valuable in revealing to us the nature and the character of God, a medium of knowing our Father. Russia says that the greatest thing a human being can do in this world is to see something and then go and tell what he has seen in a plain way. If this be true, the man who learned the secret of seeing God, of seeing him face to face in spiritual vision day by day, and who can go out from that vision splendid to make all things according to the vision seen in the mount, as Moses did, that man is truly the world's great man. There can be no really bad days for such a man.

The difference between men is not simply in the things which they see, but also in the vividness with which they see them. The person who has the keen consciousness of God through years of unbroken prayer possesses a peculiar power of certainty and assurance whatever his life may be. He feels like Paul, who said, when other things were falling away from him: "Have I not seen Jesus Christ?" He is guarded from disappointment and defeat by the realization that God is on his side, that he is truly interested in him, and that he can turn to him as naturally as the flower turns to the sun for inspiration and for light and for growth. This certainty has made the martyrs of the early church. It has been the mainspring of power in the great leadership of the world. It has gifted to persistent and irresistible effort men like Jesus, who have been isolated by the very greatness of their vision, lifted out of banalities and the commonplace by the ever-present divine assurance that the Psalmist felt, "Thou art near, O Lord."

But prayer not only brings to the individual the consciousness of God, it also affords a true appreciation of one's self. "Know thyself," said the old Greek philosopher, and gathered in these two words one of the chief means for character building. Prayer, especially when it is earnest, secret prayer, reveals the true nature of the individual as compared with the character of Christ. We are told that Mark Antony pointed out the various rents in the robe of the murdered Cæsar and identified each rent with the name of the cruel smiter; likewise in prayer one learns to place for a moment at last his thoughts upon the weaknesses and the failures of the daily life and to identify these with their causes. One learns to say:

> Search me, O God, and know my heart.
> Try me and know my thoughts.
> And see if there be any wicked way in me,
> And lead me in the way everlasting.

There is no greater need and no need attended by greater difficulty of habitual performance than this need to cultivate the habit of prayer, of silent communion with God, the art of spiritual contemplation, the ability to be alone, to think and to pray. The average person knows a hundred things better than he knows himself. He sees too much to see any one thing clearly. His friends and acquaintances, his work and his play are subjects of constant thought and conversation, but how many have the habit of spending at least once a week an hour alone, in the solitude of their own personality, far from the strife of business and the externalities of social life? He mistakes emphasis and enthusiasm for wisdom and perspective—driven by the time spirit. Jeremy Taylor used to call this getting away for silent prayer practicing the presence of God.

> If prayer, then could never be done,
> Its duty who does perform,
> No goodness ever had been dreamed or done.

Each year freighted with its new discoveries of scientific laws makes it easier for the thoughtful person to believe in prayer. In the light of the marvelous inventions of the twentieth century, prayer is no longer a miracle. The miraculous character of certain answers to prayer found not only in the Bible but also in life are made intelligible by modern discovery of laws which were heretofore hidden, reminding us that there are still other laws whose workings are as yet known only to the divine mind. One thing is certain, proven by history and personal experience, that these laws of God are intended for good, to make his children happy; that he who watches a sparrow's fall is in constant and intimate relationships for protection and for peace with the men and women whom he has placed upon this earth. Their faith expressed in him is the spontaneous and eternal sign of his fatherhood and care.

The great Gospel message for prayer is to launch out upon the goodness of God and his willingness and eagerness to help his children. "Ask and ye shall receive," is a kind of refrain running through all of Christ's teachings. Prayer is the adventure of our belief in the Almighty. It is the utter casting of ourselves upon a God who cares for us, who is more willing to give than we are to ask, and who says over and over again, "Come unto me, and I will give you rest."

TRANSFORMING NEGLECTED LIVES

TWO WHO WILL NOT GROW UP IN IGNORANCE

SIX years ago a Little Sunday school was started in southeastern North Carolina, among some tenant farmers of the poorest white class living far from school and church. The children were growing up in the densest ignorance, and the older people seemed hopelessly ruined by poverty, drudgery, and whisky, that usually accompanied by any religious sensibility.

A year's work in a private home proved so successful that a special building was necessary, and Unity Chapel was erected by these people and later enlarged. A kind of home-demonstration settlement work with the tenant class is now established. During the first year after erecting the new building, some of the people in the community were converted. Prayer meeting was held every Sunday and Thursday night, in addition to the Sunday school. The public school, three miles away, failing to be of any use to these little ones, I started teaching in the chapel the next winter, refusing a position in New York to answer what I felt to be God's call. I lived with the people, "boarding around" in the small uncented shanties, receiving a salary of nine dollars a month.

Ever since, the school has been carried on during the months in which the children can attend. Sociables are held once a month, cooking and sewing classes conducted and a Farmers' Union is organized. The missionary society supports a Chinese orphan through THE CHRISTIAN HERALD; a radiopticon has been bought and used for picture talks, and in many ways the chapel has become the center of the community life. The aim has always been the spiritual, and nearly all are members now of some church, and real lovers of Christ.

This is a sadly neglected class everywhere. Nobody knows them. The merchant who "runs" them on the virtuous crop-lien system, by which the tenant is rarely out of debt, knows the man as his customer, but the women and children seldom go to town, and Christian workers do not see them. Moving usually from year to year, they live much with the church, and often with the school. They live in a world by themselves, visit among themselves and hold aloof suspiciously from outsiders, whom they in addition find genuinely interested in them. A proud and independent people, they work hard for a bare living and make no appeals to charity. In sickness they suffer with little complaint. The hard drudgery tells especially on the women, who are rarely in good health, and on the children. Adenoids, hookworm, malnutrition, cigarettes and drink stunt the boys especially. Some think them lazy, because the men may sleep the streets on Saturday—their one off day—swap horses and drink, and the boys seem a shiftless set; but the same men are hard at work all the rest of the week where nobody sees.

HER BITTER LOT MADE SWEET BY THE GOSPEL

In the South alone there are 886,000 white tenants, representing with their families a farm population of 4,500,000. The conditions that I found prevail generally; often they are much worse. Visitors of this class at our chapel say, so wistfully, "Folks down my way don't have nothing like this." "It's a sight the way we live." "There ain't nobody carin' for us poor folks."

The work is carried on under difficulties; much of the time no horse to carry me about to these scattered homes, no precedents to follow, prejudices against "poor whites" to overcome. On the other hand, this class are simple natured, appreciative, naturally religious, and conscious of their own shortcomings. And they do improve so! Usually they are of pure native American stock and capable of marvelous progress, once aroused.

To-day in that little community the stolid, heavy look is gone, the faces are bright and happy, and the community gathers to pray and sing instead of curse and drink.

SENSE AND NONSENSE

CONDUCTED BY JOSIAH ALLEN'S WIFE

HASTE AND DELAY

ONE could eppisode for hours and hours and not half exhaust the examples that face one of the tremendous consequences, the tribulations and casualties caused by lack of careful thought.

How many times people are hasty and precipitate in their words and actions, bringin' upon themselves various troubles of mind and body that might have been avoided by deliberate and serious thought. Hasty words spoken without forethought, acting without giving due thought to the effects of the act. Oh what troubles and tragedies can be traced back to these causes.

Marietta Holley
Author of Samantha at Coney Island

Forming hasty judgments on slender foundations of gossipy talk, and acting upon them without waiting to learn if the stories had any foundation other than envy or jealousy. How many hearts have ached, despaired and broken, by this cause alone!

How many business men yield to sudden gilded temptation, and are whirled into financial crimes with no deliberate purpose of wrong doing—tragedies that might have been averted by a little earnest thought of the consequences of their act. True purpose and principle that might have been awakened by quiet and prayerful meditation, they think on when there is no further use of deliberation, but when they have plenty of time for heart breakin' regret, in the prison cell—too late.

Two young people rushing into matrimony with no more preparation and sane contemplation of the solemnity and sacredness of the rite than if they were preparing to attend a circus or picture show. A sentimental and sensational story of merriment, musk, and moonlight, with results written in the divorce court.

But then there is such a thing as being too slow and deliberate in your thoughts and actions. It duz beat all what a queer world this is, and how many different sides there is to most every question, and how necessary it is to be mejum and walk round subjects and look at 'em on every side.

All this long train of thought swep' through my mind after a incident that occurred yesterday about noon. Josiah wuz mowin' the big ten-acre lot and had three men workin' for him.

I always lay out to git a little better dinner than common when Josiah is doin' such hard work as hayin' and harvestin', and jest as the clock struck twelve, the dinner that Philury and I had got ready filled the kitchen and dinin' room with delicious odors.

The chickens and roast lamb wuz browned to a golden hue; the dressin' and salad sent forth appetizin' odors, and so did the vegetables and pies and puddin's and rich coffee. And I could see that Josiah and the three neighborin' men wuz revelin' in the sweet aroma, and the thought that they would soon be partakin' of the delicious food. When jest as they had all got washed on the back stoop, and wuz dryin' their faces on the kitchen towel, there come a slow diffident rap on the door. Josiah went and opened it, when there stood a tall young chap with long lank limbs, big feet and hands, and a bashful freckled face lookin' out under a thatch of red hair.

Josiah invited him in and he entered slowly and stood holdin' his straw hat in his hands, turnin' it round and round, and blushin'. And after a long interval he said in a slow sort of a way that he had tipped over a load of hay most in front of the house, and he had come to see if he could git some one to help him load it on agin.

Josiah looked lovin'ly and longin'ly at the table, and said: "We are jest ready to eat dinner. You set down and take dinner with us and then we will help you load it."

"Oh, no," the young man replied slowly, "pa wouldn't like it; he didn't want any dinner, he said."

"Yes you do want dinner," sez Josiah, hunger and the odor of the food making him temporarily wild. "You jes put your horses in the barn and feed 'em, and we will eat dinner, and there are so many of us we can load it up quick."

The young man seemed to think it over, and finally he said agin with his slow drawl he wuz afraid pa wouldn't like it.

"Well then," sez Josiah, "hitch your horses in the road, and come in and eat dinner, and we will help you soon as we git through."

"No," sez he, "I'm afraid pa would be mad."

Josh Pettingill, who sot nearest to the table and wuz the hungriest and maddest at the delay, shouted: "Well, bring your plaguey pa, too. Where is he, anyway?"

The boy answered slowly, twirling his hat, "Pa's under the load."

KAMANI FINDS PEACE

AMONG the students in the Methodist Theological School at Muttra, northwest India, is a young Brahman, named Kamani, who recently made a pilgrimage to Brindaban. For six long years, as he told us, he had gone from shrine to shrine seeking rest for his soul. At Brindaban he was much disgusted with scenes in the temples of Krishna. One day he met Miss Bonnerjee, a converted Bengali woman working among her own people in that city. She gave him a Gospel portion which he read carefully, and his interest impelled him to call upon her for further help. She talked and prayed with him, and he found peace in Christ.

About this time an attempt was made to assassinate the Viceroy at Delhi. Kamani's relatives were angry over his conversion, and reported to the police that he was implicated in this outrage against the official. Kamani was immediately arrested and imprisoned. While in jail he taught the story of Jesus to the policeman who guarded him. After his release, he was baptized.

Another young Brahman, Jaiwant, had been a priest for five years in the largest temple of Brindaban. During a heathen festival or "mela" in that city, a few months ago, he overheard the priests planning to drive all Christian preachers out of the mela, and to throw dust over our district superintendent. He saw the dust thrown, but much to his surprise noted also that the Christians could not be driven out. Jaiwant remained to hear the Gospel songs, and the spirit of Christ entered his heart. He spent that whole night reading John's Gospel, and early next morning left the temple and the worship of Krishna.

He found Miss Bonnerjee, who prayed with him and taught him more about Christianity. A few days later, while the missionaries were holding a conference in Brindaban, Jaiwant came to us, took off his sacred thread, and asked to have his sacred lock cut off. Miss Bonnerjee cut it very slowly, that he might have a last chance to change his mind. But he sat motionless until the very last hair had been cut. Then he was free! His testimony is clear and definite.

For Rent This American Adder For 10c a Day

Cash Price

Ten Days Free
Then 10c a Day

This offer is made to workers—to men who must buy their own Adders. To men who add figures in a slow, hard way, and who often make errors.

That all such men may have this help, we make this rental offer:

We will place this machine in your office for a ten-day test, without cost or obligation. Then, if you want it, you may pay the cash price. Or you may pay $3 down and $3 monthly until you pay $37.50.

What It Does

This American Adder adds, subtracts and multiplies. It does all you could do with $150 machines.

It is rapid and competent. It easily computes a hundred figures a minute and it never makes mistakes. It is so simple that a child can operate it.

It makes play of addition. The longest columns are added quickly, and the totals are always correct.

It will do all this for you for ten cents a day. Then, after one year, the machine becomes yours.

An Ideal Adder

Good Adding Machines have heretofore cost from $150 to $750. Now this competent adder costs $35, and all men who add figures can afford this help.

In less than nine months, over 17,000 offices have adopted this American Adder. Among them are hundreds of very large concerns, general railway offices, and the U. S. Government.

But the greatest welcome has come from workers who heretofore went without Adders. It has come from Accountants, Railway Agents, City and County Officials and Employees, Storekeepers, etc. Our price and our rental plan place this new Adder within reach of all such users.

Send This Coupon

If you deal with figures we ask you to send this coupon. Let this machine do your work for ten days. Note the time it saves, the labor and mistakes. Judge for yourself if it earns its way. Do this in justice to yourself.

If you find it essential, pay as you wish—all cash or 10 cents a day. This offer will probably not be repeated, so send the coupon now.

AMERICAN CAN CO. (46)
1244 Monroe Bldg., Chicago

You may send me, express prepaid, one American Adder for ten days' trial. I will then either reject it, pay your cash price of $35.00, or pay $3.00 down and $3.00 monthly until I pay you $37.50, then the machine becomes mine.

"SUFFER LITTLE CHILDREN"

BY MARGARET E. SANGSTER, JR.

HENRY T. HUNT, the mayor of Cincinnati, is a lover of children. A short time ago he gave a party to the little people at the Children's Asylum. A friend who was present sent this photograph, showing the gentle-hearted mayor with a smile on his face and a toy in his hand sitting among the little folk, talking to them, amusing them, loving them. And though his head is crowned with a fool's cap, his heart is crowned with kindness.

Today, I read an article about a lady that I want to tell you about—a fairy godmother, who is doing her best to help the kiddies. I quote from the paper in which I saw the notice:

"Straight from the slums of the city into one of the city's most exclusive and luxurious homes, the babies of New York will find their way this coming summer.

THE MAYOR OF CINCINNATI ATTENDS A BANQUET

"Mrs. Richard Aldrich, believing social service is due the poor by the rich, has offered the use of her residence from early June till the last of August. Instead of closing the home while she and her family are away, she is giving it into the hands of those who, she says, need it most." Children of from one to seven years will be taken to the beautiful house. Perhaps in this way many innocent babies will be saved from the devastation of the terrible heat. The whole top floor will be converted into a gigantic nursery, and there the children will play under the supervision of trained nurses.

Mrs. Aldrich is from a very old as well as from a very rich family. She is the great-granddaughter of the first John Jacob Astor, and the daughter of a man who was famous for his good works. She was a trained nurse during the Spanish War and is noted for her charities.

It is easy for millionaires to help the poor. Some have even said that it means little of sacrifice, a scribbled signature to a check book and a hurried prayer at night. But though there are many people who are counted charitable and religious, there are very few who would carry the charity right into their own homes.

Some of you may live in large, pretentious mansions, while others dwell in little, vine-covered cottages; some may be in apartment houses, while others may have only a small half bedroom in tall flats over. But no matter how you live, it spells Home to you, doesn't it? Can you imagine taking the same place in the summer time and inviting the children of the town up home and live in it?

Careful housekeepers could you follow Mrs. Aldrich's example? Could you lend a home (even if for a month) for playing kids and such to pass happy days? Could you have a horde of clumsy little feet scratching your parquet floor? Could you?

Yet Jesus told us to go out into the highways and bring the poor people into our homes.

I went to school with a very queerly assorted crowd of girls—girls who were mighty good chums, although utterly different in every way. I remember meeting four of them going slowly down the street one afternoon, dressed in their prettiest suits and hats, but wearing their crossest expressions. From the general attitude I judged that they had been indulging in one of their rare quarrels.

"Girls," I called to them, "wait a second." And they waited for me, grimly, disapprovingly.

"Had a fight?" I queried (not very tactfully) when I had caught up with them.

"Oh, no," it was Elizabeth that spoke. "We never fight."

"I tell you, Margaret," said Jeanne, the tallest and most dignified, "we haven't been quarreling. Kitty just did something to annoy us."

I looked at Kitty—Kitty with the angelic disposition and the large, childish eyes. I tried to think of Kitty, the smallest, meekest one there, annoying anybody, and I laughed.

"How did you annoy them, Kitty?" I asked her.

Tears were very near the surface in her big eyes, and her voice trembled as she answered me.

"They're mean, every one of them," she sobbed. "And I didn't do anything at all. It was just this way. You see, we were going in to get a soda, and they were all in front of me—Elizabeth was leading. When we got to the door she turned around and whispered back 'Be very proper and dignified, girls, there are some members of Bob's class at college out there.' Well, I didn't hear her, and I wouldn't have cared if I had heard, because just in front of the door I saw a tiny little boy with big tears making rivers on his grimy cheeks. 'What's the matter, honey?' I asked, and he sobbed out, 'I want a soda, too—I ain't never had one.' So I took him in with me and the girls got mad."

To me it is sometimes heartbreaking to think of the little children who are forgotten. The tiny baby mouths that speak coarse words before they can lisp a prayer, the tiny baby hearts that hold hatred before they know the meaning of love.

Once in a while a kind-hearted mayor gives a party to a Home full of little orphans. Very, very seldom does a fairy godmother give her beautiful house to the tiny waifs. Many a time they are passed by with never a smile to cheer them.

An Everyday Home Helper

When a bit of domestic machinery, like a food chopper or an ice-cream freezer, needs oiling, use 3 in One. When the sewing machine runs hard because its bearings are dry and gummy with interior oil and dust, use 3-in-One.

When furniture is dim and smoky because of long use in close rooms, clean and polish with 3 in-One.

When time comes for sweeping and dusting, use a clean sanitary "dustless duster" made with a cheese cloth and a few drops of 3-in-One.

3-in-One oil is an "everyday house help." From cellar to garret, from front door to back, there is hardly a spot where it isn't useful. It lubricates, it cleans, it polishes. It prevents rust. A convenient and economical use of 3 in One makes housekeeping easier.

Sold in drug stores, groceries, hardware and housefurnishing stores, in bottles 1 oz. 10c., 3 oz. 25c., 8 oz. 50c. Also in Handy Oil Cans 3½ oz. 25c. If your dealer hasn't Handy Oil Cans we will send one by parcel post for 25c. A Library Slip with every bottle.

Questions and Answers

J. B., Denver, Col. I notice that one of our leading pastors has advised that we should pray about everything, even the smallest detail; that God cares for the little as well as the larger things. How are we to understand this?

We are assured that if we seek first the spiritual blessings—"the things of the kingdom"—all the rest will be added unto us, since he knows we have need of them. We should be satisfied therefore to put faith in God for all our daily needs, and to do the best we can to help bring this about, relying on his blessing to crown our efforts. There are many things we need not enumerate in our petitions. Mr. Spurgeon, when his church committee met to consider appeals for help, would pick out a few letters and, after glancing at their contents, would say: "We won't trouble the Lord about these; I'll attend to them myself." God loves to be helped, and he has endowed us with reason and other faculties for that purpose. He will always bless the efforts of the believing, self-reliant Christian who goes ahead on simple faith. There are, however, many good people who take comfort in laying all their troubles before him and who will take no step without prayer. They find it a daily and almost hourly necessity. We have no word of adverse criticism for these dear ones, who live in an atmosphere of prayer. There are others who submit the conduct of their lives to him, but without taking up those things that seem small and trivial. It is a matter of temperament and doubtless both are right. But if we have the broader, deeper faith, we will learn to trust him and to ask in our prayers only those things that are spiritually or materially vital. We have an unquestionable right to take all our real troubles to the throne—troubles of temptation, of doubt, of anger, of ill-health, of want and distress, of friends who need to be prayed for, etc. If we chose to omit the trivialities, trusting him for them, it is better so. He knows all about us and we should have faith that he will supply all our needs as he has promised. (Phil. 4: 9.)

L. M., Manitowoc, Wis. Who was the first woman preacher in the United States?

There have been women preachers and exhorters from colonial times. Probably the earliest woman preacher was the famous Anne Hutchinson, who preached on the streets of Boston, 1634. Lucretia Mott was a preacher among the Society of Friends and Anne Lee was a well-known preacher of the Shakers in 1770. Probably the first licensed woman minister in the country was the Rev. Antoinette Browne Blackwell, ordained in 1852 in the Congregational Church.

N. B., Topeka, Kan. 1. The zodiac is a narrow strip or belt in the sky about 16 degrees wide, through which the sun, moon and all the planets move; in it are twelve constellations. 2. There are about 6,000 stars visible to the naked eye; these are stars of the first six orders of magnitude. Great telescopes show stars to the eleventh magnitude, numbering several millions. Even these are only the outrunners of the universe nearest to us.

A. R. W., Worcester, Mass. 1. In view of Ulster's opposition to Home Rule please give the religious statistics of Ireland, and the percentage of Protestants in the northern province. 2. How many Protestant members of Parliament are in the Home Rule Party, and do any of them represent Ulster constituencies? 3. Are there any Protestant ministers in favor of Home Rule?

1. The last census showed 3,308,700 Catholics in Ireland; 581,000 Protestant Episcopalians; 443,200 Presbyterians; 62,000 Methodists; 3,900 Jews; 57,800 of other sects and 2,000 not classified. The Protestants are in the majority in Ulster, especially in the city of Belfast; in that province the Catholics are 44 per cent. of the population; Episcopalians make up 23 per cent and Presbyterians 27 per cent. 2. There are eleven Protestant members of Parliament in the Home Rule Party, three of whom represent Ulster constituencies. 3. Yes; several.

F. J. R., Chicago, Ill. 1. How does a territory become a State of the Union? 2. What terms do the following abbreviations represent: G. O. P.; Ltd.; Adt.?

1. The constitution empowers Congress to erect the territories into States and admit them into the Union when they meet certain statutory requirements. When a territory has a sufficient population the inhabitants memorialize Congress to pass an "enabling act" empowering them to form a constitution, and prescribing the conditions to be fulfilled. In a number of instances, however, the inhabitants without asking for an enabling act have adopted a constitution and then applied for admission to the Union. 2. Grand Old Party, referring to the Republican Party; Limited; Advertisement or Adjutant. The answer to your last query is: No.

P. D. K., Cooperstown, N. Y. Great wealth, luxury and indulgence caused the downfall of ancient Rome. The poor were treated simply as slaves. The public lands were pre-empted by the few, who enjoyed enormous revenues. The Gracchi, reformers of that age, demanded a distribution of the State lands among the people, but the demand was stifled in blood. Afterwards, Julius Cæsar, to a certain extent, yielded, but it was too late. Great estates created an aristocracy. The aristocracy culminated in imperialism. The empire grew corrupt. Pliny tersely sums up the situation in the expression, Latifundia perdidere Italiam—great estates overthrew Italy.

V. M., St. Paul, Minn. The lines beginning

"Ye say, they all have passed away,
That noble race and brave,"

are the opening lines of a beautiful poem entitled "Indian Names" by Lydia Huntley Sigourney (1791-1865), and may be found in the leading American Anthologies.

L. A. K., San Diego, Calif. There is nothing in Scripture bearing on the subject of life insurance, but there are various passages on thrift and on making provision for old age. If you turn to I Tim. 5: 8 you will find a very definite statement on the subject. Evidently Paul did not believe that any man claiming to be a Christian was justified in leaving his dependent ones to be a burden on the community, either during his life or afterward. There are birds and other animals that give improvident man a lesson by the way they lay up a store of food against the winter season. Jesus in Matt. 6: 31-34 was not rebuking thrift, but worldly-mindedness and vanity. He was referring to those who pursued the things of this life as the supreme object. He wanted his followers to "take no thought [anxious care or worry] for the morrow." He had no word of condemnation for attention to business, but business gains, wealth, possessions, etc., are all of secondary importance and worry about them springs from the heart's distrust of God, and does no good, but rather evil.

THE YOUNG PEOPLE'S MEETINGS

NOTES ON THE CHRISTIAN ENDEAVOR, EPWORTH LEAGUE AND BAPTIST YOUNG PEOPLE'S UNION TOPICS

John Wesley*

FEW people realize how snugly and strongly John Wesley's message fits into the atmosphere of these very days in which we are living. A true story from the life of a young Methodist preacher will illustrate this fact.

This young man had become interested in the new and stirring things that were only beginning to be said and felt about self-sacrifice and altruism as social forces. (Since some of our younger Epworth Leaguers may not have run this familiar word "altruism" back to find its real meaning, it may be well to state that it means the motive or principle of caring for others instead of caring for self.) Beginning his work as a Methodist preacher and feeling the need of becoming familiar with the writings of Methodism's great founder, this young minister took up John Wesley's sermons and began to search them for expressions or teachings of "altruism."

At just about this time a very wonderful change took place in his own experience, completely transforming his outlook, his point of view, many of his personal interests, sentiments and convictions. Taking up Wesley's sermons again he read them in an altogether new light. It was ridiculous to look for passages about love; they were full of love. He thought to himself and said to others that to look for altruistic passages in Wesley was like taking a pint-pot and a yardstick out into the blazing light of a clear summer day to measure the sunshine. There is nothing else there. It is all sunshine.

So Wesley. He said, in trying to explain and safeguard the doctrine of Christian perfection which was the really distinctive note in his message to the church and to the world: "If any one seeks anything other than love or anything higher than love, he goes wide of the mark."

It is love that the world needs, now and always. Social scientists are discovering that it is unscientific and ridiculous for people to care for themselves. Jesus said it long ago; then Paul said it; then Luther said it; then Wesley said it; then General Booth said it. The time is ripe for some one to say it again, with unmistakable clearness and with splendid force. "He died for all, that they which live should not henceforth live unto themselves, but unto him who died for them, and rose again." To live for him means to live for others. Read Paul's twelfth chapter of Romans and all of John's first Epistle, not forgetting the wonderful thirteenth chapter of I Corinthians, to see again how plain and how beautiful is the call of Christ and his followers to a life of unselfish love.

It worked out wonderfully in Wesley's time and it works out wonderfully whenever it is given a chance — this doctrine of love founded on the fact of the death of Christ and its relation to human sin. Wesley preached a personal religion; a personal experience of the pardon of sin and deliverance from its power; yet that message bore fruit in new legislation and new social standards which revolutionized England. The better labor laws and other items of welfare legislation are traced by historians to the Wesleyan revival.

Our space is used up and we have said nothing about the story of Wesley's life. That can be found in any encyclopedia. It is a life full of adventure, intensely interesting to study. But what Methodists and the Epworth Leaguer especially need is not so much familiarity with the facts of his life as a fresh understanding of his great message, a message which insists that the Christian heart be full of love to God and shall show that love in self-sacrificing service for others.

New-Old Nations of the East*

YOU have often heard the word "renaissance" used of the remarkable mental, moral and esthetic revival in Europe which took place during the fifteenth and sixteenth centuries. Most of you have studied about it in your high school work.

Leaders of missionary activity point out that a movement almost identical with this is taking place in Asia now. Sherwood Eddy has said: "Greater in rapidity than the awakening in the West, this combined renaissance and reformation is crowding into the decades in Asia what was the slow growth of centuries on the continent of Europe."

You young people who read the newspapers are finding out facts about these wonderful changes in Asia which are occurring with amazing rapidity. You all remember the revolution in China two years ago. Just a few weeks ago the Christian forces of the world were saddened to learn that Confucianism had received special recognition by the China Assembly, but missionaries assure us that that edict will not seriously set back the conquest of the missionaries. How much has been accomplished in China just within the memory of most of the young people of our churches is indicated by this striking paragraph written for Service by Mrs. William James Sly:

> Nothing could show the completeness of this change better than the contrast between conditions in Peking, April 13, 1913, and the same date in 1900, at the time of the Boxer uprising. When the first national assembly opened in 1913, the minister of affairs, a Christian man, requested that the churches of the city meet and pray for the republic. "Thirteen years ago these very streets were running with the blood of Christians," writes Secretary Franklin, who attended the service held in the Methodist Church in Peking. "Thirteen years before two hundred members of this church gave their lives rather than deny Christ. The assistant pastor, who took part in the service that morning, lost wife and children, father and mother, brothers and sisters — just thirteen years ago."

The great revival in Korea is also within the memory of most of the present generation of young people workers in the church. It is perhaps the most remarkable case on record in recent centuries of a movement toward Christianity almost national in its scope. Korea has been almost transformed by the power of the Gospel. Think of thirty-three thousand Christians in a single city, Ping Yeng, once known as the worst city of Korea. Think of eleven thousand Christians attending Bible conferences during one year, "many walking from fifty to one hundred miles." Think of Korea sending a Christian missionary to China and planning to send one to Japan! These are some of the conditions in Korea, also pointed out by Mrs. Sly in the article already referred to. Korea, too, is one of the "new" nations, having been opened to the outside world only about thirty years ago. Just now its patriots are mourning its subjugation to Japan. But this matter will be worked out for the best under the great hand of God.

Japan, too, is a new nation — one of the oldest, yet one of the newest, for it is only about sixty years ago that Admiral Perry sailed into the closed port of Japan's capital and by show of force induced the nation to open communication with the outside world. Now it is one of the most up-to-date and modern of nations. There has been much talk that Japan wants to

"I guess it won't hurt you none," was the unyielding response, and in another minute they found themselves standing half awed in the great empty lobby. Leaving his wife standing by the door, Mr. Brant silently approached the box office. She watched him anxiously; the silence of the place disturbed and distressed her. Never had Eugenia's magnitude and importance appeared so overwhelming, so overpowering. A wave of homesickness swept over her, and a longing to escape from the place. Then her husband stood before her, disappointment written plainly on his countenance.

"He says she don't sing here tonight; he says he never heard of Eugenia Montague."

Mrs. Brant's eyes widened with amazement. "Mebbe he's new," she suggested in perplexity.

"Mebbe," he responded laconically; 'but he don't act so; he acts 's if he built the opera house hisself and sang in it every night since. I don't exactly understand him not knowin' about her, though."

When they returned to the hotel they made inquiries at the office; the clerk was not familiar with the name but promised to make inquiries, and he painstakingly explained to them that so many artists of remarkable talent and success came to New York, that it was really a difficult matter to keep track of them.

A dawning triumph began to show itself upon the face of Mrs. Brant. "There's two people in the world that's never heard of Eugenia Montague, and I guess there's plenty more. I guess she ain't so great as she's makin' out. Land sakes, to hear her mother talk you'd think she was most as great as George Washington!"

"Well, there, mother, she's young," protested Mr. Brant. "Can't everybody hear about her in one day."

"It's been three years," returned his wife, "three years, and here's two people right here in New York that's never heard a word about her."

It was two hours later on that very day that Mrs. Brant clutched her husband by the arm and drew him to a standstill before a bill-board on which was printed in flaming red letters the name, "Eugenia Montague, Queen of Comedy."

Mrs. Brant stepped forward and placed her cotton-gloved finger on the lower line. "What does that mean," she asked, "that she's better than any of them?"

"I guess that's it," replied her husband, "I guess there ain't much that's higher than queens. Think what we was livin' next to all those years and never suspectin'. Queen of comedy! Who'd a thought it of little Jenny Day?"

Mrs. Brant drew back suddenly, the old pain of resentment reawakening in her heart, and the vision of her own well-loved little daughter with her homely tasks brought the hot tears again into her eyes. She laid a firm hand on her husband's arm. "You come on, Hiram, there ain't no time for seein' shows."

But Hiram Brant seemed not to hear. "Queen of Comedy," he chuckled, "and it says continued performance. We'll go right in now." A veritable terror seized his wife; she felt that she could not witness the sight of the triumph of this girl who had been her own idol's playmate. 'Don't go, Hiram, don't you go. Think of Susie," she pleaded. But they had already joined the line of people entering the playhouse, and Hiram ruthlessly approached the ticket-seller.

He explained that he wanted a seat right up in front and was told that for 35 cents they could have seats in a box so near the stage that he could almost shake hands with the actors; and seizing the desired tickets they entered the lighted theater and were hurried at a bewildering pace to their places.

The entertainment had already begun when they entered. A man in riding dress and a woman in spangled evening gown were putting through their tricks some little trained dogs, and in spite of her preoccupation Mrs. Brant found herself presently watching with absorbed interest and enthusiasm. Then, her mind abruptly turning back to Eugenia, she critically surveyed the woman in evening dress. It seemed to her that the woman looked vulgar and painted. She wondered if she were a friend of Eugenia's. The picture of Jenny Day's sweet fresh young face rose before her mind and seemed to reject such a thought. "I suppose Jenny's real careful who she makes friends with," conjectured Mrs. Brant. "Jenny was real well brought up."

Her mind became once more engrossed with the tricks of the dogs, and then, just when she expected it least, the little animals frisked off amid a storm of applause and the stage attendant replaced the sign with a new one on which was printed in large letters "Eugenia Montague." The next minute a slender girl in spangles and tarlatan stood before them. Mrs. Brant caught her breath with convulsive earnestness. "It ain't her," she whispered, "that ain't Jenny." For answer he pointed silently and conclusively to the sign. For a time Mrs. Brant sat spellbound looking at the girl. Then she saw that it was indeed Jenny Day.

She was singing in a high, strained, tremulant voice a comic song which evidently pleased the people, for again and again they burst into shouts of laughter. Mrs. Brant did not understand the song, but the laughter vaguely troubled her. Eugenia was wearing the spangled dress of the photograph, but the freshness was gone, and it was worn and dingy. The woman in the box turned her face away. She felt suddenly distressed and sick at heart.

It was such a pitiful thing, so cheap, so tawdry, this glory she had for so long envied with such bitterness of heart. The girl's eyes looked tired, and her cheeks thin under her flaunting color.

When the song was over and the applause finished, Mrs. Brant rose. "I'm goin' home," she said, "I'm goin' right now." Mr. Brant's face had grown troubled, but he motioned her back. "Ain't you goin' to see the show?" he whispered impatiently.

"No, I ain't; I feel sick. You come. We're goin' right home." Her husband followed with no further protest.

Outside in the street it was some time before either spoke. Then Mrs. Brant turned excitedly to her husband. "So that's what Jenny day calls being an opera singer, and making all Benton folks feel as though they wasn't fit for her to step on. My land!"

"Jenny never said she was a opera singer," objected Mr. Brant mildly. "She never said just what she was doin'."

"Well, she made out she was the greatest that there was."

Again Mr. Brant objected. "No, she didn't, mother. She just sent pieces of programs and pictures, and I guess mebbe we imagined the rest."

Another silence followed, then Mrs. Brant announced: "Well, I guess it won't take me long to walk over to Mis' Day's and just let her know where her daughter's got to that she's talkin' so high about." She spoke with hysterical fervor, and her husband looked down at her in real alarm. "You won't do no such thing," he protested. "Why, mother, it'd just about break her heart."

"I guess it won't be no worse for her than 'twas for me to keep hearin' how much smarter and finer she was than my Susie. I ain't goin' to hide the truth, anyways. Facts is facts and folks is got to face them."

Mr. Brant said nothing more. He

You will then be in a position to settle the matter once for all. Any argument in favor of waiting until to-morrow is also an argument in favor of waiting until the price has been increased in America, as it was in England in December last, and that is surely the wrong course to take.

To the Man—or Woman—Who May Say, "I do not need the new Encyclopaedia Britannica":

What will be your loss if you should thus altogether refrain from purchasing it?

First, the Loss of Available Knowledge

It is impossible by the use of any number of other books, or by any other method of acquiring information, to gain the knowledge—on any one of a thousand subjects—of which the need arises from day to day.

Second, the Loss of Available Pleasure

Occasion may suggest your reading an article or answering a question dealing with science, sport, art, industry, politics, finance, biography, history, exploration, naval or military operations, or any other branch of human activity; and in every case a writer of the highest authority tells you a delightfully clear story.

Third, the Loss of Available Efficiency

Whatever you are doing—whether it is work or the pursuit of pleasure—you will do it better, more satisfactorily and more confidently if you have the assistance that the new Encyclopædia Britannica is already giving to more than fifty-eight thousand other people.

You will be sure of making these gains, and of avoiding these losses, by signing and mailing now the inquiry form found below.

THE PRICE of the new Encyclopaedia Britannica A FEW WEEKS HENCE

—$29 to $50 more than at present—will not be an extravagant price for the book; but it would be an extravagance for you to pay it needlessly, after neglecting this opportunity to pay less.

58,000 SETS HAVE ALREADY BEEN SOLD

It is "the most successful book of our time," and has been bought by all classes. The new Encyclopædia Britannica is being sold, not merely to "bookish" people, nor to men who have already achieved success or fame, but principally to people who have their way to make in the world, and who cannot afford to do without it, even though their incomes are small, because they recognize in it an aid to advancement.

Whether you are a business man, a farmer, a miner, or a professional man; whether you are a manager or a worker in a factory, store, office or bank, you will certainly be interested in finding out what this work can do for you.

determined to revert to the subject when his wife should be in a more reasonable mood, but the moment did not seem to come. Once indeed he alluded awkwardly to the situation, but the conversation was adroitly turned.

When Mrs. Brant returned to Benton it was with a little air of triumph which did not pass unnoticed by her daughter. "Why, I declare, mother, you look younger than I do," she exclaimed delightedly. I guess it did you a heap of good to go off for a holiday. I don't know as I'd known you, if you hadn't been with father. Father ain't changed much." Mrs. Brant laughed with a little embarrassment. "Well, I feel as though I was made over new, and that's a fact," she admitted.

For a time Mrs. Brant moved uneasily about the house until she saw her husband started on his way to the office; then she slipped out of the front door, and glancing back to see that Susie was not following, walked hastily across the intervening space to her neighbor's yard.

Mrs. Day saw her coming, and stood smiling in the open door, even before her visitor had reached it.

"Well, now, if this ain't good of you, Mis' Brant!" she exclaimed genially, "I suppose you had a real good time; you're looking well."

Mrs. Brant tried hard to respond to the other's geniality, but she was conscious of a sudden constraint that made her feel awkward and ill at ease. "Yes, I had a real good time," she answered; "who do you suppose I saw?"

The other woman did not answer, but led the way to a musty little sitting-room and drew forward a chair without speaking. Mrs. Brant seated herself uneasily and cleared her throat. Her hostess, taking the chair beside her, bent forward eagerly, her thin, anxious little face alight with anticipation.

To Mrs. Brant it seemed suddenly more difficult that she had supposed to broach the subject and reveal her story. Through the open window she caught a glimpse of Susie out under the trees, her happy, laughing face bending over the sleeping baby; then she glanced back at the eager, pinched face before her. It struck her suddenly that Mrs. Day had grown old and anxious in the last year. She had not noticed it until now. Before her mind came again the picture of Eugenia as she had seen her there in the glare of the lights, and instinctively she glanced back at her own daughter with the fresh, happy face.

Something seemed to tighten in her heart, and the words she had pondered over with such careful preparation would not come. Those words she had repeated silently again and again as she sat in the rushing homebound train, conscious only that she was coming nearer and nearer to her hour of satisfaction when the truth should be told and all the hours of her silent fretting, the sleepless, tearful nights, the moment of rebellion and humiliation, all should be atoned for. Now the hour had come, and the words she prepared with such precision failed her.

"Yes, I saw Eugenia," she said finally. Something uncertain in her voice drove the color from the other woman's face, and she leaned forward toward the visitor. Her thin hands clasped together in feverish anxiety.

"Did she—did she look well?" Mrs. Day faltered.

Mrs. Brant's eyes lifted to the other's tired, anxious face, then fell to the thin, overworked hands, and turned once more to Susie out there under the trees. Suddenly she placed a protecting hand on the other's hand. "Land, yes, she looked well. Her cheeks was red as roses, and her eyes so bright, and she sang just lovely." Mrs. Brant paused and swallowed hard before she continued. "There was lots and lots of people, and when she sang they clapped like anything."

Mrs. Day raised her head with that familiar, triumphant little smile that had been so tantalizing to her neighbor. "Ain't it wonderful?" she breathed, "just wonderful! To think of my little girl that I used to send off to school in her little checked gingham apron! My little Jenny—and to think of her now! Why, you ain't goin' so soon, Mis' Brant! I haven't heard hardly anything yet about your trip." But the visitor had risen.

"I guess I can't stop just now," she exclaimed hurriedly. "You see, I've just this minute gotten home, and there's lots of things to see to. Why, I haven't scarcely had a peek at the baby. Seems though he'd grown in just these few days I'd been gone; seems though—lots of things is changed."

Mrs. Day followed her silently as far as the porch door. Then she put out a friendly hand. "I feel as though I couldn't hardly let you go, Mis' Brant; there's so much I want to know about." Then suddenly the pride and exultation died out of her voice. "Oh, Mis' Brant, I've got to tell you; it don't seem right nor grateful after all that's happened, and I've got so much to be proud of, but there's times when I wish my girl could have stayed with me, same as yours, and that I could look out and see her singing under the trees instead of in that big city. Sometimes the city seems so big—and so fur off."

Mrs. Brant did not trust herself to answer. She hurried down the steps and across the yard. When she had reached her own room she came to the window and looked back. The mother of the prima donna was still standing there, watching with hungry eyes the girl with the baby out under the trees.

CHRISTIAN HERALD KIND AND BROAD

I believe THE CHRISTIAN HERALD gives the kindest and broadest views of everything good and is the most useful for home and Christian life of any paper published. MRS. H. A. Hawley, Pa.

THE YOUNGEST BANK PRESIDENT

THE pleasant distinction of being the youngest bank president in the United States, perhaps in the world, belongs to W. L. Moody III, of Galveston, Texas. Mr. Moody is just past twenty years of age and was recently made president of a State bank, The American Bank and Trust Co. of Galveston, the institution itself being comparatively new. Mr. Moody's father, W. L. Moody II, was its first president and the son its cashier. His disabilities as a minor were removed by law in order that he might serve in that capacity, therefore when his father resigned from the presidentship, W. L. Moody III was eligible to the office and was elected. This youthful head of a bank represents the third generation in a family of bankers. The grandfather, W. L. Moody, is still president of one of the oldest banking institutions in Texas, and his father is now president of the City National Bank of Galveston. Mr. Moody was born in that city. After finishing school he began work as a traveling salesman for a cotton company, then entered upon his banking career by filling different positions while the men took their vacations. H. C. KEGLEY.

pit her strength now against America for the dominance of the Pacific and to gain a foothold on the Western hemisphere. But there must be no bloodshed between these sister nations, and there is no likelihood that there shall be. Both are following the light and must walk hand in hand toward it, not obscuring the path of light by the horrible darkness of war.

The Philippines are indeed a new nation—and this, too, within the memory of some of you. You remember Dewey and Manila Bay. You remember the great exodus of stalwart young American teachers to man the schools of the archipelago. You have heard and read of the transformation in matters of health and progress.

In all these things it was Christian civilization which has led the way and provided the impetus, the inspiration and the vigor which have brought these astounding changes to pass.

Missions and the World*

ON THIS Sunday the lessons for Christian Endeavor and the Baptist Union overlap to some extent. Read the notes in the B. Y P. U. lesson on "The New-Old Nations of the Far East."

Now to these inspiring facts about China, Korea, Japan and the Philippines add some study about India and Africa. Hear this good news from Rev. C. E. Parker, district superintendent of Methodist work in the Vickarabad District, South India:

"We started the year with a Christian community of 9,223, and our company has grown to 13,818—4,495 having come into the fold by baptism during the year. But this number just begins to represent the great host of those who are seeking to come. Had we the force to get to the people, we could have baptized just as many more.. Many of these who have been baptized this year have been waiting for more than a year, but we could not get to them."

Rev. John Lampard, of Gujerat, writes, as reported in the Missionary Review of the World: "It seems by no means outside the bounds of possibility that, if the Christian churches were strong enough to receive and give Christian instruction to all as they come forward, we might see the whole of the outcast peoples of India seeking to enter the door of the Church of Christ within the lifetime of many of the missionaries of to-day."

Work in Africa progresses. The unfortunate controversy growing out of the Kikuyu conference, while it may affect the home church in England, will probably lead to no serious setback in Christian conquest on the foreign field. Certainly the gathering of sixty missionaries at a Christian conference and their comforting mingling with one another and with the followers of Christ in the Dark Continent was a beautiful indication of the unity and final triumph which must attend Christ's cause.

Africa has seen great changes since Christian work began there—the creation of Liberia, the opening of the Congo district, the creation of a new nation in the South. There are great names to be remembered in African missions, like Livingstone and Bishop Taylor. And there are present-day laborers, like brave Dan Crawford, who need the prayers, the sympathy, the support and co-operation of the church.

In both Asia and Africa Mohammedanism is the chief opponent of Christianity. Its followers are uniting and massing their forces and challenging the church of Jesus to fresh consecration and a sturdier advance.

How We Foster The Love of Quaker

You want your children to delight in oats. They need it to build brains, nerves and bodies. They need it for energy.

No other grain does what oats can do. And mothers have known this for ages.

Years ago we developed a special grade of oat food, and we called it Quaker Oats. We made it of just the rich, plump grains which gave us large, luscious flakes. A special process enhances that flavor and keeps it all intact.

The fame of these oats spread all the world over. Their taste and aroma won millions. And now the oat lovers of every race eat a thousand million dishes yearly.

Quaker Oats

A Unique and Luscious Oatmeal

Note first that Quaker Oats costs you no more than oats without this flavor. And that cost is only one-half cent per dish.

Yet we discard in the making all puny grains. We get only ten pounds of Quaker Oats from a bushel—only the cream of the oats.

That's the reason for the big flakes, and one reason for the flavor.

There is no oat food like this. Even Scotland sends here for it.

Now a 25c Size

Now we put up a large package for 25 cents. It lasts nearly three times as long as the 10-cent size. And by saving in packing it offers you

10% More For Your Money

Among the oat lovers, all the world over, Quaker is loved best. And many of them send ten thousand miles to get it.

Remember this when you order oats. Say Quaker and you get these special oats. You get delicacy.

We are doing our part to foster the love of oats. Do your part, and your folks will enjoy the finest oat food in existence.

ANSWERED PRAYERS

THE idea of the noon-hour daily prayer is being adopted by the men of the Bowery Mission. All those who are or have been in any way associated with the mission are requested to remember the moment of prayer every day at the noon hour. In this way the present active members of the Brotherhood, all those who have gone out through the mission to positions of usefulness, the workers at the mission and all its friends, the members of the Prayer League and of the CHRISTIAN HERALD Family will be united in a chain of daily prayer. Who can estimate the divine strength and glory that may descend to earth through this channel of united prayer?

Let us remember, however, that it is not what we pray for but what we believe for, that we receive. "According to your faith," Jesus said, "be it unto you." Then remember, too, that "faith without works is dead." So may we all keep on trusting our infinite Lord for the supply of every need, and join our faith for new victories for the Cross throughout the world!

Acknowledgments

Mrs. E. H. L. writes from Augusta, Mich.: "I must tell of the wonderful answer to prayer in the restoration of our daughter to health. When the doctors and nurse gave almost no hope, prayer was continually on our lips. I found in my Bible these words of our Saviour: 'Fear not, only believe, and she shall be made whole.' From that time I felt our prayers were answered. And I do not cease to thank him for the precious life he gave back to us."

Mrs. G. B., of Livonia, N. Y., writes: "I wish to acknowledge many answers to prayer for help through financial straits in a most wonderful manner."

Mrs. E. P. S., of Fort Collins, Colo., writes: "Some valuable papers were lost. I prayed to God to restore them, which he did."

A subscriber writes from Allentown, Pa.: "At a time when my life was despaired of God restored me through the prayers of my family."

Mrs. G. W., of Cornville, Me., writes: "I wish to acknowledge financial aid received in answer to my prayer this winter."

Acknowledgments of answers to prayer have also been received from

L. M. D., Los Angeles, Calif.; G. McN., Fullerton, Neb.; Mrs. E. P. S., Fort Collins, Colo.; Mrs. A. J. P., Lincoln, Neb.; L. M. D., Los Angeles, Calif.; Mrs. D. S. N., Brooklyn, N. Y.; Mrs. J. R. B., Kane, Ill.; Mrs. A. N. C., Topeka, Kan.

Requests for Prayer

Rev. R. H. Harris, of Greensboro, N. C., requests prayer for the success of his work in that field; R. E. asks prayer that threatened blindness may be averted; W. R., that blindness threatening a friend may be averted; L. A. E., for the healing of a friend afflicted with epilepsy; Mrs. X. Y. Z., that a great burden may be lifted and a dear one restored to her; Mrs. S. W., to have more patience and love; Mrs. E. W., that a heavy burden may be lifted; Mrs. G. W. M., for a daughter who is passing through a great trouble; Mrs. L. L. requests prayer that her mother's sight may be restored.

Prayer is requested for the safe return of little Catherine Winters, who recently disappeared mysteriously from her father's home. A minister of the Gospel, out of a charge for two years and in great need, desires special prayer that he may soon obtain a position where he may do good.

An anxious reader requests prayer that she may know her sins are forgiven and have the peace of God in her heart; E. M., for a deeper work of grace in her own heart; Mrs. H. B. H., to become a true Christian; Mrs. I. A. L., E. J. P., and Mrs. J. J. W., for a deeper work of grace in their own hearts; Miss N. V. D., to be fully converted; Mrs. O. H., to be a "real Christan"; Mrs. C. McG., to understand the Word, also to be restored to the joys of salvation; Mrs. V. A. B., that peace may be restored to her, also to know Jesus better.

For Revival or Reform

Mrs. A. E. C. requests prayer for a revival at Gaffney, S. C.; L. E. B., that a revival may take place in the church and community at Guilford, Me.; Mrs. H. C. L., for a revival at Richland Springs, Texas; V. T. R., that the saloons may be closed in Berlin, Marhesan, Ripon and Waupun, Mich.; Mrs. M. J. T., for the Williamsburg Mission to the Jews, that the veil of blindness may be removed from the Jewish race and that they will believe in the true Messiah.

A CHILD'S PRAYER

DEAR Jesus, hear my prayer,
Thou who wert once like me,
A little child; make me thy care,
And help me thine to be.

Then, Saviour, hear me pray:
Take thou my hand in thine,
Dwell in my heart that so I may
From this day call thee mine.

Ingersoll
INGERSOLL WATCHES have timed the lives of thirty-five million Americans. It is only by comparison that we realize how great that number is — thirty-five millions means an Ingersoll for every third man, woman and child in the United States.
The reason for these sales is VALUE—the greatest time-piece ever produced for so small a price. Note particularly the small thin model Ingersolls that combine beauty, small size and low price with the guaranteed accuracy and dependability of "The Watch that Made the Dollar Famous."
Eclipse, $1.50—A medium sized, thin model watch, just the right size for men.
Junior, $2.00—A smaller, thinner model for boys or men.
Midget, $2.00—A small, thin model watch for women and girls.
The Wrist Watch, $2.50—A small, Ingersoll with a soft leather strap that goes around the wrist. Out of the way, yet ready for instant use. Worn by men and women.
Ask for an Ingersoll and be sure the name is on the dial.

EGGS ONE OF THE BEST OF FOODS

BY A. F. HUNTER

MANY people do not know how good an article of food a good egg is, and there are quite sufficient reasons for their lack of knowledge. Many never ate a perfectly fresh egg, and eggs deteriorate rapidly in quality when left exposed to the air in a warm place, such as the usual pantry, or a country store; many people, too, never ate a well-cooked, or rightly cooked, egg. It is safe to say that could these two difficulties be surmounted, the per capita consumption of eggs would be doubled. And eggs are one of the very best of foods.

The writer has the advantage of having eggs for breakfast which were laid the day before, and he has the further advantage of knowing how to cook an egg so that it is just right—for him! The tremendous difference in cooking eggs was brought home to me once upon a time with great force, when I was an over-night guest at the home of a very prominent poultryman. For our breakfast the following morning the chief dish was ham and eggs, but the ham was cut about three-eighths of an inch thick and was as salt as brine, and the eggs were fried till they were tough.

Here is what a medical journal has to say about eggs; it is quoted from Medical Talk:

"Eggs consist of protein and fat, water and mineral matter. It is the protein, or nitrogenous matter, that builds up and repairs the tissues of the body, while the fat supplies energy. The white of an egg is often said to be pure albumen, but it also contains phosphoric acid and sodium chloride, or common salt. The yolk contains the fatty part of an egg, phosphorous, calcium, magnesium, potassium and iron. Eggs also contain sulphur, and this probably accounts for the dark stain left by eggs on silver, the sulphur coming in contact with the silver, forming silver sulphide.

"Eggs are very easily digested. Raw eggs are more quickly digested than cooked eggs. Soft-boiled eggs, roasted eggs and poached eggs are more easily digested than fried or hard-boiled eggs. The stomach will digest a raw egg in from one and a half to two hours. Soft-boiled and roasted eggs require from two and a half to three hours, while hard-boiled or fried eggs must be allowed from three and a half to four hours for digestion. Eggs furnish a good substitute for meat, and we believe it would be far better for the average person if eggs were more frequently used in place of meat. Especially do they make a light, nutritious dish for breakfast, instead of the usual bacon or ham or sausage."

That states the case fairly as to the merits of eggs as food, but does not consider the abominations that are sometimes served, and which so greatly discourage the would-be eater of eggs. The trick is not to fry the egg too fast, nor let it spread out too thin over the frying-pan. A skilful cook of my acquaintance will break an egg into a saucer, then slide it gently into the frying-pan, and as the edges of the white begin to harden will turn them back upon the rest of the egg with a thin griddle-cake turner, and fry the egg till the yolk is jelly-like but not hard; it is safe to say that no one who has eaten a nicely fried egg like that has had any difficulty in digesting it.

An omelette is a common breakfast dish, but many an omelette is extremely poor eating, because it is overcooked or undercooked, or has waited too long after being cooked before being eaten. The same cook mentioned above used to have a saying: "The people should wait for the omelette and not the omelette for the people," and therein lies an important part of

Now's the Time to Repair Winter's Wear

Ordinary wear and tear during the winter months naturally means scratched woodwork and dulled floors. Then there is that room or two you've been promising to do over "next spring." In others, there are odd painting jobs, which taken altogether mean a great deal toward keeping up the house. This time ask the decorator in your town to give an estimate based on the use of having a good omelette on the breakfast table. And when it is rightly compounded and baked to the second ("to the minute" isn't close enough), it is a most satisfying dish—provided the eggs were strictly fresh when it was made.

The one perfect breakfast dish, and the one a certain family never tires of, is "coddled" eggs on toast; the eggs being cooked by pouring boiling water upon them and letting them stand in the hot water, upon the back of the range away from the heat so that the water shall not boil, for from six to ten minutes—the length of time depending upon how many eggs are in the dish and the depth of the water. Eggs cooked thus will be jelly-like in consistency when the shell is gently broken and the contents poured out upon the nicely buttered toast, and if cooked just right the delicate amber color of the yolk will be detected beneath the covering of white, and when this is parted with a fork the yolk will flow sluggishly, spreading out over the toast awaiting it.

A little salt, just a hint of white pepper, and if any one can suggest a more delicate and appetizing dish than this "coddled egg on toast" we would be pleased to hear from him. With the eggs fresh-laid and laid by well-fed hens it is, truly, "a dish fit to set before a king." But there are eggs and eggs, and not all eggs are equally good in quality. Neighbor Blank's half-starved hens, for example, cannot possibly produce the rich, full-bodied eggs that my well-fed hens produce, any more than his cows wintered on a composite ration of corn butts and meadow hay can yield as rich milk as my Jerseys which are fed on sweet clover hay with a relish of good ensilage supplemented by an adequate grain ration.

Indeed, there are eggs and eggs, and fortunate is the man who has the really-truly fresh-laid article at command. He is to be envied, for he enjoys a table delicacy of most appetizing quality, and one of which he is never weary.

A Graceful Gift

MR. S. A. S. METHENY, treasurer of the Board of Foreign Missions of the Reformed Presbyterian Church of North America, has sent this letter to THE CHRISTIAN HERALD:

"I herewith enclose check for $73.26. This money was forwarded to me from Mersine, Asia Minor, Turkey, for the Japan sufferers from famine and earthquake. The contributors were as follows:

Sabbath Congregation of Mersine	$ 55 00
Private subscriptions	13 62
Boys and girls in mission school	3 64
Subscriptions per J. F. Carithers	1 00
	$73 26

During the great persecution of the Christian population of Asia Minor in 1896 and the years that followed many gifts were sent by sympathizing friends in America through the medium of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD. The good people of Mersine, remembering this, are now passing along their blessings to others in need. Their liberal gift will be forwarded to the Japanese earthquake and famine sufferers, as requested.

FREE—ROSES—FREE

By a happy arrangement with other publishers we are enabled to offer four (4) magazines:

The Pictorial Review
The Ladies' World
The Modern Priscilla

at a lower rate than they have ever been offered before, and in addition to give every person who takes immediate advantage of the offer eight guaranteed rose bushes absolutely free.

Think of it! Four magazines—three monthlies designed to keep the woman of to-day up-to-date on all matters that pertain to household economy, dress, home matters of all kinds, and one weekly, THE CHRISTIAN HERALD, which brings you the illustrated news of the world from the Christian standpoint in such plain, straightforward language that every reader is kept abreast of the times.

And furthermore, an opportunity to secure the making of a beautiful rose garden without cost. Spring is almost here, and you will enjoy planting these eight hardy bushes which, with simple care, will blossom and yield you a harvest of beauty. Read the description of the rose plants below, and imagine how they will look blooming in your own garden. If you have never had a garden before, begin to have one now, and watch the result—the everbloomers tastefully arranged in the garden, the climbers to beautify the front porch.

HERE ARE THE ROSES WE SEND YOU FREE

EVERBLOOMERS

BESSIE BROWN:—Snow-white, delicately tinted pink. Flowers large and beautifully formed, lasting a long time after being cut. One of the finest roses of late introduction.

KAISERIN AUGUSTA VICTORIA:—Delicate creamy white. Buds are elegant, long and pointed; flowers full and double; very fragrant. One of the most beautiful of all roses for open ground culture, being perfectly hardy.

MRS. B. R. CANT:—A beautiful rose of splendid habit of growth, being very strong and free blooming, bearing large double flowers of a beautiful carmine red. Valuable for outdoor culture.

PEARL DU JARDIN (Pearl of the Garden):—Rich golden-yellow. Often sold in cut flower stores for "Marechal Neil," so close is the resemblance. Buds of immense size; flowers globular and very fragrant. Dark, thick, shiny foliage.

WELLESLEY:—Clear rose-pink, reverse of petals silvery rose. A vigorous grower and free bloomer, with extra large double flowers.

PINK MAMAN COCHET (the Queen of all Pink Garden Roses):—The buds are beautiful, large, full and firm and elegantly pointed; as they expand they show great depth and richness, sometimes measuring two and one-half inches from base to tip. Perfectly hardy in all sections of the country. The color is clear, rich pink, changing to silvery rose.

CLIMBERS

LADY GODIVA:—A new climbing rose. This rose is similar in habit of growth to the Crimson Rambler. Blooming in immense clusters it is a beautiful sight. Its color is most pleasing, being a pure flesh, the lightest of all the pink climbers. A very rapid and free branching rose; hardy as an oak, deserving a place in every garden.

TAUSENDSCHOEN (Thousand Beauties):—The most sensational climbing rose yet introduced, blooming profusely from the beginning of June until the last of July; the double flowers appear in large clusters. The color runs from delicate bengal or tender rose through the intermediate shades of bright rose and carmine, with white and yellow tints showing. There is no other rose in cultivation like it. It is a strong grower, with but few thorns, and absolutely hardy.

NEW YORK LODGING HOUSES

[T IS a common error to assume that the cheap lodging-houses of New York are peopled exclusively by chronic vagrants, irreclaimable degenerates, thieves and "panhandlers." To be sure, there may be seen, skulking here and there among them, grim, sinister, shameless men, shifting and slouching to and fro, looking at the world out of vindictive and defiant eyes.

But the agent of the New York Bible Society, who has recently been engaged in placing Bibles and Testaments in these places, would tell you that this type forms a comparatively small percentage of the population of New York's cheap lodging-houses. While it is not difficult to find there men who would not hesitate to hold you up with a revolver or "blackjack," pick your pocket or vote in your name, there may also be readily found an entirely different element—an element in which are men fitted by nature and acquirements to sit on the bench of the highest court in the State, or to conduct successfully great business enterprises; to burrow under one great river and swing mighty bridges across another; men who are qualified to shine in almost every field of endeavor. The New York Bible Society agent could tell you the name of an ex-governor of one of the proudest of the Southern States, who for many months found shelter in a Bowery lodging-house.

Between these two extremes it is possible to point out almost every grade of human character and qualification.

Prominent among the habitués of these places are what are known as the "remittance men," largely composed of foreigners, who by reckless dissipation, profligacy or crime have brought shame upon their families at home, and whose relatives, conditioned upon their remaining away from their native land, pay them a monthly stipend, varying from $20 to $100. Among this class may be found many belonging to families bearing proud names. In most instances the monthly allowance is squandered in riotous living within a few days, and the remittance men must rely upon their wits to furnish them with means to live until the next amount comes. The begging-letter writers" are recruited largely from this class.

Then there are the men who are not vicious, not dishonest and many of whom are strictly temperate. They are simply and persistently indolent, and will only work when their necessities compel them to, and then only long enough to earn sufficient to supply them with shelter and food for a few days.

Here too, may often be seen among the transient guests the visitor to the city who has fallen among thieves or been lured by strange women, or who has spent all "seeing the sights of New York," and by selling or pledging his clothing or other personal effects exists until help comes from friends.

The periodical drunkard who loses his position, often a responsible one, through drink, who has sold his clothing and is wearing what is called in the lodging-house vernacular "relievers," composed of the unsalable stock of the "ole clothes man," is a familiar and often a grotesque figure, for the cut and fit of these "relievers" are very far from being the last word in the realm of fashion.

Then there are the real cripples and maimed and blind and deaf and dumb, and the spurious cripple "for revenue only," and so on through all the varieties of human wreck and ruin.

It would seem that the cheap lodging-house population, composed as it is of all sorts and conditions of men, should offer a promising field of labor to the Christian philanthropist, but as a matter of fact it is a field that has been but slightly cultivated. Apart from the work of the New York Bible Society and one or two missions in the lower part of the city, little, if anything, has been attempted to relieve these conditions and reclaim these derelicts drifting on the sea of life. That it is possible to do something cannot be questioned by observant men in view of the fact that great numbers of these lodging-house habitués are susceptible to good influences. The Bibles which are placed within their reach are eagerly read by many of them; and the efforts put forth by the Bible Society agencies and the missionaries have been fruitful in transforming many into strong, clean, useful men. Instances are numerous of men redeemed who for the after months and years have "tuned their lives into some faint echo of the life of God."

READ IT TWENTY-FIVE YEARS

Yes, my dear brother, it has been a long time since I took my first copy of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD, I suppose nearly twenty-five years. It is the best paper in the world, and getting better all the time. May the Lord bless you in your trip to the Holy Land.

Allisonia, Va. L. T. LINDSEY.

A WOODEN HORSE AS A ROYAL CHARGER

MONG the picturesque petty kings of Dahomey, the French colony on the west coast of Africa, who some time ago swore allegiance to France, was his dusky majesty of the Dassas. The native potentate made his appearance in the camp of General Bailloud, the French commander-in-chief, astride a dummy steed set upon a wheeled stand and drawn along by his ministers. The horse was of wood and was a fine example of the dummies used for display by saddlers.

Your Great Chance to get a California Farm is NOW

In the great San Joaquin Valley, California, are chances to-day for money-making in fruit-growing, in dairying, in poultry-raising, that appeal to the man who wants to make his effort count for most.

Your markets are unlimited. There are the hungry big cities of the Pacific Coast, two of which are to have great expositions next year. Thousands of mines and lumber camps never get enough farm products. The rest of the world is glad to pay good prices for California fruit.

You will find a well developed country. You will find good roads and rural delivery. A neighborly, get-together and work-for-the-benefit-of-all spirit makes a success of co-operative effort in getting the profit for the grower.

Ambitious, progressive farmers are wanted to settle this wonderful valley. I know where the opportunities are, and I will gladly point them out. I can save you time and travel, because you need not duplicate the investigations my staff has made.

Our books, "San Joaquin Valley," "Dairying" and "Poultry," will give you a great deal of information. Then if you will write me what more you would like to know, I will tell you. The books are free. So is all the assistance and information which I can give you.

Santa Fe agricultural demonstrators will assist new settlers in selecting the right crops to get best results. One of these men will help you if you wish.

Just say "Send California books."

THE STRANGE CASE OF COLONEL LABRADOR

SOME six months ago, I communicated to you that the Protestant Colonel Juan Labrador, of the Spanish Marine Artillery, was under arrest and awaiting trial by court martial because he had refused to attend the so-called "Mass of the Holy Spirit" and adore the wafer when ordered to do so as a preliminary to presiding at a court martial.

He was accused of disobedience in refusing to obey the order to attend this mass, and of prejudicing the administration of justice by causing a suspension of the court martial at which he was appointed to preside.

I suppose your readers have almost forgotten the affair, but at last the delays of the law and all other detentions passed by and his trial was set for December 19. As the committee engaged in the new translation of the New Testament into Spanish was in session at Puerto de Santa Maria, only ten miles distant from San Fernando, where the trial was to be, its six members deemed the occasion worthy of their personal attendance. We found the members of the court all present at the headquarters of the marine officers at an early hour. They did not immediately enter the court room, but marched solemnly to a chapel to attend the above mentioned "Mass of the Holy Spirit" (like the one Colonel Labrador is accused of having refused to attend), after which they assembled as a court. Then we were permitted to enter, and together with a few other Protestant ministers and friends, occupied one side of the audience chamber. The court consisted of seven generals and three colonels.

The general of the Armada, E. Sestoa, presided. The prosecutor was Colonel Labrador's superior officer, General J. Gonzalez, and the defense of Colonel Labrador was assigned by the court to Colonel A. G. Reyes. The secretary of the court had a huge bundle of papers, which he began to read aloud.

It looked as though it would require several days to finish reading them. But as he proceeded, the dry details of official procedure were soon despatched, and the colonel's own statement of the motive of his refusing to attend the mass, and his reasons for believing that the constitution of Spain gave him liberty of conscience, and that he had no spirit of disobedience nor of disloyalty to the king nor his country proved to be very interesting. The interest increased as striking testimonials were given to his character, his honorable and heroic military career, and his sacrifices for his native land.

The prosecutor followed and in a perfunctory way presented the accusation and the demands of the law. The counsel for Colonel Labrador followed in what proved to be a masterly defense of the colonel. It should be said that Señor Labrador asked to be permitted to defend himself, but this was refused, as he had not been admitted to the bar. He then refused to name counsel, leaving that to the court.

Happily, the gentleman whom they appointed had been a classmate of Labrador and proved to be a worthy defender of his cause. He expressed his admiration for Labrador's loyalty to his religious convictions, and said he wished he himself were as faithful a Catholic as Labrador was a Protestant.

When the defense had concluded, the court adjourned. The sentence was not announced for several days.

Colonel Labrador was present, but not in the court room, but in a side chamber, and had liberty to greet his friends. He was calm and confident that he was in the right, and that providence would not desert him. He was condemned to six months and one day of light imprisonment and to be reduced during this time to half-pay.

Romances of Modern Business*

THE American romance is in the large office buildings and the mar of trade; it is the romance of great achievements in commerce, industrial leadership. And it is a wonderful romance! The child of th world's nations is leading them!—ARNOLD BENNETT.

The Story of the "57 Varieties"

THE big clock boomed the hour of noon. Where there had been quiet among the diligent workers, there now broke a wave of conversation. The doors were flung open and into the green courtyard hurried hundreds of employees.

They made a gladsome picture—these vigorous men and women, with their buoyancy and evident content with their lot, seeking to make the most of their midday recreation with laughter and healthful exercise. A visitor to the plant with his host turned to take in the view, and then, above, beheld another sight that compelled interest.

At a window, on the second floor of one of the main buildings, stood a man smiling upon the scene in the courtyard. He was an elderly man, with a face subtly merging the qualities of power and tenderness. Intently he watched the employees at play. "Whose is the 'face at the window'?" was asked.

"That," replied the host, "is Mr. H. J. Heinz, the founder of the company."

During the forenoon there had been unfolded to the visitor the history of the "House of Heinz"—for that is the scene and subject of this story—and in it the founder of this significant industry stood out an heroic figure. A truly romantic story, blending the elements of sentiment and the dramatic action of big achievements.

The man who stood at the window controls an industry that has a main plant at Pittsburg, occupying 160 city lots and fourteen branch factories in different parts of the United States, with others in Canada, England and Spain. He employs over five thousand hands in his factories alone and distributes his products through his own agencies and branch houses in all the principal nations of the world.

Forty-five years ago this same man began preparing and selling food products, but under very different conditions. A small room at Sharpsburg, Pa., and an adjoining garden of about half an acre were the setting for the first scene of the industrial spectacle of the "House of Heinz." Here Mr. Heinz began his business career by raising horseradish for the local trade.

To the accomplishment of all this there must have been brought some force besides the fineness of the products and the integrity of the business management.

Mr. M. S. Achenbach, advertising manager for the H. J. Heinz Company, named the third of the trinity of supports of the Heinz stronghold when he said: "The success of the Heinz Company has been in no uncertain degree made possible by the character and extent of the company's advertising."

It will be remembered that the vital advertising campaign which early established the "57 Varieties" in the public mind was carried on in the periodicals of national circulation.

The little room and plot of garden at Sharpsburg yielded an inspiration; but this small foundation could not long serve the purposes of a man with the will to build a large structure. Mr. Heinz expanded his operations to fruits and vegetables. Soon he had established such a lucrative local trade that he decided the scope of Sharpsburg was too limited for his enterprise. So, in the early seventies, the Heinz plant was moved to Pittsburg.

Here again the words of Mr. Achenbach are pertinent: "Our success after the establishment of the plant in Pittsburg was great," he said; "the Heinz products found a ready market and a continuing demand. But it did not take the young manufacturer long to discover that no matter how superior his product might be, unless spread the knowledge of that goodne to a wider territory, he should alwa remain a local manufacturer. So began to advertise."

The founder of the "House Heinz" wanted to create a world-wi demand for his products. In tho early days, before the efficacy of hig powered advertising had been demo strated, this was regarded as a drea But the Heinz dream has reached dramatic fulfilment.

All this was accomplished by broadly gauged advertising appea The foundation was laid through t weekly and monthly periodicals of n tional circulation. The response lift the Heinz Company from a loc Pittsburg concern to an industry international proportions.

The Heinz Company believed in pe sistency and originality in advertisin Together they have had a telling effec Who is there not familiar with t small green-pickle trade-mark or t sign of the "57 Varieties"?

The green-pickle trade-mark wa adopted soon after Mr. Heinz bega advertising. Later he saw the ps chological appeal of a popular catc phrase. None that came to his atte tion seemed just what he wanted unt he noticed a sign in a New York sho dealer's window. It read: "Twent styles."

"Why," thought he, "can I not adve tise the number of my products?" H counted the items in the list of fooc manufactured by him. There wer fifty-seven. "How can I word this? he mused, "'styles' will not do for food term; 'kinds' does not soun right; fifty-seven, fifty-seven—vari ties!" The thought came to him in flash. And so the term "57 Varieties was started on its history-makin career in the food world.

Mr. Achenbach has some interestin things to say about the Heinz adve tising ideals. Hear him further: "Th business of the H. J. Heinz Compan is an example of the possibilities o modern commercial evolution. It i simply the logical result of fitting a idea to public demand and stickin conscientiously to its purpose of fu filment.

"The Heinz Company feels that th magazines and weeklies have been force in developing a demand for an a confidence in Heinz products. Th ethical standards of the periodical with regard to their advertising are i harmony with our own ideals, and hav assisted us materially in creating th public confidence that we now enjoy.

A great industrial success such a that of the H. J. Heinz Company i another vivid illustration of the powe of the magazines in working hand-in hand with an industry in its develop ment. A product is advertised in a leading periodical; that message pene trates every section of the country carrying with it the accepted sugges tion that the product advertised mus be "right" or it would not be repre sented in that kind of a periodical Such is the present-day view of maga zine advertising.

There is another phase: the field o public service. The creating of a de mand for Heinz products has set new food standards; has given employ ment to thousands of people; has made a market for the products of some thirty thousand acres of land; has conserved the food supply, and has re lieved the housewives of the world of many cares. Many the woman that has blessed Heinz when an unexpected guest arrived!

General Azcovate, one of the court, won lasting respect by dissenting from the sentence. It was evident to the whole court that the colonel had refused to do what the law required and they were compelled to bring in the sentence, which was for the lower penalty. They also added a recommendation for a reprieve or pardon.

A little less than a month passed after the sentence and Labrador was imprisoned, when the reprieve was given, at which time he was reinstated and is now at his post.

Since these events, the Prime Minister, Señor Dato, has made public his intention to introduce a bill in the coming session of the Cortes to abrogate the law that requires attendance at the "Mass of the Holy Spirit" by any one who declares it is contrary to his religious principles.

Colonel Labrador feels amply repaid for all he has suffered, if it has been the means of bringing about the repeal of this intolerable law. His faith is as simple as that of a child and as sublime as an apostle's. He expects the Lord to remember him with a hundredfold here and with an "infinite fold" hereafter, not on the score of merits, but of simple grace and divine love.

What Rome Says on Church and State

IN his encyclical letter, Libertas praestantissimum, issued June 20, 1888, Pope Leo XIII spoke of "the fatal theory of the need of separation between church and state," and of "that fatal principle of the separation of church and state." His opposition to the American doctrine of the separation of church and state is therefore clear and decided. There is no mistaking his position.

Some members of the American hierarchy, Cardinal Gibbons and Archbishop Ireland for example, occasionally utter some very pleasant things about the constitutional provision for the separation of church and state in this country, and without saying so in plain words they evidently wish to foster the impression in the minds of Protestants that this arrangement is in harmony with Roman Catholic principles; but either they are consciously playing a double part, or they are ignorant of the genuine Roman Catholic doctrine upon the subject.

In marked contrast with such Jesuitical shuffling is the authoritative utterance of Pope Leo XIII. He does not hesitate to declare to Americans the true papal principle. The Roman Catholic Church, he says, has prospered in America, in spite of the separation of church and state, because of "the fecundity with which God has endowed his church," but it would have been much better if there had been a union of church and state (meaning, of course, a union of the Roman Catholic Church and the state), and if the only true church had "enjoyed the favor of the laws and the patronage of the public authority."

Let not Americans be deceived by the fair speeches of those who are leading a movement "to make America Catholic." If the Roman Catholics ever gain the political control in this country and can possibly bring it about, the Roman Catholic Church will certainly enjoy "the favor of the laws and the patronage of the public authority." In order that Protestants may be able at that time to make a consistent protest against such a program, they must now refuse "the patronage of the public authority" themselves, and oppose every effort on the part of the Roman hierarchy to obtain it.—Protestant Magazine for March, 1914.

You, Too, Should Wear Holeproof Hosiery

A Style for Every Occasion—A Grade for Every Purse

MORE than 1,000,000 men, women and children know that the wonderful success of Holeproof is due to an unusual quality. Every hosiery advantage is provided—in style, comfort and light weight.

The guarantee of six months' wear with every six pairs of Holeproof is only one of the reasons for its great popularity.

Another reason lies in the result of our policy of constantly watching the World for every hosiery improvement. And our ability to pay the costs of adopting the best—an ability that is made possible by our great volume of business.

We send for the World's finest cotton yarns—Egyptian and Sea Island. We pay for these yarns an average of 74 cents per pound. Common yarn in this country costs 32 cents.

And we have lately imported, at a large expense, a great Swiss machine to do our own mercerizing because this machine adds a beautiful lustre and 22 per cent more strength to the yarn. Don't you want such hose? With all their advantages, they cost no more than common kinds.

The genuine Holeproof is sold in your town. Ask us for the dealers' names. We ship direct where there's no dealer, near you, charges prepaid, on receipt of remittance. Write for free book that tells all about Holeproof. See if you, too, don't want this style, comfort and wear.

OREGON MOTHERS' CLUBS

MRS. ELIZABETH R. TATE

IT IS scarcely sixteen years since Mr. and Mrs. Robert H. Tate were gladdened by the advent of their first-born child. The inexperienced mother was 3,800 miles from her home, and there was no one near with whom she could advise. "Eagerly I sought knowledge which meant so much for the future welfare of my child—knowledge which should have been imparted to me before I took the marriage vows!" she confessed.

And she adds: "How many thousands of women have blundered along and simply experimented in the bringing up of their first child! How appalling it is to think of the world moving on for centuries without deeming it important to educate boys and girls for future fatherhood and motherhood!"

That conviction and need brought about the present Statewide child-welfare movement in Oregon. The work began with parents' meetings in the First Presbyterian Church, Portland, Ore., later extended to other churches under the title of the Home Training Association, and expanded in 1905 into the Oregon State Congress of Mothers, with Mrs. Tate as president.

The original group of thirty has now expanded to two thousand members and sixty circles. Besides other legislative work, this body has secured the passage of the dependent widows' pension bill; many improvements in schools, including sanitary plumbing and drinking fountains; higher efficiency of teachers and pupils; safe and sane Fourth of July observance, etc.

This Oregon Congress of Mothers conducted two child welfare exhibits, which have become a permanent civic feature of Portland, established in the city court house as the Parents' Educational Bureau, where any perplexed and untutored parent, teacher, or expectant mother may find the needed help for the solution of problems in child study, training, discipline and nurture. The little meeting in which Mrs. Tate and other young mothers years ago received practical suggestions has thus become a civic institution for the betterment of the home and family. Mrs. Tate has now been awarded a unique distinction, having recently been appointed by the governor of Oregon as chairman of the first child welfare commission ever formed by the authorities of any State.

AMONG THE WORKERS

IN A RECENT issue of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD (February 25) in describing the life of the late Dr. Sidney Whittemore, it was stated that he was born in New York City. It should have been added by his biographer that Dr. Whittemore belonged to one of the oldest and best-known New York families.

—A NEW ORGANIZATION has been formed to get in touch with boys and young men coming from country districts to our big cities, to help them secure lodgings and make the right acquaintances, with the hope that they will later join the organization and help extend its work. The organizers call themselves the Cadets of Temperance and are planning to operate in New York and Philadelphia at the start.

THE UNION GOSPEL MISSION of Solvay, N. Y., organized April 15, 1912, reparts success in bringing souls to God. December 7, last, Superintendent D. J. Buxton started a Sunday school in connection with the mission, and one little girl about eight years old attended. February 15 there were eighty-eight on the roll, and an attendance of forty-four. The children are mostly of foreign born parents, and did not formerly attend Sunday school anywhere.

—AN INMATE of Auburn Prison, Auburn, N. Y., writes: "I know that Jesus has saved me. He has taken the desire for drink from me. Some friend had your paper sent to me for six months. As soon as I get my freedom I shall join the CHRISTIAN HERALD Family if they will let one that has been behind the bars join it. We have one that is working for us that is Mrs. Maud Booth of the Volunteers of America. The boys call her Little Mother. And then Mr. Mott Osborn of Auburn is working for us. We have got one good warden, Mr. Charles Rattigan. May God bless you and THE CHRISTIAN HERALD Family, and may the year of 1914 be a prosperous year to you."

Help This Man

—AN INTELLIGENT, well-educated man of thirty-nine years, who was convicted of a crime in 1910 and who will be paroled from prison on April 10 next, on condition that he secure employment, has written to THE CHRISTIAN HERALD inquiring if some one among its readers cannot find him work. His offense involved no dishonesty. His prison conduct has been exemplary. He has been employed there as prison storekeeper, dealing with bills, invoices, monthly, yearly and special reports. He writes well, operates a typewriter, is extremely clever at lettering work such as would be used in a shipping department, marking boxes or writing signs, etc. He can drive and care for horses, or he can do a salesman's work. He would be willing to begin at $10 per week, and would be grateful for any chance extended to him to start anew in life. Here is an excellent opportunity to do real Christian service. Any one interested in the case can learn full particulars by addressing "EARNEST," care THE CHRISTIAN HERALD, Bible House, New York.

[Since the above appeared in a previous issue of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD a number of letters have been received. However, we neglected to mention that "Earnest" cannot leave the State of New York until finally discharged. Will some kind reader in New York State interest himself in this case?]

Mrs. McFarland was formerly Miss Amanda Reed, one of Virginia's and was the head of a family of thirteen children. She married Rev. David Sheldon McFarland, a Presbyterian minister, in Oberlin, Ohio, and spent ten years in home missionary work in Illinois, then went to Sitka, Alaska, where she became the Indians' friend. Mr. McFarland died in 1876. Mrs. McFarland soon afterward went as the first missionary to Alaska, where she labored for twenty years, stopping only on account of ill health. A home for girls at Sitka and a chain of mission schools along the coast and islands are attributed to her self-sacrificing work.

NOT A MIRACLE

Just Plain Cause and Effect

There are some quite remarkable things happening every day, which seem almost miraculous.

Some persons would not believe that a man could suffer from coffee drinking so severely as to cause spells of unconsciousness. And to find relief in changing from coffee to Postum is well worth recording.

"I used to be a great coffee drinker, so much so that it was killing me by inches. My heart became so weak I would fall and lie unconscious for an hour at a time.

"My friends, and even the doctor, told me it was drinking coffee that caused the trouble. I would not believe it, and still drank coffee until I could not leave my room.

"Then my doctor, who drinks Postum himself, persuaded me to stop coffee and try Postum. After much hesitation I concluded to try it. That was eight months ago. Since then I have had but few of those spells, none for more than four months.

"I feel better, sleep better and am better every way. I now drink nothing but Postum and touch no coffee, and as I am seventy years of age all my friends think the improvement quite remarkable."

Name given by Postum Co., Battle Creek, Mich. Write for a copy of the famous little book, "The Road to Wellville."

Postum now comes in two forms:

Regular Postum—must be well boiled. 15c and 25c packages.

Instant Postum—is a soluble powder. A teaspoonful dissolves quickly in a cup of hot water and, with cream and sugar, makes a delicious beverage instantly. 30c and 50c tins.

The cost per cup of both kinds is about the same.

"There's a Reason" for Postum.

What 15c Will Do

The little matter of 15c in stamps will bring you the Pathfinder for 13 weeks on trial. The Pathfinder is an illustrated weekly, published at the Nation's Capital, for the Nation; now in its 21st year of increasing success. The paper fills the bill without emptying the purse, it costs but $1 a year. If you want to keep posted on what is going on in the world, at the least expense of time or money, this is your means. If you want a paper in your home which is sincere, reliable, entertaining, wholesome, the Pathfinder is yours. If you would appreciate a paper which puts everything clearly, fairly, briefly—here it is at last. Send only 15c to show that you might like such a paper, and we will send the Pathfinder on probation 13 weeks. The 15c does not repay us, but we are glad to invest in New Friends. Or send $1 for full year; money back any time if not satisfied. Address Pathfinder, Bx C Washington, D.C.

Stirred by Revival

AT Hutchinson, Kan., six weeks ago, fifteen Protestant churches of the town began a union evangelistic meeting with Evangelist Charles R. Scoville, of Chicago, and his associate workers leading. From the first service it was apparent that great things were in store for the churches and the city. To date, 3,110 have professed conversion and have united with the churches. Two hundred and twenty-nine came forward at the invitation on the last Sunday. Professional men, business men, the traveling men, the foremen of great industrial institutions, newspaper men, people in all walks of life, were reached. The thoroughness of the work is evidenced in the personal work done by these converts. The meetings were held in Convention Hall, seating 4,000. On March 1 two great overflow meetings were held in the Presbyterian and Methodist churches. Neighboring cities and towns sent delegations, and for miles around the country was stirred with the spirit of the meetings.

THE RETURN

By LOUISE MANNING HODGKINS

AS one who well his joyful welcome read,
Returning to his own unquestioned place,
With one remembering glance at that dear face
Which is his Heaven, our darling from his bed
Stood in the nursery door unheralded,
A radiant vision in a sunlit space;
Then stepping forward to a sure embrace,
"Mama, I have come back," he gently said.

When we awake from our last earthly sleep,
Pausing a moment at the open door,
Shall we not say with smile of deep content,
"Dear Father, I've come back," and gladly leap
To deeper, fuller life forevermore,
To Love, to Home and all enfranchisement?

ENJOYS THE CHRISTIAN HERALD

For three years now I have been enjoying THE CHRISTIAN HERALD, and I just feel like telling you what an invaluable paper it is. I want to thank you especially for your stand about the Roman Catholic Church. I think our country needs to become awakened to the claims of that church. I am much interested in Dr. Sheldon's story, "Jesus Is Here."

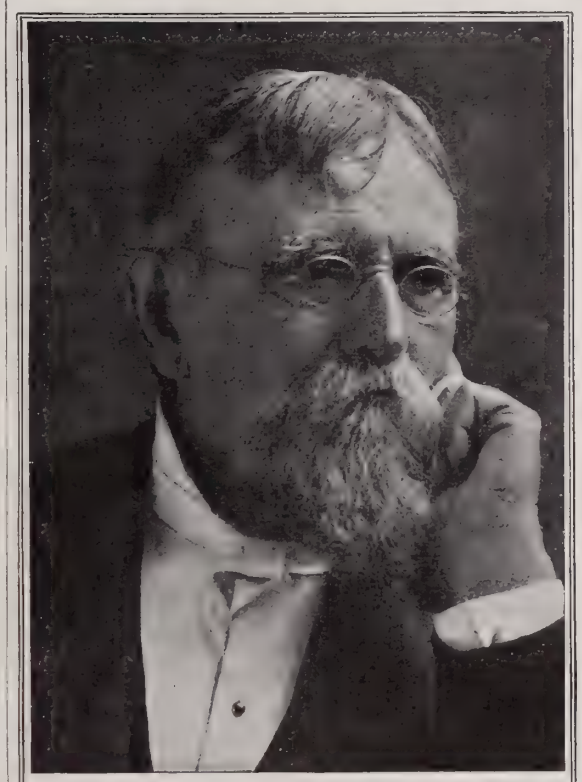
"BEN HUR" Offered FREE

For NEW Subscriptions to The Christian Herald

BOOKS by the thousand are written, read, talked of and forgotten, but Ben Hur remains the most famous religious romance and only enduring novel of the past quarter of a century. Nearly two million copies of this book have been sold.

If you love books and have not read Ben Hur you have missed a wonderful treat. If you have a library Ben Hur should have a place in it. If you have children you should see that this marvelous book with its enlightening and inspiring story is read by them. So great, indeed, has been its popularity that, until this edition was brought out, the publishers have never felt impelled to cut the price below that first established, $1.50. It has sold for $1.50 a volume for over thirty years. But finally the publishers were persuaded to accept an order for one million copies, to be sold at a reduced price. The Christian Herald was enabled to secure a portion of this million edition and now offers its readers the opportunity to secure the book at nominal cost, or, if they prefer, free of all charge.



Author of "Ben Hur"

Our Proposition is as Follows:

Old subscribers who are about to renew may secure the volume with a year's subscription to The Christian Herald for $2.00.

Subscribers who have already renewed may secure the volume absolutely FREE of all charge by sending us one NEW yearly subscription, accompanied by $1.50.

Extra Inducement

Furthermore, if this new subscription is sent at once, we will send, also FREE of charge, a copy of that wonderful picture, "The Chariot Race," 17½ inches high by 28 inches wide, rendered in all its gorgeous colors on extra heavy white art paper, ready for framing. It will make a splendid ornament when hung on the wall at home, and it will prove an additional inspiration while you are reading Ben Hur.

This edition of Ben Hur is bound in handsomely decorated cloth. It is stamped in gold and contains a lifelike frontispiece portrait of the author, General Lew Wallace.

Friends who wish to make sure of securing a copy of Ben Hur and the Chariot Race should send in their orders at once, as our supply of the books and pictures in the circumstances cannot last long.

The Christian Herald Almanac will also be sent to all new subscribers and to those renewing as long as the supply lasts.

HOW TO OBTAIN A COPY OF "BEN HUR" AND "THE CHARIOT RACE" PICTURE

We will send you postpaid a copy of Ben Hur, bound in cloth, The Christian Herald Almanac for 1914 and THE CHRISTIAN HERALD for One Full Year, all THREE for only $2.00

— OR, —

We will send to old subscribers FREE, as a reward, a copy of Ben Hur, for sending us One NEW Subscription to THE CHRISTIAN HERALD for $1.50

And, in addition, if the new subscription is sent in at once, we send you absolutely free of charge a copy of the picture, The Chariot Race, 17½ inches high by 28 inches wide, rendered in all its gorgeous colors on extra heavy white art paper ready for framing.

A CRYING DEMAND

The quickest way to turn "cry-babies" into smile-babies is to give them plenty of KELLOGG'S TOASTED CORN FLAKES.

These crisp and famous flakes are every youngster's favorite food for breakfast, lunch, tea or 'tween-times.

A bowl of KELLOGG'S-and-milk also makes an ideal "bite" before bedtime—easily and quickly digested, it's a peaceful way to end the day.

To prevent disappointment, don't merely ask for toasted corn flakes—say "Kellogg's, please" and look for the signature on the package.

Questions and Answers

W. F. L., Galion, Ohio. Can you inform me where I can obtain the history of Babylon? Of course, I know the history as related in the Bible, but I wish to have a history that treats of this old city and the surrounding country.

Smith's and Sayce's histories of Babylonia, Maspero's Dawn of Civilization, Hilprecht's Explorations in Babylonia, Professor Albert T. Clay's famous book Light on the Old Testament from Babel are excellent for reference, the last-named the best of all because the latest. The real history of Babylonia is written in the tablets and inscriptions which are now being excavated from the ruins of its capital and its principal cities.

Subscriber, Lyon Station, Pa. 1. There is a wide diversity of opinion concerning capital punishment. In certain countries, it has been nominally abolished; yet it is questioned whether in such countries capital crimes have therefore decreased. Under the old Mosaic laws, capital punishment was provided for certain classes of offenses. A century ago, many crimes were so punished which are now visited by imprisonment instead. The argument against capital punishment is that man has no right to take away that which he cannot either give or restore, and that in depriving a criminal of life we may be also depriving him of the opportunity of repentance and salvation. Many books have been written on the subject, and both sides have been thoroughly canvassed. 2. No church, either Protestant or Catholic, has a right to grasp at political power, and such an attempt should be properly resented by citizens of all denominations. THE CHRISTIAN HERALD, on various occasions, has expressed its opinion in opposition to the political claims of the Roman Church. We believe the majority of the American people at heart agree with our opinion, that the church has no business in politics.

Interested, Massachusetts. The plan of making the use of the franchise compulsory is not a new one, but it is by no means a thing likely to happen here soon. Government by compulsion is one of the most difficult and unsatisfactory forms to advocate for an enlightened people; yet compulsory voting exists in Belgium and very recently in Austria, though how it works we are not fully informed. The chief argument in its favor is that it would assure an expression by the ballot of at least a majority of all who are entitled to vote and that it would also be a strong deterrent of corruption in elections.

Reader, Philadelphia. Your friend has evidently made a rash vow and is now anxious to escape its fulfilment. It is unfortunate, but we cannot see that it need be evaded, especially as its observance entails no real hardship upon her. It should be a lesson, however, for the future. Were the vow essentially wrong in its character, it might then be a question whether it should be kept, as a vow that tends to evil is usually a vow made in error or ignorance. Jephthah made a rash vow, which involved the life of his own daughter. If your friend's vow tended to the hurt or injury of any one, or if its observance involved injustice or suffering to others, then she might be justified in seeking to escape from it.

J. S. Chicago, Ill. The man who wrote the paragraph which you enclosed cried through ignorance. The papal Catholic Church in the Argentine does not by reference to the Roman Catholic Church. That church has not a presence until several centuries afterward. The actual Catholic census, however, and that in the sense in which it is to be interpreted by the Court, fully warrants the statement that Argentina is a Catholic country.

E. R. T., Austin, Minn. [illegible] All the references to it in the scriptures are the best of guarantees that it is not been a country of great productiveness. Even yesterday as it has been the scene of desolating wars of famine and of political changes that [illegible] the soil of Palestine is still capable of producing large crops when [illegible] ment of supporting its population. The rains and frosts have not yet [illegible] the early fall has been started the arrival [illegible] traveling has gone into decline more or less. Yet travelers in Palestine in the spring [illegible] wonder over the beauty and fertility of the land, a large part of which is little better than

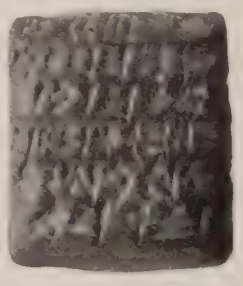
BIBLE-LAND TABLETS

4,000 Years Old, to Be Given to Christian Herald Readers

HOW would you like to hold in your hand a clay tablet inscribed with a message written over four thousand years ago? Not an imitation, understand, but a genuine tablet covered with cuneiform characters placed on it by a scribe who lived in Ur of the Chaldees in the time of Abraham.

How would you like to own such a tablet, to show your friends or exhibit as an evidence of Biblical truth to the members of your Sunday school class?

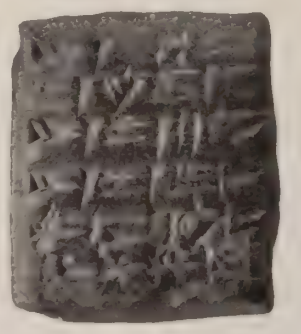
THE CHRISTIAN HERALD offers such an opportunity to its friends, having come into possession of a number of these tablets, pictures of which are shown on this page.



Tablet Made During Reign of Gimil-Sin, 2215-2206 B.C.

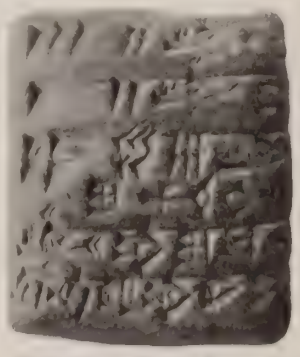
These tablets were dug up by Arabs on the sites of the ancient towns of Drehem and Jokha, near Nippur, in Mesopotamia. Nippur was Calneh, one of Nimrod's cities mentioned in Genesis 10: 10.

Drehem was a place where the archives dealing with the property of the great En-Lil temple of Nippur were located. Jokha, which represents ancient Um-ma, was the city of the god Shara, and these tablets belong to the official records of his temple. The tablets were written and dated in the reign of the kings of the Ur dynasty, 2400-2291 B.C.



Tablet Made During the Reign of Bur-Sin I., 2224-2215 B.C.

The temple, with its hosts of functionaries, priests of various classes as well as tradesmen, had become a great institution. Its records were kept in as complete a form upon tablets of clay, which was the writing material of the age, as similar modern institutions keep them at the present time. The kings who had their capital at Ur, well-known to Biblical students as the home of Abraham, had a uniform method of keeping the records in the various cities of the empire, as the documents found at Tello, Nippur, Drehem and Jokha clearly show. By means of these tablets, excavated in Babylonia, we come in contact with no less than five Babylonian kings of Ur who were contemporary with Abraham. The first of these was Ur-Engur, who reigned 2400-2382 B.C.; the second was Dungi, 2382-2224 B.C.; third, Bur-Sin I, 2224-2215 B.C.; the fourth, Gimil-Sin, 2215-2206 B.C., and the fifth, Ibe-Sin, 2206-2181 B.C. These kings ruled eighteen, fifty-eight, nine, nine, and twenty-five years, respectively.



Tablet Made During Reign of Dungi, 2382-2224 B.C.

These tablets, many of which have been excavated in perfect condition, are regarded by archeologists and Bible students as above price. They relate to life and conditions in Babylonia. They are what are known as "temple records." Every tablet of this class has a history of its own, usually relating to the temple, which in those days was under the control of the reigning monarch. Some tablets deal with the tax on grain and other products; some are instructions to priests or temple servants; others record the payment of salaries from temple stipends; still others are inventories of sheep and goats, and some are records of payments made to messengers who traveled from city to city.

It is only within recent years that we have been able to obtain any reliable information regarding the social, political and religious conditions that surrounded the great founder of the Hebrew race while he dwelt in Ur. Here he married Sarah and here he was surrounded by friends and relatives, including Lot his nephew, who was his companion in his later journeyings. Here he was surrounded by a heathen population worshiping Bel (Baal) and Beltis, his consort, and other gods. Here he must frequently have seen the splendor of Babylonian royalty and the idolatrous worship of heathen gods. Here also he must have been conversant with Babylonian literature and familiar with the wedge-shaped cuneiform writing in which all business and official correspondence was then conducted. These writings were done with a stylus of hard wood or metal with a square end. This was pressed on the soft clay, which was then hardened either by sun-drying or baking. These tablets were the standard writing materials—the stationery—of that far-off age.

Many of the tablets are ruled by the stylus and written on between the lines, every wedge-shaped character standing out as clearly as when it was made on the soft clay under the pressure of the scribe's hand. Some of these styluses must have been very small, as the writing on many of the tablets is quite fine, although clear enough to be read easily by the translators. The clay used contained a great deal of marl or chalk and was free from grit. Whether sun-baked or kiln-dried, it has shown a wonderful power of resistance to decay.

THE CHRISTIAN HERALD has come into possession of a number of these tablets, each one of which has been declared to be genuine by Dr. Albert T. Clay, professor of Assyriology of Yale University, New Haven, Conn., who is an authority on all that relates to cuneiform writing, and who has spent most of his life translating the records of these ancient times.

These tablets are not for sale, but THE CHRISTIAN HERALD will give one to each of its friends upon the following condition:

To any present member of the CHRISTIAN HERALD Family who will induce two friends to subscribe for THE CHRISTIAN HERALD for eight months at one dollar each, we will send one of these tablets free of all charge: Provided we receive the subscriptions not later than April 30.

Each tablet will be accompanied by a general exposition of the message contained upon it, and a facsimile autograph of the authentication given by Professor Clay.

NOTICE: The two subscriptions sent in must be new; that is, they must be in the names and addresses of persons not now on our list.

a ruin. 2. Baptizing for the dead (I Cor. 15: 29) is a difficult passage regarding which there are various interpretations. One is that it may have meant to take the place of the dead saints and continue their work; another, that such a baptism was a solemn dedication to follow the martyred dead even to death. Tregelles claims that the passage means that "we are baptized merely in the name of [for the sake of, or out of regard to] the dead; that is, Christ and the prophets who testified of him."

G. E. P., Kilbourn, Wis., writes: "I notice in your November 12, 1913, issue in the Madura Temple an image of Ganesa with an elephant head, which is accounted for by the legend that his father got angry with him once and cut off his head, but his mother made such a fuss that he was given Jumbo's head for a substitution. He is called the 'elephant god,' and is much worshiped in South India. We have one modeled in plaster given my wife some years ago by Mrs. Sibly, a missionary."

C. F. H., St. Augustine, Fla., writes: "In the January 28 number of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD, I notice the Roman Catholics are to teach their catechism in the public schools, but after hours. The notice says there will be no proselyting, and that the Roman Catholic Association will confine its work to finding out what children do not attend Sunday school, and working with them. President Churchill and Superintendent Maxwell, bless their simple souls, don't they see that is just the finest scheme for proselyting and that it will be done? This is the edge of the wedge that little later on will be driven home. And oh, the feeble protest against this unlawful encroachment on our non-sectarian free public schools. Not a voice raised against this invasion by any non-Catholic denomination! What a despicable, cowardly lot we non-Catholics are! We deserve the collar the Romans are proceeding to fasten on our necks."

We are in receipt of the following poetic greeting from M. A. H., a reader in Richmond, Va., which we heartily appreciate:

May heavenly angels
Their bright wings display,
And guard and guide you
Through every dangerous way.

DISAPPOINTED CROWDS WAITING IN HOPE OF GETTING INTO CARNEGIE HALL

NEW YORK HEARS BILLY SUNDAY

EVANGELIST WILLIAM A. SUNDAY had just closed an eight days' extraordinary campaign in Pittsburg. A $16,000 tabernacle was erected there by co-operative church forces. Something like thirty or forty thousand dollars additional were expended in conducting the work. Thousands of men and women declared themselves determined to live a Christian life. On the last day of the campaign a free-will offering, made without any urging on the part of leaders and amounting, according to reports, to $35,000, was presented to the evangelist. All expenses had been met by the previous offerings, and a surplus of $5,000 left in the joint treasury of the various church organizations. The business element of the city considered the entire outlay the best investment ever made for Pittsburg.

From Pittsburg the evangelist had gone to Sharon, Pa., and was in the midst of a campaign of equal power when the New York Evangelistic Committee announced that at its annual meeting, March 9, to open the season's tent and shop evangelistic meetings, "Billy" Sunday would make the principal address. The appearance of the famous speaker at the inaugurating of this important work was looked forward to as the greatest evangelistic event in New York in a quarter of a century.

BILLY SUNDAY

Thousands, some being men and women intimately connected with the work of the Evangelistic Campaign and others prominent in the church and business world, found themselves unable to enter Carnegie Hall. By a quarter past seven, an exceptionally early hour for New York audiences, the auditorium, which seats about 2,400, was two-thirds filled, and the entrances were jammed by a multitude too immense for the police on duty to handle. It was necessary to close the doors and send for police reserves in order to manage the throngs and admit only those holding tickets. Great confusion and some approach to rioting resulted, and those who finally got into the hall until it was crowded to its capacity and the Fire Department closed the doors, obtained the privilege only by battling for it.

The disappointed throngs outside the building massed on the steps across the wide entrance to the hall and filled the sidewalk in front of the building and most of the roadway and opposite sidewalk, a mere lane being kept for automobiles. Detached groups hurried to the rear entrance, where a crowd was also waiting, and from door to door leading to the various smaller auditoriums in the building, hoping thereby to gain an entrance to the main hall. The crowds in front waiting for a chance to force a way through the doors, passed part of the time in singing hymns, but when all hope of gaining admittance was over they gradually dispersed, many going to the Calvary Baptist Church near by, where a huge overflow meeting was in progress. An eminent churchman who had hoped to be in the audience stood on the outskirts of the crowd watching the efforts made by the police to preserve order, and declared this to be the most remarkable and in some respects inspiring exhibition in connection with a religious meeting that he had ever witnessed. It represented to his mind the strong undercurrent of desire throughout the city for the sound of a plain Gospel. The audience of well-dressed men and women packed in the brilliantly lighted hall was not made up of curiosity seekers. Almost every person present desired to find in "Billy" Sunday an evangelist who could bring New York to its knees; for New York has long been waiting to see and hear the evangelist whose remarkable success in various towns and cities has caused it to be said of him that he is the greatest moral force in the world to-day.

An air of intense expectancy prevailed. On the platform behind the speakers a chorus of five hundred drawn from the choirs of the city churches was massed in tiers to support Mr. Sunday's partner, Homer Rodeheaver, trombonist, in leading the singing. The song service preceding the address and entered into whole-heartedly by the audience was beautiful. The song "If Your Heart Is Right" was especially popular. After preliminary remarks and an introduction, Mr. Sunday at last began his first public address to a New York audience.

The evangelist is of medium height, squarely built, with strong-cut, smooth-shaven face, and looking fifteen years younger than his age of fifty-one. He is constantly in action while speaking, often gesticulating with violence and with a decided resemblance to the motions of a baseball player. "He spoke of God, Jesus and the apostles as men speak of acquaintances they have just left around the corner. As 'Billy' talked on these things they did not seem irreverent," states one paper. He was apt to depict the characters he brought into his remarks by his postures. In using the event of the crucifixion as a topic the evangelist threw himself upon the floor of the platform, and, looking over the edge into the orchestra seat, called down as though from heaven to the Christ upon the cross. The audience was prepared to hear many unconventional things and to have the vernacular of the street freely strewn through the address. In this they were not disappointed; nor were they disappointed to find that the speaker by no means confined himself to the language of baseball or of the street gamin. His delight in points that provoked laughter was contagious, and his intense feeling in driving home some truth by a pathetic illustration moved the audience to tears.

The evangelist chose the incident of the Lord's Supper as given in Matt. 26 for his subject, and the words: "Lord, is it I?" for his text. His free translation was startling to many. "Jesus was on to Judas," he asserted confidently. "He knew what that old Jew was up to, and when every apostle asked 'Lord, is it I?' Jesus said, 'I will hand my sop to the fellow who is going to do me,' and he poked his sop right into old Judas's face."

"I believe in Lent," he declared at another place in the address, "but we ought to keep it three hundred and sixty-five days. If we can do it forty days we can do it for the rest of the time." His quick transition from a familiar handling of Scriptural incidents to such clear-cut statements was frequent. His discourse was directed chiefly at slothfulness in church members. "If there weren't churches in this city, there would not be a decent man or woman alive here in six months, and your real estate would not be worth twenty-five cents on the dollar. You had better keep your churches and make them real churches, not social clubs," was his advice. His denunciations of what he MADE possible by a bequest from the late Phœbe Anna Thorne, the scientific experiment in open-air education begun lately at Bryn Mawr College is progressing satisfactorily. The school, which was briefly described in a recent issue of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD, has been named "The First Temple of the Superwoman." The scholars are fifteen girls of about ten years of age. As the bequest amounts to $150,000, there is plenty of means for increasing the number of girls who are being trained to be the "superwomen" of the future. The present building is only the beginning of a number of similar structures soon to be erected. The fifteen girls have begun a course which is to extend over a period of seven years, when it is expected that the scientific open-air training will have fitted them for the college course in a far better way than the confined class-room education would have done. The "Temple" is a one-story structure that is mostly windows. It is erected on an eminence near the picturesque buildings of Bryn Mawr College proper. In wet weather the windows can be closed; but whenever the days are fine the school is conducted in a room that is practically the open air.

The unique methods employed at this school include the garbing of the children in all-wool suits of Eskimo pattern, so that even in the depth of winter the studies can be carried on in the open. After the school session in the morning the girls are served with a luncheon at eleven o'clock. After this meal, there are games and frolics on the lawn; and when these exercises have tired the children to the sleeping point, they are permitted to take a nap. Cots are provided for their use, and each girl is expected to carry her little bed to the sleeping-place on the lawn, set it up, arrange the bedding and then climb in and go to sleep, or at least keep quite quiet and rest. Class work is resumed after the noon lunch, which includes meat, vegetables and dessert; and after that, the little girls go to the athletic field for games and diversion. The school hours are from nine to three.

The cost of training the children is $100 for the first year, increasing $10 each year to the maximum of $170 in the last or seventh year. These charges comprise everything: lunches, gymnasium suits, etc. The best graduate of the school will win a scholarship of $2,100 that will practically pay her expenses through college. Besides the usual school routine, the girls will be taught to swim, skate, play hockey, tennis, cricket and baseball, and to ride horseback.

One notable feature of the course at the school will be the plastic exercises in which instruction will be given by Placidio de Montollu. The children will be taught to walk musically, to tap their hands and feet rhythmically, and to apply the musical interpretation of their own movements. They will be first taught time by movements of the arm, and time values, or note duration, by movements of the feet and body, until after a few years of training they will be able to express rhythmically, by movement and gesture, music played on the piano, and to sing from note with an accurate sense of pitch. In the floor especially prepared for these musical exercises, the children are to be barefooted.

English history and geography are taught together as closely related parts of the same subject. The children are taught to enunciate correctly and to read clearly and intelligently. Mathematics and drawing are also taught, and the study of air, earth and water is illustrated by various scientific toys to make clear the fundamental conceptions of physics.

French is taught by a combination of the Montessori and phonetic methods. Reading, writing and speaking are taught at the same time. Latin will be begun by the same method in the second year and Greek and German in the fourth.

Two women experts in the work of instructing children are in charge. They are Dr. Kate Gordon of Vassar and Chicago University, and Dr. Mathilde Castro of the University of Chicago, and formerly assistant professor of philosophy in Vassar. Professor James H. Leuba and Associate Professor Clarence Errol Feree, of the department of psychology, will assist. The experiment is being watched by educators and scientists, and may lead to a revolution in school systems.

The girls are absorbed in the thorough good time they are having. They do not throw aside their books and romp away from the school with a whoop of pleasure, as the scholar in the ordinary school is wont to do. From the nine o'clock bell to the three o'clock signal for a cessation of studies school is a source of cumulative enjoyment. Clad in their quaint costume they defy the cold and breathe pure fresh air all day, instead of the overheated, enervating atmosphere of the average class-room. No study is prolonged to the point of tiresomeness. The frolics in the snow give zest to their studies and there is never a monotonous moment.

dynamite and barb-wire," a charge with which, he stated, he never fails to make the devil scurry to cover.

Mr. Stephen Baker, chairman of the evangelistic committee, presided at the meeting. So great was the interest to see and hear Mr. Sunday that 50,000 applications, it was said, were received for tickets. The most prominent Christian leaders of the city were among those present, and the audience as a whole was representative of the religious part of the community. A business man, leader in evangelistic work in the city, declared that the speaker had uttered exactly the right word to New York, and expressed the strong hope that Evangelist Sunday would conduct a campaign in this city. Others were similarly impressed, though scoffers were to be found.

Enthusiasts discussed the meeting in groups aboard cars and suburban trains on their way home. The significance of such a great outpouring of people to hear an evangelist had impressed itself upon almost every one. The conviction seemed to have taken hold of the thoughtful portion of the audience who heard the speaker that, as he himself put it, "If people would only stand up and profess Christ and say, 'Thy will, not my will, be done,' hell would be for rent and the devil would be in the hospital by the Fourth of July. But the modern church is too close to the sins of the world, and there isn't enough spiritual power in a tango dancer to cast out a devil the size of a peanut. The church, our mother, is sick, and we massage her so mildly that she rather enjoys being an invalid."

As the opening event in the new year of the New York Evangelistic Committee the meeting has attracted wide attention to the important work conducted by that organization. This rally begins the tenth campaign of the committee, which has gradually extended its work from the original period of the three summer months, until it is now described as an "all-the-year-round proposition." During the winter its particular work is to send lay preachers to hold special meetings in churches, where assistance is needed. Each spring an evangelistic institute is held for the training of young people in personal work. This year the sessions of the institute are scheduled for the last week in April and the first week in May. During the first week the meetings are to be held in different churches of the Christian Endeavor and Epworth League districts; during the second week, these societies and the Brotherhoods will unite in one center.

THE CITY OF PAUL'S CHILDHOOD

A NEW SERIES OF TRAVELS IN PAULINE LANDS

BY REV. FRANCIS E. CLARK, D.D., LL.D.

Founder and President of the Christian Endeavor Society

BEHOLD MY NECKLACE

A SCORNFUL CAMEL

ANYTHING that bears on the life of the great apostle, any influence which helped to form his character and make him pre-eminently the Christian leader of all the ages, is of peculiar interest to all those who in later ages, like Paul, are the followers of the Nazarene; so we must linger a little longer in his native city, the city where he spent not only the first twelve years of his life, but to which he returned, in all probability, from Jerusalem in his early manhood, and which he visited more than once in later days.

From its earliest days Tarsus seems to have been a cosmopolitan town. The Greek element, under the Seleucid dynasty, was always strong, and brought with it much of art and learning. In later years the Romans exercised lordship over the city and ruled, as usual, with a strong and mighty hand. It is true that in the time of the Roman re-ublic things were at loose ends. But when the monarchical party conquered, ıough the city was benefited by the stronger rule then introduced, it fell for a me under a régime which has been aptly compared to the worst days of ammany in New York City.

This was under the leadership of a certain Boethos, the Boss Tweed of his ay, whom Strabo calls "a bad poet and a bad citizen." To be sure, Boss Tweed as never accused of writing poetry, but in the art of corrupting the politics of city he seems to have taken a lesson from Boethos of old. This corrupt boss f the olden times obtained the favor of Mark Antony by writing some verses hich Strabo thought as bad as his olitics, in which he celebrated the attle of Philippi. This evil state of ffairs was at its height about thirty ears before Paul was born, but un-er the influence of the great phi-osopher Athenodorus, things had reatly improved in Tarsus before hat little lad saw the light, whose ame was destined to outshine that of ne good men and bad men who, rom time to time, had made Tarsus eir home. The influence of Atheno-orus in Tarsus was so overmaster-ıg in its politics, its morals and its terature, that, though nothing is aid about him in the Scriptures, the haracter of the young Paul must ave been influenced by his pure and oble life.

He acquired a peculiar influence, nd that for good, over the emperor æsar Augustus. He was a friend nd mentor of Cicero, who consulted im when writing some of his im-ıortal treatises. He is quoted by eneca with admiration, one of the entences quoted being, "So live with ien as if God saw you; so speak ith God as if men were listening." n another occasion, in his old age, e is said to have given as his last ord of advice to Cæsar, whom he as about to leave, "When you are ngry, Cæsar, say nothing and do nothing until you have repeated to yourself ne letters of the alphabet." It has been suggested, and not without reason, hat, though this greatest pagan citizen of Tarsus died when Paul was a small hild, yet his memory and his sayings so pervaded the community that they ıust have influenced the apostle in his writings, since we see not a few resem-lances in them to the passages quoted by Seneca from Athenodorus. The hilosopher was also the great man of the University of Tarsus, which in aul's time, like the city itself, was no mean institution.

It is not altogether impossible that Paul himself in his young manhood, after itting for years at the feet of Gamaliel, the great Jewish teacher, may have ectured in the University of Tarsus, for the universities in those days were rganized in so loose a way that almost any one whom the students wished to ear, and who could attract an audience, could be heard there. By the fame of arsus and its university many philosophers and poets were attracted to the ty, like Antipater, Artemidorus and Diodorus. As I mention their names, we ealize how absolutely the great men of that time have been forgotten, how ust-covered are their memories and their works; and yet the little Jew who as brought up as a tent-maker, and who plied his needle throughout all his fe, that he might be "chargeable to no man," has won a deathless fame, a fame hich grows brighter and brighter with every succeeding century.

In Paul's own time, Strabo, a famous Latin author, was studying in the uni-ersity, as well as Apollonius the philosopher and Aratus the poet, from whom aul quoted in his famous speech at Athens. To record all the great people of arsus would be impossible, but it is interesting to remember that three hun-red years before Paul's time Alexander the Great visited the city, and, rashly bathing in the icy waters of the Cydnus in the winter time, almost lost his life, shortly before he had conquered this wide world and began to sigh for others to conquer.

Robert Bird, in his interesting life of St. Paul, which he makes particularly vivid by reproducing the scenery and the customs of the past, tells us, and I doubt not with much truth, that when Paul lived in Tarsus the river Cydnus, which gushes forth from a deep cleft in the mountains to the north, "passed through fields of rich red earth for over twenty miles, receiving many little streams on its way to the sea. Small villages, white farms, and dark mud huts were scattered over the plain of pasture lands and fields of grain, hedged vineyards and fruit gardens, some protected with walls of mud and stone, others by dense prickly hedges. Tapering poplar trees, dark cypresses, mulberry, pomegranate, apple, cherry, silver olive, grew by the river side, or cast their shadows round the house doors, while tall shrubs marked the banks of the river water-courses, with branches woven together by the star-like flowers of the clematis, sweet honeysuckle and wild vines, and thus, although the son of a Jew, Paul lived far away from his own country among Greek manners and customs, but under Roman laws, in what would now be called an ancient university city, in a fruitful plain between the mountains and the seas."

This description of the early surroundings of St. Paul, though the author is indebted in part to his imagination, is doubtless correct in its main features.

BEDOUIN SMILING AND ARMED

A HEBREW PATRIARCH OF TO-DAY

But now what a change! During the hundreds of years of Turkish misrule many of the fertile fields have become barren. The loaded fruit trees have been cut down. The Cydnus has formed for itself a new channel, and the old harbor which was white with the sails of many nations is now an unhealthy morass.

When we think of the people of the city, the community which most interests us is the Jewish settlement, for, beyond a doubt, there was in Paul's time a Jewish colony of considerable size in Tarsus. Probably nearly two hundred years before Christ, a company of Jews was sent to Tarsus by Antiochus Ephiphanes when he re-founded the city. Among these Jews were the ancestors of Paul, whose father, or some remoter ancestor, when the Romans succeeded the Seleucid kings, had become a Roman citizen.

Antiochus attempted to force Greek costumes and customs upon the Jews, and not without considerable success. Gymnasia were built in which, according to the Greek fashion, the young athletes practiced naked, a custom of which the Jews strongly disapproved, as promoting immodesty and impurity. He also tried to compel the Jews as well as the other citizens to wear hats, and many young Jews fell in with the prevailing custom. This does not seem to us a heinous crime, but we must remember what Ramsay has so well said, that "the hat has always been and still is an abomination to the true Asiatic. It is still the mark of a European in a Mohammedan land. The uneducated Turks call a European a Shapkali, one with a hat. For Jews to wear the hat was to denationalize themselves."

Still, with all the evils that Hellenic customs may have brought in their train, the cosmopolitan character of the city undoubtedly widened Paul's vision, and made it more possible for him to become the apostle to the Gentiles.

The strong influence of the early surroundings of Paul upon his future life is seen when we remember that the Tarsians were celebrated for the extremely modest dress of their women, who were always deeply veiled when they went abroad. "As Tarsian ladies walked in the streets, you could not see any part either of their face or of their whole person, nor could they themselves see anything out of their path." In this respect they were different from the women of other cities which had been more thoroughly Hellenized. Those early impressions of Paul's childhood doubtless account in part for his strict rules as laid down to the Corinthians about the veiling of their women. "Every woman that prayeth or prophesieth with her head uncovered, dishonoreth her head." In another place he says, "The woman ought to have authority upon her head." This should be translated, we are told, "The woman who has a veil on her head wears authority on her head." Being interpreted, this signifies that "in Oriental lands the veil is the power and the honor and dignity of the woman; with the veil on her head she can go anywhere

GOD'S POWER OR OUR ENDEAVOR

*A SERMON BY REV. RICHARD BRAUNSTEIN

TEXT: "Put on the whole armor of God." Eph. 6: 11

DAVID, the shepherd lad, was preparing to do battle with Goliath, the giant warrior of the Philistines. We read that he tried on Saul's armor, but the war garment of the king did not fit him, so he "put it off." Instead, he went forth in the name of the Lord of hosts, and came out from battle a conqueror. Five smooth stones from the brook and his sling, coupled with his faith in God, was David's equipment. It was the best he had, and he used it. Any man's best and faith in God will gain a victory.

Putting off Saul's armor and putting on the whole armor of God is our present theme. This is the way in which we are to fight the good fight of faith. This is the way in which we are to do moral battle and contend for principles of righteousness and strive to win the kingdom of God. Not Saul's armor, but the armor of God.

God only asks that we do our best. That best may be a very little; our efforts may be but feeble. But if we dedicate them to the Master he will bless and multiply and distribute them. The loaves and fishes in the lad's lunch basket were not a sumptuous repast for the hungry multitude, but when the Master used them and distributed them to the waiting multitude they were more than enough.

How often do we hear men express a desire for the gifts of others! A certain minister of the Gospel went to hear a famous preacher. Returning, he was much discouraged. "If I could only preach like that man!" was his sigh. "I must get his books and read his sermons and try to catch his style!" This was but another example of David trying to wear Saul's armor. The truth of God, spoken in sincerity and from a heart on fire, will be winged by the Holy Spirit and fly swiftly to its mark. God will not suffer his word to be returned unto him void. He honors and blesses his servants everywhere, and the Gospel seeds sown in faith, even by stammering tongues, will find fertile soil and be the means of an abundant harvest. Paul may plant and Apollos may water, but it is God who gives the increase. We cannot use another man's logic, adopt another man's style, borrow another man's rhetoric, much less another man's zeal. Saul's armor will not fit David. But David's best, linked with God's power, will win a rich reward. So the Gospel of Jesus Christ makes all men eloquent. The first sermon ever preached was "We have found the Messiah." It was short, but it brought men to Jesus.

A New Motive Power

Every man and woman has some peculiar faculty of mind and characteristic of personality. God made them so. He can use them all. Tastes, affections, energies, all grow according to a natural law, which cannot be altered. As Luther Burbank takes some wayside vine and puts new blood into its branches, and causes it to bear a new kind of fruit—so man becomes a new creature in Christ Jesus and brings forth the fruit of the Spirit. But the natural, inherent qualities of the mind are not altered. The stream that used to turn the old mill wheel is dry. The steam engine has taken its place. But the old machinery, the old gearing has merely been given a new motive power. In the same way the engine of love to Jesus Christ must act upon and through the peculiar mental machinery of each converted sinner. So the Christian worker must work in his own way. He must fight the fight of faith with his own weapons, but side by side with him is God, holding, sustaining and strengthening him. The armor of God is secure. We who are working in the kingdom—whether we are pastors, Sunday school teachers, or leaders in one or another of the various departments of the energetics of the church, must learn this. What we need is more prayer and more faith—and to learn that the silent partner in all Christian endeavor is the Holy Spirit.

Very often in the preaching of our time we hear the phrase, "keep the fire burning on the family altar." Or this: "People do not pray in the homes as they used to." Perhaps this is not a universal state of affairs. It is true, however, that in many homes the fire of devotion has gone out. No inspiring Scripture are read for a vision for the day. No petition is made for grace and strength to bear the burdens of the long hours. No evening psalm of praise and thanksgiving for spared lives and daily bread received. The day's road is weary, and monotonous, and long. There are lurking temptations around each bend. Satan is ever watching for his prey. The journey from sunrise to sunset is not safe without God. The night is wearisome when he is not near. We hear many parents agree that they are remiss in their duty. Their excuse is that they have not the ability, the gift, the talent possessed by some others, in prayer and reading. They have not Saul's armor. The truth is that not Saul's armor, but the sword of the Spirit, and the armor of God will save our home life. God is not seeking our eloquent petitions, but our sincerity. It is no more difficult to read the sacred Book than it is to peruse the columns of our secular literature and the daily papers.

Telling the Good News

Another great lack in our church life to-day is personal work. There are countless men and women who have found Jesus Christ and are walking in the triumphant path of the Christian life. They are enjoying the fruits of surrendered hearts. They are the possessors of untold wealth, but they do not distribute their riches. They have good news to tell, but they do not publish it. They are holding back the medicine that will heal the sick. They are keeping the light of the world under a bushel. They are supposed to be the salt of the earth, but they are not savory. The world is thirsty, but they are covering up the well. The world is hungry, but the bread of life is not distributed. The world is heavy-hearted and bearing burdens. The world is restless in its gropings for peace, and it is searching for the truth. Men and women come to us and to our churches and they petition us with "Sirs, we would see Jesus!" The world sighs: "Oh that I knew where I might find him!" The Scriptural injunction is "When thou art converted, strengthen thy brethren."

It is not that we do not desire to do anything. Very often we hear earnest people saying: "Oh, if I could only do something!" The exhortation in Revelation is: "Let him that heareth say, Come!" It is not a difficult matter to invite a neighbor to the prayer meeting or to the preaching service. Men and women are waiting for the invitation. They seek an expression of our interest. They want us to tell them that we are interested in them. They are asking us what our church and its message have to offer. Some are even asking: "Can any good come out of Nazareth?" O men and women, you who have found the Christ, tell them to come and see!

Finding Souls for Christ

The first chapter of John has been called the "Finder's chapter." John found Jesus, Jesus found Philip, Philip found Nathanael and Andrew found Peter—and no sooner had Andrew found Christ than he went and told his brother. This is how the Christian Church began. Two men—and each found his brother. Two and two make four. The great work of Jesus was not primarily preaching and teaching and working wonders. It was a work of finding men, fitting men, calling men one by one. That is our business. We are to go and find our brethren. "God's pathway," says a recent writer, "to one heart is through another heart. It is the private soldier that wins the battle. We are the wire for the transmission of the current." Science instructs us that every atom in the universe acts on every other atom, but only by acting on the atom nearest. Paul says: "Unto the Jews became I a Jew, that I might gain the Jews; I am become all things to all men that I may by all means save some."

Christians will do well to read that classic sermon of Horace Bushnell's on "Individual Influence." The world is waiting for us to give it the key so that it may sing the doxology of the redeemed. It is looking for the path that leads to the Father's house. We are to be the pathfinders. The reply of the missionary who was asked the best way of reaching the full-blooded Indian, went to the matter's root. He said: "Send after them a full-blood Christian." We may not have the peculiar faculti for soul-winning possessed by some of the gre evangelists we read about. Whatever their peculi faculties and methods or talents, we could not u them, however much we might desire to do so. The was a motive power, however, that set those fa ulties at work, and gave those talents we admire much an impetus. That motive power was a hea on fire with the constraining love of Jesus Chri and a definite religious experience. They had marvelous story to tell of regenerated lives and si forgiven, hearts cleansed and souls filled wi peace. Not Saul's armor, but God's. The smoo stones from the rushing torrent of your love f your neighbor, the sling of an abounding faith God's power to save—and the Goliath in the hea of sinning men and women will be slain!

If you cannot cross the ocean and the heathen lands explo
You can find the heathen, you can find them at your door;
If you cannot speak like angels, if you cannot preach like Pa
You can tell the love of Jesus, you can say he died for all.

We are told that Jesus erected three monumen to humble service, namely: A cup of cold water, widow's two mites and the gift of spikenard whi the woman brought to him. In each instance w have an illustration of somebody's best—"she hat done what she could." In the kingdom of God w can all do something. In the energetics of the fait there is no room for ciphers.

There are hidden possibilities in every soul. Jesu had surpassing confidence in the qualities of ord nary folks. He trusted the common man uncon monly. He saw the errors, but he also saw th humble expressions and efforts of human sou seeking a way to serve him. Our stammerin speech, our limited capacity, the feeble outpouring of our hearts, he blesses each endeavor. Throug contact with him we find full expression. H touches the common chord, and lo, there pours fort a strain of music, and life becomes a symphon filled with harmony. There are many things w need. What we most need he gives. He makes th impossible possible. The man with the withere hand hears and obeys: "Stretch forth thine hand.

Doing Our Best Where We Are

We often sigh for a larger opportunity for se vice. We want a larger school in which to teach, larger church in which to preach, and a larger fiel in which to exercise our ability for usefulness. Go wants us where we are because he can use us in tha particular place. Location matters very little. Th important thing that matters most is what we ar We can be leaders in our own community, if nc leaders we can do what we can do. Professor Davi Smith writing to young pastors in the Britis Weekly said: "Never let your surroundings se your standards. Put your heart and soul int every sermon. Study as diligently for fifty peasant in the little sanctuary of a poor hamlet as for thronging multitude in a cathedral. Prepare an preach your sermons as 'unto him.' Remembe always that the King is in the audience." This i good counsel for everybody. Let us not despis the commonplace. The commonplace tasks an daily rounds, the routine and duty, include th essentials of life. Where we are, there is God t bless. The King is a witness of our endeavor.

The Spirit of God working through you wil transmute the base metal of your life into pur gold, and you shall work miracles. The world wil be glad because you have passed down its dust lanes. Equipped with holy vesture, you will sla the Goliaths of human woe, and leave behind yo psalms of praise and thanksgiving. In your dail walks men will witness the power of the Infinite Your consecrated efforts shall make the desert plac of your community a bower of roses. All thing shall become new, your school, your church, you social life, because you are filled with the Spirit o God.

The moon and the stars are commonplace things,
And the flower that blooms and the bird that sings;
But dark were the world and sad our lot,
If the flowers failed and the sun shone not;
And God, who studies each separate soul,
Out of commonplace lives makes his beautiful whole.

DAILY MEDITATION

FOR EVERY DAY IN THE YEAR, BASED ON THE WORDS OF JESUS

BY PROFESSOR W. H. T. DAU

SUNDAY, March 29. Matthew 13: 45, 46. "Again, the kingdom of heaven is like unto a merchantman, seeking goodly pearls: who, when he had found one pearl of great price, went and sold all that he had, and bought it." Again, there is a "finding" in the kingdom of God that has been preceded by previous unrest and anxious search. Here is a merchantman engaged in the pearl-trade. He has secured a goodly number of pearls, but they do not satisfy him. They are not what he wants. Every age has known seekers after the highest, the best, the noblest. Men have searched far and wide for the truth that would still the longing of a heart that had, ah! so often, been disappointed by the gems of literature, the jewels of the art gallery, the pearls of song and music. To many all these delights have proven glittering gewgaws of this world's vanity. They attract for a while, but they afford no lasting delights. Men tire of them, and begin to look about aimlessly for something better. Not that they have any clear idea of what they want; for that would mean that they had already found it in their mind. There is no such thing as a natural longing for Christ in the unregenerate. It is mere discontent, dissatisfaction with their present condition, that fills them, and this state of mind divine grace appropriates and leads the person to the pearl of great price, the matchless beauty of Christ and that righteousness which comes by his grace to those who believe in him. To obtain that is worth any sacrifice. Even if it should cost the purchaser his rank in the world of letters, science, art, commerce, he is glad to part with what he had in view of what he is getting.

MONDAY, March 30. Matthew 13: 47-50. "Again, the kingdom of heaven is like unto a net, that was cast into the sea, and gathered of every kind: which, when it was full, they drew to shore, and sat down, and gathered the good into vessels, but cast the bad away. So shall it be at the end of the world." This parable carries us forward to the hour of consummation that is coming for the kingdom of God. It reinforces in a way the parable of the tares among the wheat. As yet, the fishermen of Christ are plying their nets in every sea and lake and river and brook of humanity, catching souls of men with the gracious invitation of the Gospel. As yet, the grace of God which makes all things new offers to change the natural perverseness of every hearer of the Gospel, and transform even bad into good fish. But the days of the kingdom are numbered. This is the lesson of the parable. A day of sifting and separation will come as surely as there are now days of casting and drawing in the net. The just will be winnowed from the chaff of the wicked; the hypocrite and the time-believer will be cast out from the company of the sincere believers, and will have his hypocrisy and hardness of heart while he was outwardly under the influences of converting and sanctifying grace visited upon him in the despair of the eternally lost. God keep us from such a fate! Now is the accepted time; now is the day of grace for you!

TUESDAY, March 31. Matthew 13: 51, 52. "Have ye understood all these things? Therefore every scribe which is instructed unto the kingdom of heaven is like unto a man that is an householder, which bringeth forth out of his treasure things new and old." This question of Jesus is addressed to us just as it was to the disciples two thousand years ago. Our heavenly Scribe has laid before us in striking, often startling, imagery the affairs of his kingdom. He has, as it were, pressed all nature and the secular pursuits of men into service, to illustrate to our dull and sluggish understanding the greatest and most blessed truths with which our mind can deal. Have we grasped his meaning? Have we rejoiced at his instruction? Have we thanked him for the light that his beautiful parables have thrown on matters that vitally concern us and his entire church? God grant that from all of us there may come a cheerful, ringing "Yea, Lord!" in reply! Another lesson we may take away from our meditations on these parables. This parable-method of teaching is a tried method. Many who have been "scribes instructed unto the kingdom" have adopted it after Christ, and have ministered unto the people of their time and place heaven's golden apples in earth's silver baskets. For that, says Solomon, is what a word fitly spoken is like. We who are stewards of the mysteries of God should make it very easy for men to understand us as Christ made it easy for men to understand him.

WEDNESDAY, April 1. Luke 9: 58. "Foxes have holes, and birds of the air have nests; but the Son of man hath not where to lay his head." This is the answer which Jesus gave to an applicant for discipleship, who had probably been attracted by the parables of Jesus. The answer is repelling. How does this action of the Lord harmonize with his own declaration: "Him that cometh to me I will in no wise cast out"? Jesus desires that the act by which men unite with him, with the company of his believers, be intelligently taken. He does not want to gain followers under false pretenses. He wants every disciple to count the costs of consistent allegiance to Christ. He has nothing to offer men in a worldly way. And though he could draw upon inexhaustible resources of wealth, he would not bribe any one with such means to become his follower, for such followers would not love him but the things which they got or expected from him. The life of Jesus must be spent in the humblest kind of service. In order the better to execute his mission, he has discarded all glory. Like master, like servant. Whoever shrinks from discipleship on these terms had better stay out of Jesus' company; for he would be sadly disappointed. This remark of Jesus states what his followers must be ready to take upon themselves. It does not forbid them to own houses and estates in this world. However, if their discipleship makes it necessary for them to forsake all these things, they must be ready to do so. We remember in this connection the lesson which Paul points in II Cor. 8: 9 by means of the poverty of Jesus.

THURSDAY, April 2. Luke 9: 59, 60. "Follow me. Let the dead bury their dead: but go thou and preach the kingdom of God." Here is one whom Jesus himself invited to discipleship, but who was not willing to sacrifice every other relationship to the requirements of his membership in the society of Christ. He is a cautious, calculating person, and his excuse sounds quite plausible and seems to do honor to his filial devotion. In his reply to this person Jesus does not cancel the commandment which he himself issued: "Honor thy father and thy mother"; but he implies that the service to be rendered to his parent's corpse would be rendered by more congenial people, and that this service would be connected with many circumstances unfavorable to his discipleship: the legal time of mourning, the disposition of his father's estate, etc. While engaged in these things he might forget the summons of his living Master and lose the privilege of discipleship entirely. "Some," remarks Luther, "pretend good works which they must do and which keep them from following Jesus and believing in him. But Christ declares such works dead and futile works." In the days of the martyrs this command of the Lord often had to be obeyed literally. In our own more peaceful times secular duties apparently as imperative as that of burying a dead father may be suggested to us as reasons, or excuses, why we cannot follow Jesus just at the time or to the extent we are asked. Let us on such occasions search our motives, and we will find that the Lord here has spoken with excellent wisdom though with seeming harshness.

FRIDAY, April 3. Luke 9: 62. "No man, having put his hand to the plow, and looking back, is fit for the kingdom of God." These words are in reply to a third applicant, in whose request for discipleship there is a tragic note. He wants to take formal leave of his family. He must cut tender family ties. He may never come back to the dear folks at home any more. He is overwhelmed with the sadness of the occasion. It is likely that there will be little joy for him in the new relation into which he is about to enter. This accounts for the rather curt reply of the Lord to this would-be disciple. The man's affections still center in his old associations. Those associations will again assert themselves and draw the man's attention away from the work which the Master may assign him. Like the dreaming plowman who stalks his furrows with his thoughts anywhere but on his work, this person will do slovenly work. This triple episode at the end of Luke 9 is a practical reminder to every one who calls himself a disciple to examine his standing with the Lord. If we have not heretofore surrendered ourselves wholly to the Lord at all hazards, if with Lot's wife we have wistfully looked back upon what we must renounce, if we have dallied with the affairs of the kingdom, we are in great spiritual danger. It may be said to us: You are not fit for the kingdom of God. The Master can dispense, and does dispense, with every half-hearted follower, as Gideon dispensed with the greater part of his warriors.

SATURDAY, April 4. Mark 4: 35. "Let us pass over unto the other side." Like many of the recorded utterances of the Lord this one too seems so utterly commonplace that we wonder why the Evangelist had to register this remark. Well, if it seems a perfectly natural remark, it affords a glimpse of the perfectly natural and thoroughly human conversation of the Son of God among the sons of men. But when the connection is examined, the remark is seen to contain a good deal of meaning. The sermon of the parables was over. It was getting late. The Lord had done a full day's work. Retirement and rest seemed to be in order now, also for those who had listened to him. The Lord is about to take a rest, but he asks some labor yet from his disciples. He wants to be taken across the lake. No special preparations are made for the journey. Presently they are off, and a pleasant journey seems before them. The Master retires to the rear of the ship and is soon asleep. The crew may have gathered at the other end and in subdued whispers gone over the events of the day. It is a little idyl, this scene on the Galilean Sea after the day of the parables. It may be classed with the brief moments of rest which God vouchsafes his children amid the duties of their calling, when they retire to meditate upon the great things which they have witnessed. And the words at the head of the meditation may also remind us of the great rest which comes to the disciple who finally and completely "passes over unto the other side." "May there be no moaning at the bar, when I put out to sea." If only Jesus is in the boat, then all is well.

An Opportunity for Service

THE CHRISTIAN HERALD is frequently in receipt of letters from poor pastors, missionaries and others engaged in the Lord's work in districts where there is ample need of such service, but very little money. It is surprising how some of these earnest workers in the Master's vineyard struggle along, patiently and faithfully, year after year, on incomes which are precarious at best and which at no time are sufficient to afford more than a bare living. They write to us asking whether some good Christian who is blessed with means would not be willing to spare enough to send them a presentation subscription of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD for a year. We have a number of such applications now on our list, and would be pleased to have the co-operation of any of our readers who desire to help them in this way. THE CHRISTIAN HERALD will put all subscriptions of this class at a specially low rate. This is an attractive field for doing real Gospel service. A dollar will give THE CHRISTIAN HERALD for a whole year to any poor pastor or home missionary on this continent, and it will assure the hearty gratitude of the recipient for the donor's kindness.

WHERE THE TORRENT PASSED THROUGH A TOWN

AN AUTOMOBILE HIGHWAY AFTER THE FLOOD

THE CALIFORNIA FLOOD

SUNDAY, January 25, 1914, will long be remembered in the old Mission town of Santa Barbara, beautiful for location, the sea on one side and towering mountains on the other. On this date the greatest storm of its history passed over it, and terrible havoc was wrought. For a few days the place was practically cut off from the world, all telegraph and telephone wires being prostrate and train schedules annulled. Many felt uneasiness Sunday evening, but were totally unprepared for the devastation which met the eyes on the following Monday. The rains had begun on Friday.

In place of Beautiful Oak Park (which was a marvel in its magnificence of live oaks), was a vast lake of muck, sand and rocks. Through streets deep cañons and chasms had been cut, and buildings overturned and carried down the stream. For miles along the boulevard were strewn tree-trunks, household furniture, asphalt and other wreckage, cast there by the tide. In the beautiful suburb of Montecito, Old Town was swept away. A Spanish-speaking woman describes her experience thus in broken English: "The water burst in my house and before I could know to act it was up to my waist. I pick up my little girl with one arm, because the other was broken and tied, and carry her to a place high up from the water. Then I go back for my littlest boy and take him across, but once I fall. Again I go back for the other boy; he must hold tight around my neck or he fall; something pull my dress, I look down; it was my little dog. I gather him in my apron and hold it with my teeth. I stumble and think maybe I will be carried away. When I see Victor, my fourteen-year-old boy, fall and I cannot help him. I think if he drown I feel like shot myself, but two men run and pick him up; then I see no more, but soon remember that my husband and my oldest boy, Solomon, are in the storm some place and maybe in danger. In five minutes my house all gone and now in its place is a rock-pile. To-day my little boy say: "Mother, I think yesterday, if you and Victor drown, I, too, will throw myself in the water."

Some houses were turned on end and partially hidden by the trunks of great trees, while a raging torrent swept through the street. Great boulders, hundreds of them, some eight feet in diameter, filled gulches where the day before was a paved road or a lawn. Waterpipes were twisted around the trunks of trees. It is said that boulders, three tons in weight, floated down the streams as pebbles. Furniture was strewn everywhere. The bodies of eight horses were found in the indiscriminate wreckage.

A WONDER SPOT IN BEAUTIFUL MONTECITO

It will probably take years to repair Mountain Drive and Rock-Riven Roa two noted automobile highways, now seamed with gorges and choked with rock

The most tragic feature of the great disaster was the death of the presider of the Chamber of Commerce, Mr. Louis Jones, and his wife. They were a the Country Club when a message reached them that their house was i danger. Meanwhile, Dr. Parks, a friend of the family, thinking that the Jon home might be in danger, had gone over and taken the four children and th servants to his own house. He then took up the receiver to telephone the fathe and mother that he had their children in safety, when th telephone became dead in his hands. Had the wire he a moment longer two lives might have been spared. N knowing that their children were safe, the anxiou parents started home in their automobile. They soo found that they must abandon this vehicle. Walkin back to a hotel, they borrowed a lantern, intending walk home. Friends implored them to remain, but the met all entreaties with the firm answer: "Our childre are in danger; we must go."

How they met their death is not definitely known; it supposed that the bridge over Hot Springs River gav way while they were crossing it. Mr. Jones's body wa hurled against a tree-trunk. The following morning was found, and a little way from it lay a lady's ve Three fingers pointing upward through the drifted sar revealed where the body of Mrs. Jones lay.

Not far from where the bodies of these heroic paren were found was a line of wreckage deposited by violen turbulent streams when the bridges gave way. Insic of this was a second line of wagons and automobiles he fast by the mud and sand and other débris.

A forest ranger, who was stationed where he could s the flood form, believes it was caused not so much l cloud-bursts as by the continued rains that loosene slides at the head of every gulch and arroyo. The masses of débris were washed into the creek-beds, sto ping up the channels, forming dams. The abnormal rai fall filled these accidental reservoirs until the weight the water was too great for the walls of débris to ho back. One after another they broke, sending dow through every channel seething torrents to swell th larger waterways.

This explanation is corroborated by county surveyo and supervisors. As a preventive they would have all th creek channels closely watched and always kept clear trees, logs and general débris. ROSE N. CUNNINGHAM.

THE LIGHT SHINING IN DARKNESS

THOUGHTS SUGGESTED BY THE OPENING OF THE NEW ITALIAN EVANGELICAL CHURCH IN ROME

BY REV. ALEXANDER ROBERTSON, D.D., VENICE

THROUGH the munificence of the late Mr. Stewart Kennedy and of Mrs. Kennedy, of New York, a magnificent evangelical church, in connection with the Waldensians, has been opened in Rome. The symbol of that church is a burning candle with the motto, Lux lucet in tenebris, and truly in Italy "the light is shining in the darkness"; truly in Italy "the darkness is passing and the true light now shineth."

How great a change has taken place in Rome during the last half century! It is almost impossible for travelers in Rome to realize that but little more than fifty years ago there was no kingdom of Italy. Up till March, 1861, Italy was what Prince Metternich described it, "a geographical expression," and the idea of Rome becoming its capital was considered "an enthusiast's dream." Yet on March 14, 1861, on the motion of Count Cavour, the kingdom of Italy was created, and on March 21, on the initiative of Cavour, Rome was declared its capital, to become so in reality on September 20, 1870, when the temporal power of the Pope was overthrown, never again to be restored.

It is also difficult for travelers to realize the change that has come over Italy since then. During these few years she has gone from idleness to industry, from ignorance to knowledge, from poverty to wealth, from crime to virtue, from darkness to light, from death to life. But in this paper I wish to confine myself to Rome, and say a few things in regard to it, suggested by the erection of a new evangelical Italian church in connection with the Waldensians.

Up to 1870 there was no evangelical church in Rome. Pope Pius IX declared he never would allow such a thing to be erected in the city, and he kept his word. There were no Bibles either. Travelers arriving at the Rome railway station were met by the agents of the priests, who ransacked their luggage, taking possession of Bibles and Testaments, of books and newspapers, which they sa would be restored to the travelers when they le the city. There was no Bible in the Vatican. Wh Dr. Döllinger asked for one when discussing t Pope's infallibility, none could be given him, and last one was procured from the Prussian Legatio Up to 1870 evangelical Italians were liable to apprehended, imprisoned, and put to death. English service was held in a building outside t walls, and on Sundays papal spies were there to s who entered it, and if any Italians did so, to appr hend them. When Gavazzi entered Rome on Se tember 20, with the Italian troops, he went at on to the Pope's prisons in Castle Angelo and the he tells us, he found human bones and hair bei consumed by quicklime, evidently those of rece papal victims. Then there was no security life and property; no sanitation; no lighting the streets at night; the death-rate was fifty p

A THOUSAND LIVES FOR CHRIST

IT IS not chance that places a thousand homeless Chinese children within the reach of Christianizing influence through THE CHRISTIAN HERALD: it is Providence. God, who knows the hearts of all men, has entrusted these helpless, homeless lives in a foreign land to the tender pity of the CHRISTIAN HERALD Family. In his wisdom he has laid this burden, as it were, upon our doorstep. He knows that we, as a family, have enough and to spare. He knows what hearts among us will respond to this request from him that we suffer these little ones—saved from heathendom by their very helplessness—to come to him. And he knows far better than we can even guess what a power in the spreading of the Gospel these thousand Chinese boys and girls may become—if we "forbid them not."

The invitation to have some part in the care and education of this little army brought to us, not by their own will, but by the will of God, is to every reader of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD. You may send a dime; you may make up a dollar by penny gifts; you may send a self-denial gift of two dollars, or five, or twenty. And whatever you send will be spent wholly upon one or more of these 1,005 children now dependent for their every need upon us.

All the letters which bring gifts for this beautiful work reflect genuine interest in it.

"Enclosed is one dollar for the China Orphan Fund. It is a grand good object. Wish I felt able to send more, but hope every little helps the cause," writes "A friend who loves THE CHRISTIAN HERALD." But she loves Christ and would bring these little ones to him.

"The enclosed check for five dollars please use for the China Orphan Fund. May you receive many more until there is sufficient to carry on the good work is the prayer of the giver. E. M." This is a typical letter, and the prayer shows that God himself is behind these gifts.

Mr. and Mrs. J. B. N., of Iowa, writes: "Enclosed find a contribution to the China Orphan Fund. The Lord bless them, and may they become earnest workers in the vineyard of the Lord."

That these little ones are upon the hearts of our readers is shown by such letters as this from M. J. H., Pennsylvania: "I have thought many times when I looked at the bright faces of your China Orphan children that I would like to have a hand in the work, but where was the money? There are always so many demands. The thought came to me to use the contents of my 'Thankful Box.' I brought it out and counted the money, and there was just one dollar. My mother and I started a thankful box and kept it up from year to year. It helped us to take more notice of our blessings. Since she has gone to her reward I have continued to keep it. I am happy to send the contents of the box to you to-day."

E. E. D., Knoxville, Tenn., in sending a gift of $2 for the Orphan Fund, writes: "I am very much interested in the orphans and missionary work, and I hope this small gift may help a little." "May the Lord's blessing go with this," is the prayer of Mrs. A. J. C., of Clinton, N. C., who sends $1 to the fund, while E. J. C., of Chariton, Iowa, who encloses $5, writes in a similar spirit of enthusiasm. Address China Orphan Fund, THE CHRISTIAN HERALD, Bible House, New York.

THE EXTREMITY

BY ROBERT C. V. MEYERS

OLD POLLY WARDLE went along the road with lowered eyes. She was known as a cheerful woman, though this morning there was a listlessness about her which scarcely consorted with a happy frame of mind. At a bend in the road she stopped to breast a sudden gust of wind which slanted her hood to one side.

"I've lost my grip," she said, "me that always keeps sayin' 'man's extremity is God's opportunity.' Only words! It's the rent, that's what it is."

"Whoa!" Dan, the pedler, reined up beside her sharply. "Polly, you were right under the mare's nose. Wind made you keep your head down, I guess. Bad weather for Jinny's back, ain't it?" Jinny was Polly's granddaughter, home from the hospital after a month there on account of a fall on the way to the factory.

"She'll come out all right now she's with you," the man added. "You're one o' the chirpy ones—you always say cheerfulness'll help us through, every time."

"That's so," she agreed. "I always say that."

"It does me good to meet you on my rounds," Dan went on. "You kind o' make me glad every time I see you and sure things'll go my way."

"Hope you're doin' fine this trip," she returned, her eyes straying to the wagon, whose glass sides disclosed a promiscuous assortment of feminine finery.

"Can't complain," he told her. "Advertisin' does something'. Got out a circ'lar. It's a hummer." He rummaged in his pockets. "No, I ain't got any left. Give a lot to Mr. Maginnis. Say, I sold all my picture books to him. To-morrow's his birthday, and he's celebratin' by givin' a picture book to every mortal kid he knows of. It's the new libr'y done it—he says if Carnegie can give a buildin' to readers of books, he can give books to them that can't read. He's your landlord, ain't he?"

Polly nodded. She was fingering the fifty-cent piece in her jacket pocket. The glass wagon was alluring. It certainly held something Jinny would like. But, then, she was going to the store for necessities and could not afford a cent for anything else.

"Powerful rich, ain't he?" Dan was asking. "Maginnis, I mean. He owns the quarry down yonder. I tell you them contractors make big money. They say his wife's covered with jewelry. Don't want anything?—breastpins, lace handkerchers, 'broidered collars, ribbons?"

"Guess not," Polly answered lingeringly, still fingering the fifty-cent piece.

"Well," said Dan, "give my respects to Jinny. Wish I had one o' them circ'lars, she'd liked it. Glad to ha' met you, Polly." He gathered up his lines, and jolted away.

Jinny! if she could only have bought something for her, thought Polly. Jinny, who must be worried about the rent due to-morrow. "Never before have I been without the money, and I've lived in the house thirty years, long before Maginnis owned it. I'm old and poor, I see that for the first time."

Old and poor! Of course she had the pension of a soldier's widow, though that kept her and Jinny only in food, while her sewing made up the rent. But for weeks there had been no sewing. It seemed to stop all at once, and Jinny not working—

"Good morning, Polly!" It was the minister driving by. "See the dark clouds," he said. "They mean snow. I hope your granddaughter is doing well." He looked closer at her. "I knew there was a difference in you—you are without your glasses."

"Broke 'em this mornin'," she replied, resolving to be more guarded in the expression of her face.

"Glad to have met you," he said. "You always hearten me, and a country pastor's way has its discouragements at times. I remember you once said a smile reaches farther than a word. And there's your other saying, that if we're not wickedly weak we can be cheerful. But I'll move on; they're recarpeting the church, and I'm overseeing the job. Remember me to your granddaughter. I'll see you both soon," and he was gone.

"My glasses made a difference in me, did they?" muttered Polly. That was something else, her glasses; she had broken them at breakfast time, her hands trembled so in putting them on, and where was the money to come from to replace them? "But that's nothing alongside o' the rent—"

"Why, if there isn't Happy Polly!" sang out a merry young voice. The doctor's daughter was hurrying by, her cheeks like roses from contact with the wind. "I'm on my way to town," she flung over her shoulder. "Cold, isn't it?"

Polly looked after her. "The same age as Jinny," she said, "and well and chirpy, and—oh, it's that rent that makes everything seem hard. And maybe there won't be any sewin' next month, either! And Jinny will call herself a load on me—Jinny, my only one, the child of my dead boy, the child whose mother died years ago!" She could not stifle the groan that rose to her lips—then looked around to see if any one was near and heard it.

A little while later Polly was opposite the library building only recently completed. She looked at it. So much money in that, and she without her rent! A man with a sheaf of papers in his hand came from the doorway. She knew him—it was her landlord, big and prosperous. Here was her chance to confess that she would not be able to pay him what she owed him. But something choked back her speech, and she started on, though Maginnis saw her and came down the library steps, calling to her.

"It's me swateheart Polly," he said. "Polly that's often give me blues a twist and banished 'em forever, like Saint Patrick done to snakes in ould Ireland. Lookin' at the libr'y? Grand, ain't it? And right across from a field that'll build up now in houses. Andy Carnegie's a dandy boy, he is." He placed his broad fist on her shoulder. "Polly, if we can't do much we can do as much as we can; you're always chareful, that's what you're doin', and doin' more for that grandchild o' yours. To-morrow's me birthday, and this libr'y's set me thinkin' I can do somethin' too. Look at this!" He lowered his arm to select a paper from among those in his hand, but dropped them all and had much to do gathering

Waiting on Mexico

TWO strong voices have been raised lately in behalf of intervention in Mexico. In the United States Senate, Mr. Fall of New Mexico has presented a list of over sixty American and British subjects who, he declared, have been done to death by the rival forces across the border within a comparatively recent period. He claimed that the President "knows absolutely nothing about Mexican conditions and has been misled in every move he has made." This broad assumption, together with the fact that at least one man on Senator Fall's list has telegraphed that he is not dead, will cause the average citizen to hesitate about accepting the Senator's conclusions without fuller inquiry.

The other voice raised in behalf of a change in our Mexican policy was that of Governor Colquitt of Texas. Investigation has shown that the rumored invasion of Mexico by Texas rangers did not take place, and that the body of Clemente Vergara, the ranchman and American citizen who was lured across the border and killed by Federalists, was recovered by a party of friends at the request of his relatives. The Texas executive, however, claims for his State the right of self-defense in the event of insufficient government protection in the future.

This is not a time for belligerent speeches, but for calm and wise counsel. That Texas is by no means a unit in support of Governor Colquitt's attitude is proved by many telegrams from representative citizens of that State, received in Washington, the writers of which stand by the President. Any rash step now, especially anything in the nature of a raid, would be a capital blunder. It is unfortunately true that Americans and others have suffered through lawlessness in Mexico, and that the assurances given by Huerta, Carranza and Villa for the protection of life and property have thus far been practically valueless. But existing conditions cannot continue indefinitely. To throw patience to the winds in the present state of affairs would be a grievous mistake. The country will not be misled by the clamorers for intervention. It stands by the President, believing that the solution of the Mexican problem, when it does come, will justify our attitude of "watching and waiting," instead of adopting measures which could only result in far greater sacrifices.

Standing by Your Colors

AN ODD bit of news crept into the papers the other day, stating that a religious badge of some sort was found on the chopping block of a butcher shop which had been robbed. The presence of the emblem near the rifled safe led the detectives to believe that the burglar, feeling the conflict between his conscience and his desire, laid aside the sign of his faith before proceeding with his crime.

Whether or not the detectives were right in their conjectures about this man, it is certain that many people frequently do that very thing—lay aside their religion temporarily that they may break, not necessarily the eighth commandment, but some other item of the laws of God. It is a cowardly and ridiculous procedure. If colors are worth showing it is worth while being true to them.

Opinions differ about wearing religious regalia or emblems. To many Christians, a Salvation Army uniform, a Gideon or St. Andrew's or Y. M. C. A. button, a Christian Endeavor or Kings Daughters' pin is a pleasant and helpful sight. It gives visibility to the armies of the King of kings; it shows that people are not ashamed of their allegiance to Jesus Christ. Others who do not care to wear the outward symbol are glad to believe that the name of Christ is written in their hearts and strive to exhibit the signs of a Christian in faith and word and act. But whether the sign is outwardly or inwardly worn we must be true to it every hour.

Some professed followers of Christ say, in the rush and press of business: "This is not what Christ would do nor what a Christian ought to do, but it is necessary now, so I will do it." Sometimes a young Christian will say: "I cannot really believe the Master will approve of my indulging in this amusement, but for this hour the call of pleasure is too strong. Let me forget for a while that I am a Christian. When the pleasure is ended I will think of it again." Often when a hard duty waits the courage of a sturdy Christian some one will say: "Christ would do that, and his voice is calling me to do it. But it is too hard. In this particular instance I will not follow him. The next duty, if it is easier, I will take up."

Pictures from real life, these are, are they not? Are they pictures from your life? If they are, think of the contemptible figure of that burglar, laying aside a badge of faith and then proceeding to rob a safe. Christ said: "If any man will come after me, let him deny himself, and take up his cross daily, and follow me." It means much to be a Christian. It means sacrifice and effort and courage and fidelity. To defeat the forces of evil arrayed against Christ's cause there is need of Christians who are, moment by moment and day by day,

True-hearted, whole-hearted, faithful and loyal.

Farm Work for the Unemployed

GOVERNOR GLYNN, of New York, has devised a plan for dealing with the problem of unemployment in the metropolis which has the merit of practicality. It is his belief that, at this season of the year, with spring at hand, the farmers of the State can supply work to 200,000 able-bodied men. Every winter attracts to New York large numbers of the honest unemployed as well as hobos. The only reliable test, therefore, is that of willingness to work when work is offered. Now, the Governor proposes to transport by rail, free, to the farming districts carloads of those men who are willing to work, and to bring them in contact with the employers, the whole arrangement being under the auspices of the State Commissioner of Agriculture. Married men will be invited to take their wives along with them, as the Governor believes women can readily find employment at housework. Of course, a good deal of the success of the plan will depend upon whether the men sent into the farming districts have had any experience which would fit them for agricultural labor. The average mechanic or trained worker, or even the unskilled helper, cannot be expected to turn his hand to the activities of the farm without training, however, willing he may be; hence, at the outset his labor would be comparatively of little value. Then, there may be expectations of figures which would be quite beyond the power of the average farmer to pay. Besides, the farmers' work is from sunrise to sunset from spring to fall. It would be a radical change to those who are accustomed to working in cities, but for the sake of the unemployed,we hope the plan may work out successfully and be a means of relieving the labor congestion of the metropolis.

Billy Sunday

NEW YORK has heard Billy Sunday at la[st]. For several years the baseball evangelist h[as] been stirring big audiences and conducting ma[m]moth revivals throughout the country, but it w[as] not until March 9 that the metropolis had its fi[rst] opportunity of measuring the man who had be[en] storming the strongholds of sin so successfully el[se]where. In point of numbers, his New York déb[ut] was a marked success. Indeed, it was somewh[at] overdone, for the disappointed who could not fi[nd] admittance at Carnegie Hall were far more nume[r]ous than the audience inside. His sermon was [a] characteristic one, a trenchant reminder to chur[ch] members of their shortcomings, couched in langua[ge] that no evangelist but Sunday could use on a pl[at]form, and replete with colloquialisms of the b[as] field, which were flung home with a stalwart musc[u]larity. It was hot shot all the way through for s[aints] and sinners; rich sinners and poor sinners, sinne[rs] in the pulpit and in the pew, sinners in busine[ss] and sinners out of it. Moody, Harrison, Richa[rd] Weaver, the collier; Henry Varley and other eva[n]gelists of the vigorous type, active and energe[tic] though they were on the platform, would have be[en] as graven images in contrast with the swift, ligh[t]ning-like movements of Sunday.

Yet, back of all his eccentricities, and in spite [of] the fact that his initial appearance in New Yo[rk] was largely attended by the curious, Billy Sunda[y] had a message to deliver and he delivered it [in] right good earnest. Nor was it the less effecti[ve] because of his mannerisms. His epigrams we[re] snapped into the very faces of his auditors, an[d] though they did not arouse enthusiasm as in oth[er] cities, were far from being ineffective.

In some respects, Billy Sunday's power as [an] evangelist cannot be measured by his first meeti[ng] in New York. Probably no evangelist ever fac[ed] an audience with so large an admixture of curiosi[ty] seekers; but even with these, some of the truths h[e] uttered must have found their mark. In oth[er] cities his rude eloquence has been made instr[u]mental in winning thousands over to better live[s]. His methods have been criticized and his eccentric[i]ties derided; but in spite of it all, he has been [a] undeniable force in the evangelical field. What h[e] might accomplish in a series of revival meetings [in] New York is a problem which may be learne[d] hereafter.

A Test of Grace

MANY of us have had our physicians subject [us] to the prodding of a stern, steady finger, a[c]companied by the pleasant query: "Does that hurt?" Eventually if all be not well we wince, and then h[e] knows where the trouble lies. It is a rather rou[gh] yet safe test of our physical soundness, this tappin[g] forefinger of the doctor upon our chest and back an[d] sides. Where it hurts us we are weak.

Some such testing of our spiritual state is ma[de] by the Scriptures in many of their admonitions. Perhaps each of us is apt to turn that page quickly on which we know we shall find the verse that mak[es] us wince. Perhaps, too, we know the pages to linge[r] over because we can stand the test of the searchin[g] things we read there. Upon one page of the Scri[p]ture we all know we shall find this admonition: "L[et] not your right hand know what your left han[d] doeth." That is a severe test of grace.

THE CHRISTIAN HERALD frequently has the grea[t] satisfaction of hearing from Christian men an[d] women who all unconsciously disclose their ri[ch] ability to withstand this test. Only the past week a letter was received which reads in part as follows:

I enclose two checks for the amount of $1,000, which I wi[sh] equally divided among the following societies or persons f[or] mission work: Dr. Wilfred T. Grenfell, Labrador; Society [for] Soul Winners, Wilmore, Ky.; Dr. S. M. Zwemer and Bish[op] Hartzell for work among Mohammedans; Rev. A. R. Sta[ge] Peru; Rev. Robert H. Bender, San Salvador; Rev. T. J. Bac[on] Venezuela; Dr. Charles F. Secord, Central America. Thankin[g] you for once keeping my name from publication, I emphatical[ly] request that you will this time neither publish it nor give it [to] the recipients. They can receipt to you instead of me. I appr[e]ciate the work you are doing without compensation and am gl[ad] the entire amount can go to missions.

Unusual grace is required to distribute a su[m] of money to worthy causes anonymously, lettin[g] the gift stand solely in the name of Christ. Ou[r] archives contain not a few instances of great goo[d] having been done, often at a sacrifice to the giver, and yet those who have been benefited will neve[r] know on earth who sent them aid in time of nee[d].

A GIRL baby, not more than an hour or two old, was found wrapped up in two layers of paper in the snow in the middle of a street in Harlem, New York City, early the other rning by Ambrose Jones, the driver of a milk gon. The outside wrapper was heavy manila per and the child was wrapped in thin blue and ite paper next the skin. There was no article of thing in the package, and in spite of the cold infant was alive and well when taken to the rlem Hospital. Poor little girl baby, coming into world to parents that did not want it, and ked enough to abandon it to a likely death by ezing in the snow, or by being mangled with the fs or wheels of the city street! How many usand homes would have been happy if d had sent a sweet little girl baby to m! How many hundreds of thousands homes know what veritable angels of ven girl babies are, and boy babies, ! Dickens in his Cricket on the arth says, "A foundling! which word, ugh only differing from fondling by one vel's length, is very different in mean-." It is because most of the babies of erica are fondlings and not foundlings t our religion and civilization will en-e and prevail. Under the Christian rit the poor little foundling became the dling as the rough arms of the hardy ck driver became as soft as silk, and nurses of the hospital a mother to the id. Whom the heart of man casts out, heart of God takes in.

hen my father and my mother forsake me, then Lord will take me up. (Ps. 27: 10.)

nerica Imports Chinese Eggs

HINA is sending to us something be-sides rice and tea. It is shipping to erica vast quantities of hens' eggs as article of diet. The Empress of Asia ived at Vancouver the other day with 0,000 Chinese eggs consigned to dif-ent places in the United States. Benev-ce and business conspire to promote rcourse between nations. We send n and flour to the starving in China, l its people send back eggs for us to . From the earliest period of history s have been a nutritious and palatable icle of food. In many instances hens ch out their own chickens, and in many ers the chickens were hatched by incu-ors, many of them large public ones, ducing as many as 150,000 chickens h in a season. The peasants brought ir eggs to these public ovens and got k one chicken for every two eggs. rmists that fear famine from over-ulation should remember that hens and ubators are busy around the world. rist thus refers to the use of eggs as an icle of diet in Palestine:

r if he shall ask an egg, will he offer him a pion? (Luke 11: 12.)

Fire Destroys Ancient Bible

N ancient Bible was among $7,000 worth of curios destroyed by fire which cked the house of Mrs. G. L. Vance, in et, Ill., the other day. The Bible, which was of the first printed in Germany after King nes's Version, was found in a European monas-y twenty years ago by Mr. G. L. Vance, head he Sunday School workers of Illinois for many rs. The old copy of the Bible was destroyed, not the real Book that the paper, ink and er contained; that was written by the hand of l placed over human hands, never to be injured lost. Nathaniel Hawthorne brands the thought to the hearts of men by his description of the lic bonfire in the village upon which was piled rything, furniture, clothing, gold, silver, gems, ks, bonds, etc. It was noticed that a large her-covered Bible had been omitted, and so it thrown on top of the pile. After the fire had l out a search among the ashes revealed the fact t everything had been destroyed except the Bible, t though the leather cover had been consumed, a chapter or verse of the text had been touched. every concern about the durability or integrity of the Scriptures be banished; they were never so affectionately cherished nor so secure in their integrity as now. These words of the psalmist ought to set at rest any fears on the subject:

For the Lord is good; his mercy is everlasting; and his truth endureth to all generations. (Ps. 100: 5.)

Death of Bishop Bowman

BISHOP THOMAS BOWMAN, the oldest bishop of the Methodist Episcopal Church, died at the age of 96, at the home of his daughter, Mrs. Burns D. Caldwell, in Orange, N. J., on March 3, and was buried at Greencastle, Ind. He was the founder and first president of the Dickinson Seminary, was the president of Indiana Asbury (now De Pauw) University, was chaplain of the United States Senate and a bishop in his church. In qualities of mind and of heart, as administrator, statesman, orator, preacher, he was one of the most beautiful and potential characters American Methodism has ever had. His old students at Asbury will thank him through all eternity for the influence of his life, character and teaching on their usefulness, happiness and destiny. The patriarch now realizes what the apostle meant when he said:

Henceforth there is laid up for me a crown of righteousness, which the Lord, the righteous judge, shall give me at that day; and not to me only, but unto all them also that love his appearing. (II Tim. 4: 8.)

BUSY NEW YORK CROSSING RIPPED UP BY EXPLOSION

THREE great gas explosions wrecked Twenty-third Street at Broadway and Fifth Avenue, New York, Sunday morning, March 8, causing injury to nine persons. They lifted a Twenty-third Street crosstown car full of passengers two feet in the air, endangered the Fifth Avenue Building, caused two large breaks in the water mains, partly wrecked the trunk sewer under Twenty-third Street, broke countless windows and plate glass fronts of stores and offices in the neighborhood, flooded the new Broadway subway to a depth of ten feet, piled the floors of the Garfield National Bank high with wreckage, flooded the safety vaults of that institution, and threw out of commission the street car lines running past the place of the explosion. The explosions were caused by the bursting of a large water main, which undermined and broke the huge gas main, and a spark from the electric feed wire of the street car set off the immense quantities of gas which wrought havoc and leaped a flame high in the air. The firemen and policemen did their duty nobly. Life's journey is through perils; our complex civilization multiplies them. Paul speaks of the perils on his journeys, including those in the city and country. "In perils in the city, in perils in the wilderness." (II Cor. 11: 26.)

Fortune Found on a Beggar

FOR twenty years William Kahler, seventy years old, has been a beggar in San Francisco, eating food taken from ash cans and sleeping wherever he could find shelter. On the night of March 5, the sidewalk on which he had made his bed seemed so cold and uncomfortable that a patrolman arrested the old man and took him to the police station that he might have a comfortable mattress and blankets. In searching Kahler, it was found that what was supposed to be a hump on his back was uncommonly hard, and investigation revealed that it was not a deformity but a tin box which was packed with gold coin and paper money. Various false pockets in Kahler's clothes were emptied of additional money. When all was counted the total was found to be $33,000. How pitiable and censurable this spectacle, and yet it is no worse than that of the man who, with luxurious living and lavish expenditure, gets money from his fellows by one form of deception or another. His love of money is no worse than that of the man of eminent respectability who sews up tight wads of money in his pocket and not only turns his back on all benevolences, but also denies himself and family almost the necessaries of life. The beggar with the hump of gold on his back, and the rich man who gains unfairly, or gathers and will not give, illustrate this truth:

For the love of money is the root of all evil. (I Tim. 6: 10.)

Rescued from Blizzard Praying

LEWIS SAVAGE, of Mount Rose, N. J., met his wife with a sleigh at the Hopewell station the Sunday night of the blizzard that killed so many recently. The storm halted them. Seeing the only hope was for him to go on and try to find help of some kind, Mr. Savage wrapped his wife up in his overcoat and placed her on the sheltered side of an isolated corn-crib, and pushed on, reaching Mount Rose. Rescue parties were unable to get to the wife till morning. They found Mrs. Savage unconscious, kneeling in the snow in the attitude of prayer. They hurried home with her, and though her feet and hands were frozen, after three hours' effort they succeeded in resuscitating her sufficiently to enable her to tell the story of how she spent those fearful hours. She walked back and forth over a little track she made to keep her heart beating, and a half an hour before daylight, feeling that help could not reach her in time, she knelt down and gave herself up to her Saviour in what she thought would be her last earthly sleep. She did fall into unconsciousness, out of which she was awakened to illustrate the value of woman's heroism in fighting against great odds for her life, and woman's piety in surrendering herself in faith to the One who she knew would take her out of the storm into the calm, and out of the snow into a realm of springtime and of flowers. She imitated the saint who, on the boundary line of another world, said:

Lord Jesus, receive my spirit. (Acts 7: 59.)

Organ for Panama Fair

THE largest organ in America, perhaps in the world, has just been ordered for the Panama Exposition at San Francisco. It will be 77 feet high, 40 feet wide and 20 feet deep. It will have 114 stops, the next largest organ, at Sydney, Australia, having 107. It will have four manuals, and will cost $60,000. It will be permanently placed in a public building in San Francisco after the fair. It is a tribute to the wisdom and piety of the leaders, that the musical and worshipful side of the nation's life is to have its proper relationship to the exposition. The organ existed in primitive form in the earliest times. It was used among the peasants in the time of Homer. Its music was so beautiful that its invention was attributed to the gods; by Pindar to Pallas Athene, by Pliny to Pan, and by others to Marsyas or Silenus. At first the wind for the reeds was furnished by human breath, then it was produced by a leather bellows worked with the arm, and afterward by water power. It was used as an important musical instrument in the ritual of Judaism, and in the services of the Christian Church from the early centuries.

They take the timbrel and harp, and rejoice at the sound of the organ. (Job 21: 12.)

A WEEK IN THE WORLD'S NEWS

Dynamiters Lose in Appeal

THE twenty-four members of the Iron Workers' Union, convicted in the Federal Court for the district of Indiana for conspiracy to carry explosives on interstate passenger trains, who carried an appeal to the United States Supreme Court, were refused a review of their cases on March 9, and will be taken to the prison at Leavenworth unless a pardon intervenes. Frank M. Ryan, president of the International Association of Bridge and Structural Iron Workers, had been sentenced to a term of seven years, and his associates to terms of from six down to one year. The prosecution of these men followed upon the arrest of McManigal in connection with the dynamiting of the Los Angeles Times building, and the confession of the McNamaras was a feature of the government investigation. Union labor men have confidently expected a review of the convictions.

Another White House Wedding

AN UNOFFICIAL and undenied report of the engagement of Miss Eleanor Wilson, the President's youngest daughter, to William G. McAdoo, secretary of the treasury, appeared in the press, March 11. Mr. McAdoo is a widower and has long been an intimate friend of the Wilson family. He is the builder of the Hudson Tunnel between New York and New Jersey. Miss Wilson is twenty-four years of age and very popular in Washington's younger social circles.

Record Price for Lives

THE date of this issue of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD is the third anniversary of the Triangle fire horror in New York by which 148 shirtwaist makers perished. Suits against the proprietors of the shirtwaist company and the owner of the building to fix liability failed. The press now state that the families of twenty-three of the victims have accepted the pitiful sum of $75 in each case from an employers' liability insurance company in settlement of their claims for damages, rather than continue the hopeless fight which many families have kept up to secure commensurate payment.

Parcel Post Crowds Out Express

COMPETITION by the parcel post has dealt the express business a heavy blow. The American Express Company has been obliged to cut its dividends severely, and now the United States Express Company, with assets estimated from seven to ten million dollars, has decided to retire, according to reports. It was one of the most prosperous of the companies and was operated for sixty years over the leading railway lines of the country. The 16 per cent. reduction in rates recently ordered by the Interstate Commerce Commission was the final blow to this company's income.

Suffragette Outrages Increase

ON March 8, the London police, after the severest battle yet given them by the suffragettes, arrested Sylvia Pankhurst (for the sixth time) and took her to Holloway jail in the pouring rain. Miss Zelie Emerson, of Jackson, Mich., who has been often arrested in these scrimmages, was also taken into custody. On March 10 a militant suffragette practically ruined the famous "Rokeby Venus" by Velasquez, in the National Gallery, with a hatchet. The woman was arrested and the National Gallery and other public places of great interest to tourists were ordered closed until further notice. The painting is regarded as one of the most important Spanish pictures in the world. The woman was sentenced to six months in jail, the extreme penalty provided.

FATAL ST. LOUIS FIRE

TRAPPED on the upper floors of the Missouri Athletic Club Building, St. Louis, twenty guests and possibly twice that number perished on the morning of March 9 in a fire which destroyed the property, valued at half a million. The burning floors fell within the walls, carrying an unknown number of victims with them, and until this mass of debris can be removed the exact number of deaths will not be known. A force of a hundred men began digging as soon as conditions permitted. It is claimed that the club had been warned that its sleeping quarters were unsafe. Bank vaults, which occupied one part of the building, contained over a million dollars in coin and currency, which was removed under police protection after the fire. Many guests who were awakened by the fire escaped by leaping to the roof of a lower building nearby, though some perished in the attempt. A number were saved by the heroic work of firemen. The cause of the fire was not determined.

Gateway Closed to Hindus

IMMIGRATION authorities at San Francisco have ruled that thirty-five Hindus, who arrived bearing passports procured at Manila, are aliens and must be deported. Several hundred British East Indians at Manila recently protested against their inability to secure exit certificates. Steps are being taken to restrict the admission into continental United States of Hindus, Malays and others coming by way of the Philippines, where their declared purpose was to remain.

Sectarian Truce Advised

THE three delegates sent from the churches of America to confer abroad with religious bodies there upon a proposed World's Conference of Religions looking to unity, report favorable attitude on the part of thirty-two religious bodies, and the advisory committee which has the movement in hand has voted a proclamation to all Christendom advising "a truce of God" in the nature of a cessation of all intersectarian controversy and a concentrating of faith and works upon the problem of Christian unity for the evangelization of the world.

The Mexican Tangle

THE Benton incident is still potent to beget international troubles for Mexico, his body is now believed to have been burned by Villa. The body of the Texan Vergara has been recovered, showing evidence of a cruel death, and Secretary Bryan has demanded punishment of the murders by Huerta. The Huer government is reported to have ordered mobilizations and aggressive tactics Federal troops. Torreon admitted to be cut off by rebels and liable to ear attack; Huerta's fate believed to depend on outcome. Tampico is again b sieged and made objective of rebel movement. General Carranza reported have stripped Villa of all but military authority. Villa, after threatening dea to Terraza's son, failing a huge ransom, rescinds orders under outside pre sure. THE LIGHT SHINING IN DARKNESS thousand. The poor Italians were forced to attend the services of the churches, forced to go to mass, forced to confess, forced to allow the priests to be the masters in their houses, under pain of imprisonment and death. And now Evangelical churches and Evangelical schools and colleges are numerous and influential, such as those in connection with the Methodist Episcopal Church of America, and now a new cathedral church has been added to those already existing in connection with the Waldensian Church. Bible shops and depots are to be found, and Evangelical newspapers are printed. Light has arisen in the darkness. Papal churches, centers of ignorance, superstition, idolatry and imposture, still exist, but they are more show-places for travelers than places of worship. The Vatican itself is only a show-place with the Pope as its chief sight. He is a curiosity which travelers go to see, but I sincerely wish they would not. Italians do not go to see him. To do so would be to insult their king, and Roosevelt's conduct in not going to the Vatican gave great satisfaction to all Rome.

Then this new church makes us think of the Waldensians. For long centuries they were the objects of bitter persecution on the part of Rome. The Popes caused thousands and tens of thousands to be put to death. Up till 1870 they were, of course, excluded from Rome. Now they are amongst the most respected citizens, and they are found in leading positions in the business and in the political world, and are even in the king's palace. What a change for these gallant people! Again, their new church stands in Piazza Cavour. No better spot in Rome could have been found. Piazza Cavour is a large square named after the great statesman, and in the center is a huge statue erected to his memory by a grateful people. Count Camillo di Cavour was one of the greatest men the world has ever seen. And he was, what all the makers of Italy were, a Protestant. He was not so nominally, but he was so in practice. His mother and her family were Protestants of Geneva, and amongst them he was educated. Cavour was a liberal of liberals. No one could accuse him of narrowness or intolerance, and yet it was he who, in the interests of religious liberty, took all privileges from the Roman Catholic Church, took education, marriage, the distribution of public charities out of her hands. It was he who dissolved the religious houses, cleared Piedmont of the monks and nuns—and all this because he realized the Roman Catholic Church to be not so much a religious body as a despotic political organization. He did this to secure a free church in a free State, or free religion in a free State. There is something appropriate in the new Waldensian Church being situated in Piazza Cavour in front of the statue of that great man. Over the door of the new church is the historic Waldensian candle on its candlestick with the words Lux lucet in tenebris—a capital symbol of the Light of Life that is now dispelling the darkness of the old papal Rome. There are still many dark spots in Rome. The Vatican is one. The papal colleges are others. So are the various religious houses, which are possessed not by Italians, but by foreign Roman Catholics—Englishmen, Americans, Austrians and Spaniards—and which have not yet been suppressed, as they, like the Italian houses, will be one day. And the papal churches are such spots. But their influence in Rome amongst the Italians is little. Light is shining everywhere, and perhaps even penetrating into some of these dark spots. Even priests are everywhere seeking the light.

The light is shining in the darkness. The people that sat in darkness have seen a great light, and they that dwell in the shadow of death, upon them has the light shined.

BOWERY MISSION TESTIMONIES

A WIFE'S STORY

THE wife of one of the converts sat on the Bowery Mission platform on a recent Sunday morning and heard her husband give his testimony. Among other things he referred to the fact that he was to celebrate, during the ensuing week, the thirty-third anniversary of his wedding. He went on and told the story of his conversion fourteen years ago and all the happiness that had come into his life since that time. The wife sat quietly listening, with a rapt expression of gratitude and joy upon her face. Toward the close of the meeting she asked if she might be allowed to say a few words. This is what she said:

"I do not know that I have ever realized before how much I have to thank God for. My husband has told you next Saturday we celebrate the thirty-third anniversary of our wedding, and I want to thank God for all that it has been to us. It has not always been sunshine. We have had our discouragements surely. Shortly after we were married my husband was very ill and things looked very dark to us. Yesterday at my butcher's he showed me a silver dollar that he had been saving, and it reminded me of the time that I have just spoken about, when my husband was so sick and we had got to the last dollar. It was a silver dollar.

"On a certain Monday morning I was awakened by my little child crying. It was about two o'clock, and I at once got up and went to her side. To my great surprise I found my husband was gone, and you can imagine how I felt. I found a note under the lamp saying, 'Don't worry; I have gone out to look for a job.' At about nine o'clock he came in and said, 'I have got something to do.' I said, 'Thank God.' 'Maybe you won't say that when I tell you what it is.' I said, 'I will thank God for anything.' He told me he had seen an advertisement in the window, 'Boy wanted.' It was a grocery store, and he went in and obtained the job at $6 a week. He worked in that position for two years. Then a telegram came, saying his sister was dead. I went down to the grocery store and asked for my husband and was told he was getting out orders. I handed the telegram to the grocer and asked him to please say that his wife had called. 'Do you mean to say,' said the grocer, 'that he is a married man and that you are living on $6 a week!' I found my husband had never mentioned the fact that he was married, and all through those two years we had lived; and because we were Christians we were thankful.' Then there came a time when he branched out and got into other work. Then he commenced to drift, and for some years he kept drifting until he lost his hold upon God.

"Fourteen years ago this coming August God answered my prayer and saved my dear husband. Never but once did I hear him say that he had a desire to go and get a drink, and that was in a moment of deep discouragement when he said impulsively, 'Oh, what's the use of keeping it up?' I thank God that he has kept it up, and I want to say to every man that there is a chance for him. I trust this morning that some of you will hear God's voice and yield."

THE GREAT INVITATION*

SUNDAY SCHOOL LESSON BY DR. AND MRS. WILBUR F. CRAFTS

Jesus was a guest at dinner in the home of a Pharisee, whose name we are not told, but were the same as stands in Dyer, but of that somewhere in Perea. And Jesus was on his way to Jerusalem. It was a Sabbath day dinner, and the company was distinguished, for it was in the house of one of the chief Pharisees. There was a crowd of people watching Jesus to see what he, like a man afflicted with dropsy managed to slip in that he might find [illegible] him. Jesus showed courage to heal on the Sabbath day? for Jesus knew that it was contrary to the teaching of the Pharisees. For their Pharisee and his guests on their part were expecting to [illegible] that they had their prize, so Jesus healed the man, and let him go. After the man had gone, Jesus, in a few words, explained how what he had done was "work," because it was to be compared with what was "lawful" in their judgment: the pulling of an ox or an ass out of a pit into which it had fallen on the Sabbath day. The Pharisees did not try to answer him.

The dinner proceeded, and when it was finished Jesus gave them an after-dinner speech, the most important one ever delivered at the head table in this world. "After-dinner speeches" in our day, and some who make them, are behind the age, for many are trifling, and their aim is [illegible] or applause of the "table." But the words of Jesus at the Pharisee's dinner were given with great and dignity beyond compare. Not one syllable has ever been forgotten, or ever can be, for his words belong to eternity. Jesus connected his theme with the dinner and the place where they sat down at it. That one word, because the people who listened would be impressed through the law of association. He reminded them that as they came in, they had selected the best places at the table, leaving the least desirable ones for those who should come after. In doing this they showed that they thought the most of themselves, that they were conceited. And he told them it was better humor to take the poorer seats, and be invited to take the better ones if the master of the feast should choose to ask them. It was a self-centered attitude, but we doubt if it was intentionally given, and it was ended with the judgment that "whosoever humbleth himself shall be exalted." That lesson in courtesy is just as applicable to-day—nineteen hundred years after it was spoken—as it has been at [illegible] during all the intervening years and will never go out of style.

The Children's National Guild of Courtesy, at the title of a society inaugurated in England for the promotion of politeness among children. In the list of rules which are divided into [illegible] for morning at home, at school, at play, in the street, everywhere, in speaking [illegible] the following may be found: "Do not point at others, or mimic any one's peculiarities." "Do not make fun of old or crippled people." "Never interrupt when a person is speaking." The spirit of the movement is to be found in the following stanza, selected from many lines of rules:

> A smile, a look, a word,
> And half a world grows fair;
> For either may turn a sad heart, or,
> Or smooth the way to heaven.
> A smile may lighten the fainting heart,
> A word may soften pain's keenest smart,
> A [illegible] and [illegible] apart—
> [illegible]

The best teacher in courtesy is the Lord Jesus himself.

> We need to look to, and love him.

Take notice, grown-ups, as well as children. Watch yourselves on the trolley cars, on steam cars, on seats in parks, at restaurant and hotel tables, at public libraries, and on the street—everywhere. Love as brethren, be pitiful, be courteous. (I Peter 3: 8.)

Then Jesus had a word for the master of the feast. Evidently the man had taken some credit to himself for giving a feast of a religious character—the breaking of bread on the Sabbath day. So Jesus said to him: "When thou makest a dinner or a supper, call not thy friends, nor thy brethren, nor thy kinsmen, nor rich neighbors, but bid the poor, the maimed, the lame and the blind, and thou shalt be blest."

We are not told what the master of the feast replied. Let us hope that he felt the force of what Jesus had said to him. Evidently one of the guests was impressed with the words of Jesus, for his thoughts at once turned to the great feast which the Jews expected to partake of when the Messiah should come. And so he said, "Blessed is he that shall eat bread in the kingdom of God."

Then Jesus went on with his after-dinner speech, and told them about a man who made a great supper, and invited many people to come. And when the supper was ready, he sent his servant to tell them to come at once. He had to do so, because the people in those times did not have watches and clocks as now. But no one wished to go to the supper. All made excuses for staying away. One said "I must go and look at the land I have bought"; another said: "I have bought some new oxen, and I want to test their quality"; another said: "I have just been married, and I want to stay with my new wife." Each one had a different excuse. The master of the feast was angry and disappointed, and he told his servant to go out into the city and bring back with him all the poor and lame and blind people he could find. The servant did so, and still there was room for more. "Go again," said the master; "go out into the country, and bring in those you find along the roadside." And the servant did so, and the places at the tables were filled with people.

Perhaps the Pharisees did not know it, but Jesus was giving them a picture of the "Marriage Supper of the Lamb," which we may read about in the ninth verse of the nineteenth chapter of Revelation. There it is written: "Blessed are they which are called" (invited). And the invitation reads like this: "Whosoever will, let him come." Those who want to have places at that great supper of God in the heavenly land must begin at once to get ready, not their clothes, but themselves. They need to say: "I am not worthy, O Jesus, to be invited; but thou hast paid the price for me by thy death upon the cross. Thou art all loving and forgiving when I fail to do the right." They must have love for others in their hearts, and must be ready always to help the poor, the widows, the fatherless and the orphans, the lame and the blind—all who are in trouble. How glad we should be to be servants for Jesus to tell all of these people that they are invited to the heavenly feast!

Can we for a moment suppose that there are any persons who will make excuses when we tell them about the Marriage Supper of the Lamb? Here is one who says: "I know some pretty bad folks who call themselves Christians, that is the reason I have for not joining the church." "Did you ever see a counterfeit ten-dollar bill?" "Yes." "Why was it counterfeited?" "Because it was worth counterfeiting." "Was the ten-dollar bill to blame?" "No." "Did you ever see a scrap of brown paper counterfeited?" "No." "Why not?" "Because it was not worth counterfeiting." "Did you ever see a counterfeit Christian?" "Yes, lots of them." "Why was he counterfeited?" "Because he was worth being counterfeited." "Was he to blame?" "No." "Did you ever see a counterfeit infidel?" "No, never." "Why?" "You answer; I am through."

Here is one who says: "I am too young," and another says, "I am too old." But Jesus promises joy to the children and comfort to the aged.

A man who was told about the invitation to the "Marriage Supper of the Lamb" replied: "It seems as if I was chained up inside, as if something held me down, and chained me so that I cannot come." "Well," replied a Christian man, "just come to Christ, chains and all." "Oh," said he, "I never thought of that." And he came, and the fetters were broken right in the act of his coming to Christ.

Here is one whose excuse is: "I haven't time." Do you mean to say that you haven't time to be noble, to be kind, to be honest? Does it take any longer to be true and good than to be mean and dishonorable? Surely no.

them up again for the wind. Then he came to her again. "Look at this!" he said, holding out the paper he had meant to show her.

"What is it?" asked Polly. "I can't read it; I broke my specs this mornin'."

"There!" he smote his thigh. "I knew somethin' made you quare lookin'. It's the specs. Well, 'tis a list o' the shavers for a mile around. I'm givin' every mother's son and daughter of 'em a picture book. Andy Carnegie don't get the better o' me on me birthday."

"I met Pedlar Dan," Polly replied, anxious to get away. "He told me about it."

"He did, did he?" laughed Maginnis. "Upon me wurrud, but it's a gossipin' spalpeen he is. And me not wantin' annybody to know what I was goin' to do till it was done! Me ould mother—she was about your age—used to say never let your left hand know what your right was doin'. All the same, me friend Andy won't have a better birthday in Skiddoo Castle than me in town givin' Missus Maginnis a big green emer'ld ring, even if he did give this libr'y buildin'. Be the way, Polly, you needn't pay your rent to-morrow, it's me birthday and I'll be away."

Here was Polly's opportunity. She opened her lips, but the words would not come.

"I don't mind puttin' it off a few days," Maginnis went on, as though his concession must not be misconstrued into meaning that the rent might be paid any time at all, "specially where an old tenant is concerned. And you've been in that house a good while, long before I bought it, and always prompt. But I'll lave you, for I've work to do to get to town," and he spurted away.

"I help with my cheerfulness, do I?" gulped Polly.

The store was hard by. She went there, and got what she had come for.

"Needn't pay it for a few days!" she said bitterly. "Here's a chance for the Lord to help in extremity! What's that?" A paper had fluttered up from the ground and clung to her skirt. She stooped and caught it in her hand.

She was without her glasses, but staring up at her in big letters were the words "One Hundred Dollars." She knew it must be one of the papers Maginnis had dropped when he was getting at the list of children's names. "A hundred-dollar bill!" She hungrily regarded the paper—the amount of her rent for ten months. The world swam before her. The wonderful luck of it! It was almost like a gift of the fairies—it was like some of the stories Jinny used to read aloud where just in the nick of time, when somebody was on the verge of desperation, something happened that made everything as it should be. It was like an answered prayer. Hadn't she said a moment before that here was God's opportunity? And here in her hand was more money than she ever had had at one time.

It was long before her confusion subsided, and only exultation remained. Her arms wrapped themselves around her body as though she hugged herself. "A hundred dollars!" she kept saying. "A hundred dollars!" Suddenly she thought of home. "Jinny!" she said. "I mustn't stay away too long. She'll wonder what keeps me. How happy we can be now! I can go to town to-morrow and get it changed at the bank. I'll get ten dollar bills and keep 'em for the rent."

Polly was still alert, and she got across the fence into the field, whose deep ruts were as nothing to her feet that had been lagging before. She slipped the note in the breast pocket of her jacket, holding it tightly there. "He's rich," she said, "he gives emerald rings and picture books to them that don't need 'em. He won't miss it, and wouldn't care if he did."

She fairly flew along. "A hundred dollars!" she kept saying. "A hundred dollars!"

Then she saw the house. Her eyes were on it. All at once Jinny's white face appeared at the kitchen window, lovingly on the watch for her. A stealthiness warned her to be careful, so she opened the door nonchalantly.

"Here you are," blithely called Jinny, balancing herself on the crutches she had not yet learned to use very well.

Polly took off her hood and hung it on its accustomed nail behind the door.

"It's cold," she said curtly. "The fire's got to be kept up. I'll put a real big log on."

"Not too big," Jinny responded, her mind evidently on the extent of the woodpile in the yard. For answer Polly put the biggest log she could find in the stove. Jinny glanced at her, then seated herself at the table and picked up a stocking that needed darning. Her silence seemed to make her grandmother restless.

"While you darn," said Polly, "I guess I'll read the paper. I forgot, though—I've broke my specs." She fidgeted. "I met Pedlar Dan. I met the minister—they're puttin' a new carpet in the church. Then I met Dr. Gray's Mary. Oh, yes," as by an afterthought, "I met Maginnis."

"Where did you meet him?" asked Jinny, ignoring the other acquaintances; therefore the rent must be in her mind, thought Polly.

"Outside the new library," answered her grandmother. "To-morrow's his birthday, and he's makin' presents 'stead o' receivin' 'em. He's givin' his wife an emerald ring, and all the children for a mile around picture books."

Jinny sighed. "Why don't you take off your jacket?" she said. "It's hot here."

Take off her jacket and that hundred dollars in the pocket! "I'm all right," snapped Polly.

A silence fell.

"What's the matter with you, you're so quiet?" Polly suddenly demanded. "Is your back worse?"

Jinny laughed. "No, indeed," she answered. "I'm all right. Honest, I am."

Honest!

But silence came again.

"Say," Polly blurted out, "mustn't it be fine to be so rich you don't mind losin' a hundred dollars or so now and then?"

"I don't know," Jinny answered crisply, "I never had a hundred dollars."

"Neither did I," testily retorted her grandmother. "But if I was rich I wouldn't mind losin' it. A poor person can't lose a lot o' money like that."

"Nobody's poor," protested Jinny, "who has a clear conscience."

"Shucks!" sneered Polly. "A clear conscience with one person ain't the same with another. "Look at the trusts!" for she read the papers.

Jinny rolled a mock orange inside the stocking.

"Look at the trusts!" repeated Polly, as though she had a clincher.

"If they're not honest" (again that word), "they oughtn't to be looked at," said Jinny.

Her grandmother eyed her.

"Wouldn't it be fine," she asked ingratiatingly, "to find some money?"

"It wouldn't be ours," Jinny took her up.

"I don't know why," argued Polly, "if a rich man lost it and didn't mind."

Jinny coughed. "What nonsense we're talking," she said. "And you a religious woman! So Mr. Maginnis is giving presents on his birthday. That's a new way of doing."

"He don't mind throwin' money away," returned Polly. She rose. "I'll get in some more wood, for it's mighty cold. And don't you throw it up to me that I'm religious." She left the room and the house and went to the yard and the woodpile, where she seated herself.

"Honest!" she muttered. "I'm honest, let anybody dare to say I'm not. And that talk about things not belongin' to you when you find 'em and they're not wanted by the loser! Besides, who knows? Somethin' may turn up and I can save till I get a hundred dollars and send it to Maginnis without him knowin' who sent it. Jinny may work in less'n a year, and get a raise in her wages, and sewin' may come in with a rush and—"

Hark! there was Jinny singing as she often did when she was worried, or pretended she hadn't much pain! And her grandmother's favorite hymn!

"I need thee, oh, I need thee!
Every hour I need thee!"

sang Jinny in the kitchen, the words coming out distinctly on the frosty air.

"What a voice she's got! So clear and honest!"

"Honest!" That word again, as though it were the only word in the world.

"Me not honest, indeed! And yet if it was honest to keep that hundred dollars why shouldn't Jinny be told about it? The Lord knows I'm honest, though. I've slaved all my life to make both ends meet, and what have I gained by it? When I sew I always do a little more than I've bargained for, so as to give good measure. When—haven't I the right to make Jinny feel easy in her mind now she can't work for nearly a year? I guess that's honest in me. And I've often tried to look happy when my heart was near burstin', and gone to church and prayed to the Lord to keep me cheerful. Dan said I kind of made him glad when he met me, the minister said I heartened him, Mary Gray called me 'happy Polly,' Maginnis said my cheerfulness banished his blues. I'm tired to death, and now I can keep bein' cheerful, for that money—Honest? Of course I'm honest."

"I need thee, oh, I need thee!
Every hour I need thee!"

A sudden heat shot through Polly. It was almost as though the note in her pocket was burning its way into her heart. And then a strange thing happened—she was not alone!

"You need me every hour," she heard a voice say. "I am with you, my love directs you, for I am the Way, the Truth and the Life. You have me with you. Every hour you need me!"

"What is it?" she gasped. "Who is it?"

"You need me in the hour of temptation?" the voice in her heart went on.

"Who is it?"

"You need me!"

"Who—"

"I need thee, oh, I need thee!
Every hour I need thee!"

sang Jinny in the kitchen.

"I know! I know!" wailed Polly, and fell to her knees, only to stagger up again and lurch forward to the house.

At sight of her Jinny's voice stopped, and she got to her feet. "What is it?" she asked in fright.

"I know!" cried her grandmother. "I am a thief! A thief!"

"It's the rent," wept Jinny. "It's made you wild for days. Without me you could get along. I'm a drag on you."

"I'm a thief!" repeated Polly wildly, "a thief and a hypocrite," and she thrilled out the story of the note. "I would have kept the money," she cried; "it was in my heart to do it—me that preaches honesty and a clear conscience makin' us cheerful. The Lord came to me. I heard him. He is never far away from us, he was with me, he read my heart—"

"Upon me warrud!" It was Maginnis speaking. He stood in the doorway, astounded by the sight before him.

THE YOUNG PEOPLE'S MEETINGS

NOTES ON THE CHRISTIAN ENDEAVOR, EPWORTH LEAGUE AND BAPTIST YOUNG PEOPLE'S UNION TOPICS

The Power Verse*

PAUL understood the difficulties of the task ahead of the early Christians. Some of their enemies had expressed that task in terms truer than they realized. They were indeed to turn the world upside down. They were to substitute the strange new motive of love for the world-wide motive of selfishness and greed; they were to substitute the authority of Christ for the authority of the forces of evil; they were to substitute love and faith and hope and gladness for sorrow and despair and hatred and doubt. This was a tremendous task. But they faced it dauntlessly. And the secret of their fearlessness Paul expressed in the great words of our power verse: "I can do all things through Christ who strengtheneth me."

The language of the Bible is famous for its superlatives and universals. Paul made no exception to his statement. He had taken at their face value the assurance of Jesus: "All power is given unto me in heaven and in earth," and the promise that this same power would be given to those who would follow him.

In view of these assurances, of which there are so many throughout the Word of God, why is it that there are so many weak Christians and so much failure in religious work? To make the matter still more local and personal, why is not your society and your church having greater spiritual victories in the community and why are not you having large and definite success in bringing souls to Christ and in furthering the Master's kingdom?

There are two answers to this question. The first is that we are not sufficiently willing to stop trusting in our own strength. There still remains much of the idea that we ourselves have considerable skill and power after all; there is still a decided inclination to take much of the credit for what successes may come to ourselves rather than giving all the credit to Christ. We have not quite acknowledged that Christ was altogether right when he said: "Without me ye can do nothing." We must get down to the depths of that self-surrender before we can rise to the heights of Paul's exultant boast: "I can do all things through Christ who strengtheneth me."

The other cause of failure is our lack of faith. The people who gain great profits of spiritual treasure for the heavenly kingdom are those who are "rich in faith." Just as capital in the world of business makes more capital, so faith makes more faith and so increases spiritual wealth and gain. If you expect to be weak you will be weak; if you expect to fail you will fail. But if you expect to be strong, if you expect to be victorious, if you expect to win real gains for Christ and his church, these things will come to pass. You will be strong and victorious and profitable to God. The words of Jesus still hold good: "According to your faith be it unto you."

Being Glad in God†

WE OFTEN speak of the many motives and desires which prompt different people. We see some seeking money, others power, others amusement, others companionship, and others following many varied pursuits. But after all each of these seekers is after the same object—gladness. The children call it fun; grown people call it happiness; older folks call it peace. But one thing that every one wants is—gladness.

Our lesson tells us the one supreme and only sure way to get gladness. That is to find it in God himself. A very great impression was made at a State Y. M. C. A. convention in the Middle West some years ago by an earnest, thoughtful man who had not previously been recognized as an outspoken religionist. He was an educator, a friend of young people, a deep student and keen observer of human life. His résumé of life on this occasion was altogether thrilling. Not work, he declared, would solve the riddle of life and still its unrest; neither would play do it, in any of its varied forms or degrees. What then? Only God. It is God, he said, that answers life's riddle and brings to men its true treasure.

Young people particularly are apt to misjudge God and totally misunderstand him. They think of him often as some one who wants to interfere with their pleasure. All sorts of things which they find themselves wanting to do they think that God does not want them to do. So they arrive at the very wrong conclusion that he does not want them to have a good time. But this is precisely what he does want them to have. And whatever interest he may have in keeping us away from some things which we may think we want to do is only because these things will keep us away from him and so make it impossible for us to be truly glad.

As a matter of fact God does want us to enjoy all the natural, wholesome, helpful pleasures of ordinary life. Just as it is right for a squirrel to scamper and a bird to sing, just so it is right for boys and girls, young men and women to indulge in wholesome recreation and fun. Young people ought to feel "the wild joy of living" of which Browning makes the young harpist David sing to gloomy King Saul.

But we find very early in life that this kind of joy is not enough; it is a kind of joy but not the supreme joy. We reach out and find that love is greater than this. And so finally we come to realize that as love is the supreme gift and joy of life so the experience of loving God is the highest form this highest pleasure of life can assume. To love God, to realize that we are his friends, to keep trying to understand the wonder of his love for us, to really share his companionship and his comfort and his glory, this is life's acme of gladness.

The crowning wonder of this crowning gladness is that it is independent of other things and circumstances. No earthly object or experience need separate us from God. Read again the wonderful passage assigned as our first reference, Hab. 3: 17-19. In these verses the prophet enumerates almost all the disasters that could overtake the husbandman. Yet he declares that in the face of these disasters, in the very midst of them, he will rejoice in the Lord, will joy in the God of his salvation.

That last word, "salvation," gives us the key which will unlock the door to this gladness of God. It is sin that prevents from enjoying him. His Son came to set us, by his death, free from the sin that separates us from our Source of joy. And as we accept by faith that wonder-gift of his salvation we find that we have even here entered into "the joy of our Lord."

This Is Done 400,000 Times Per Day

Every day, on the average, 400,000 housewives serve a Van Camp dish.

Van Camp's Beans, perhaps. Or some other delicacy prepared in the kitchens which bake them.

All because our chefs produced a dish of Baked Beans which nobody ever matched. Then they applied the same skill to other things you like.

Now lovers of good things buy these delicacies 130,000,000 times a year. And to bring them to you we use more tin cans than any other concern in the world.

VAN CAMP'S PORK & BEANS BAKED WITH TOMATO SAUCE

Also Baked Without the Sauce

This Dish made these kitchens famous. The chef who prepares it used to be a leading Parisian chef.

The Beans for this dish are picked out by analysis. The Sauce we bake with them has remarkable tang and zest.

Steam Ovens are used to bake them, and in very small parcels, so every bean comes out mealy and whole.

This Dish is supreme, and millions of people know it. No home can bake anything like it. No rival brand compares with it. Even the chefs in the finest hotels do not attempt to approach it.

Countless restaurants and lunch rooms, famed for their Baked Beans, serve nothing but Van Camp's. There are more than 500 in New York City alone.

Don't try to duplicate this Dish. It has never been done. And Van Camp's come to you with the fresh oven flavor—mellow and nut-like and zestful—at a cost of three cents per serving.

Thousands of Investors Make the Same Old Error

—they sacrifice income without any gain whatever of real safety. ¶ It is needless to say that the greatest of all investment errors is to forget safety in pursuit of an alluringly high income yield. But this mistake is less common than it was. Investors are wiser and more prudent nowadays.

¶ Yet it is a fact that for the great majority, the best investment is the safe investment with the largest income. It is poor business policy to purchase investment qualities one may not need, at the expense of the interest yield, which one does need vitally.

¶ On request we will gladly explain why the 6% serial First Mortgage bonds we own and offer, return a larger interest yield than most other securities of an equal degree of soundness. The fact that no investor has ever suffered loss of either principal or interest on any security purchased of us, shows well how safe they are. These bonds are in convenient denominations — $100, $500, $1,000 and $5,000.

Those genuinely interested should call or write for the Investors Magazine, our monthly publication, and Circular No. 572-C.

ANSWERS TO FINANCIAL QUERIES

I. V. H., NEW MEXICO. We can find no market for your Detroit-Beaumont Oil stock.

D. S. W., OHIO. Chicago Steel Products Company first mortgage 6 per cent. gold bonds are considered a well protected investment.

REV. H. H. L., NEW YORK. An assessment for the stockholders will be the probable outcome of the Rock Island's present difficulties. The stock is not an investment.

MRS. H. I. D., PENNSYLVANIA. We should hardly regard Nevada Consl. Copper stock as meeting the requirements of a woman's investment. Write to the investment firms whose announcements appear on this page.

MISS S. J. S., OHIO. You seem to have made an excellent investment. A real estate mortgage bond recommended offered for sale by a responsible firm is believed to represent one of the soundest investment propositions possible. Chicago and Pittsburg realty advances in value all the time.

B. W. B., MASSACHUSETTS. (1) Application has been made by the Fall River Gas Works Co. for authority to offer to the stockholders 3,850 shares of new stock at $225 per share. The stock pays 12 per cent. per annum, the dividend is assured by abundant earnings and surplus, and we believe you should take advantage of the opportunity when it is presented.

MISS M. W., WISCONSIN. At 36½ Tennessee Copper stock will yield about 8.22 per cent. The par value of this stock is $25. The company is one of the greatest copper producing properties in the United States, outside of Anaconda, and has paid to date approximately $2,500,000 in dividends. We can hardly recommend the stock, however, as a conservative investment for a woman.

J. K. G., IOWA. You will be entirely safeguarded, we believe, and you should accept the company's offer if the amounts of the notes adapt themselves to your requirements. Mortgages on churches are usually regarded as safe. Foreclosures are rare occurrences. The company offering the notes stands back of every issue and is one of the strongest banking institutions in the Southwest.

N. S. T., NEW YORK. Twin Falls North Side Land and Water Company bonds have recently found a market around fifty cents on the dollar. We are advised the enterprise itself is about 90 per cent efficient. The farmers on the lands are successful and contented, and we are advised that the company will gradually come out of its difficulties. We do not recommend a sale at the present.

S. S. W., HONOLULU. All bonds have a definite length of life like a real estate mortgage. Only railway and public utility bonds usually have a longer term to run than real estate mortgages. The date of maturity means little to the holder of a long-term bond. The holder is not required to keep his investment until 1963 or 1950 or whenever the bond is due. Good bonds are always salable.

MRS. C. S., INDIANA. You ask how a woman may safely invest $2,000, and ask for a list of desirable securities. There are upwards of a thousand different investment issues that could be recommended as applicable for a woman's investment. It would require a lot of space to enumerate even a small fraction of them. One of the most attractive investments brought to our notice recently are the Collateral Trust 6 per cent serial gold bonds of the Huntington Land and Improvement Company. A part of your money would be safely placed in these bonds, which may be brought in $100 denominations of various maturities, which will yield from 4 per cent. to 6¼ per cent. These bonds may be secured from any responsible banking firm.

C. F. L., CONNECTICUT. Baltimore and Ohio [illegible] is not indicated as an unsecured investment. If the road effects the big loan now [illegible] its dividend will be endangered. The company is just barely able to pay 5 per cent. to the stockholders as it is, but with greatly increased fixed charges the rate is likely to be cut. The convertible 4½ per cent. bonds at a price to return about 5 per cent are safer.

D. D. H., DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA. The [illegible] is not regarded as an investment proposition. Money to the company has created a [illegible] of new extensions. If there is to the road [illegible] a profitable proposition. It is one of the [illegible] companies, and has paid in dividends about two and one-half times its entire capitalization. Ore mined and sold can pay dividends but once. All mines finally play out. Instead of speculating in mining stocks you had better buy good $100 bonds.

E. M. L., FLORIDA. The National Fire Proofing Company owns and controls twenty-eight plants making porous terra cotta, fire-proofing tile, etc., and also owns 4,000 acres of clay and coal. Par value of stock $50. The preferred stock has received 4 per cent. annual dividends since 1910, and at current price yields about 8 per cent. on the amount invested. No dividends on the common stock are paid.

MRS. R. L. H., MISSISSIPPI. Very few investors buy United States Government bonds. The excess of safety is unnecessary and the return is too small. Buy three good railroad bonds, preferably issues listed on the New York Stock Exchange. We suggest the following: Northern Pacific (C., B. & Q.) joint 4s, 1921, yielding 4.55 per cent.; Central Railroad of New Jersey general 5s, 1987, yielding 4.25 per cent.; Central Pacific first 4s, 1949, yielding 4.30 per cent.

DR. M. C. R., VERMONT. Our idea of an investment opportunity is a bond which has ample, proven security, a good income, an assured market and possessing a fair degree of promise of enhancement of principal. When you secure a bond of this type you have made a good investment. Hundreds of our readers ask us what they may invest surplus funds in. The majority of these persons would be better off if they would subscribe to a reliable financial publication and study the various investments for themselves.

W. S. F., CALIFORNIA. You will realize how utterly futile it would be for THE CHRISTIAN HERALD to keep a workable list of information about mining companies when we tell you that during the last twelve or fifteen years there have been upwards of one-half a million mining enterprises floated in the United States and only a very minute fraction of them have lived beyond the stock-selling stage. It is estimated that out of 15,000 mining companies, one only makes good—hardly a gambler's chance.

P. D., GEORGIA. The Virginian Railway first mortgage 5 per cent. gold bonds are secured by 470 miles of railroad from Norfolk, Va., to Deepwater, W. Va., and all the terminals and equipment thereon, making the value of the property under the mortgage more than $50,000,000, or about twice the funded debt. The present good condition of the company's treasury, the growing value of the property pledged, and the assured market which should at all times exist for the bonds, render them, in our judgment, extremely attractive to the conservative investor.

MISS D. F., ARKANSAS. We suggest a real estate mortgage or real estate bond for your investment. Wall street panics, railway accidents, the laws of supply and demand, restricted markets, crushing corporation taxes, almost confiscatory laws, rascally officials who plunder and wreck corporations for their own personal enrichment and the subsequent impoverishment of the stockholders—none of these things affects the security back of a properly executed first mortgage on real estate whether it be a big city skyscraper on land worth a thousand dollars a foot or on a farm in the irrigated West or on the prairies of Illinois. The security goes on through the months and the years earning the interest on the note without let or hindrance from outside influences. You will find such investments advertised in THE CHRISTIAN HERALD.

T. C. B., MASSACHUSETTS. Unless you are prepared for a possible long period when no dividends shall be paid you should not venture in New Haven Railroad stock. It is believed by many that the stock will sell lower. Tremendous difficulties are ahead for the management. Large sums of new capital must be raised, and this will put another burden on the already nearly crushed company, and on top of all the road's well-nigh hopeless condition of physical tangle and bare treasury comes the statement for the past two months showing vastly decreased earnings. Sometime in the future the New Haven will again get on its feet. Once the shackles of the present alliance with other corporations is broken, when once the company is again, as in the old days, run as a transportation enterprise and not as a good thing for a lot of already over-rich speculators, then the stock will be worth the consideration of the private investor.

6% Should My Savings Earn 6%

Is the question every careful investor asks himself—but FIRST he looks to the security which is offered. For years we have been selling sound investments to persons having $100, $500, $1,000 or more to invest. We number banks, insurance companies, trustees, conservative private investors among our best clients. If others invest successfully through us, why not you?

Ask for our new offering of a prime first mortgage (at about 60%) of ACTUAL CASH VALUE of a strong public service corporation. Send for our "Christian Herald" April list—we handle municipal bonds, as well as corporation bonds. This is a good time to buy—write us today and we will send you valuable information and NEW 1914 investment book.

A good habit is a source of constant pleasure—often profit.

The investor who is buying good bonds is forming a habit that will be a source of never-ending pleasure to him.

The investor who buys good bonds does so through an investment house whose judgment and reputation he realizes is as necessary as the safety of the bond itself. The wise man always seeks the advice of an expert to supplement his own judgment.

THE CITY OF PAUL'S CHILDHOOD

in security and profound respect; she is not seen. It is the mark of thoroughly bad manners to observe a veiled woman in the street. . . . A woman's authority and dignity vanish along with the all-covering veil that she discards. That is the Oriental view which Paul learned in Tarsus."*

In such a city amid such surroundings the young boy Saul was born and spent his most impressionable years. Though in a Grecian city, under Roman rule, his training was that of a strict Jew. Bible stories were his first nursery tales, and his first lessons were some verses from Deuteronomy. This was undoubtedly one of those verses:

What does God require of me
But to worship him and walk in all his ways,
To love and serve him with all my heart and soul,
And to keep the commandments of Moses,
Which God commands me
This day to keep for my good?

For the first four years his mother was his teacher, then at five his father was his chief instructor, while at six he began to go to school and learn by rote many passages from the Old Testament. But in the home he doubtless received the strongest impressions which remained with him and influenced him throughout every year of his long and eventful life. Here he not only learned the Bible and was taught to pray, but as he watched his parents he learned the customs of the strict Jews and the reason for their observance. Thus his early school days proceeded until at about the age of twelve he started for Jerusalem to complete his education under the care of the great Gamaliel.

Before we leave Tarsus for Jerusalem we must think for a moment longer of the boy in his earliest home. Doubtless the name Paul, by which he is known, was not given to him, or assumed by him, at the time of his conversion, as many suppose, but was one of the familiar names of his boyhood. He was probably called Saul by members of his own family, after the first king of Israel, while Paul was the name by which he would be known by all, except the Jews. Paulus, the name by which he calls himself in all his epistles, is a Roman name, and doubtless he intended it to be significant of the fact that he was a Roman citizen.

In addition to the Biblical studies, not a little of the time of Paul's boyhood was occupied in learning a trade, for, according to one of the eminent rabbis, "He that teacheth not his son a trade, doth the same as if he taught him to be a thief." This fact does not argue that Paul was brought up in poverty. Doubtless his parents were comfortably off, and it is supposed that his father's business related to the hair cloth used in making tents, which was one of the great sources of wealth in Cilicia. Nothing is more natural than that the young Paul, since his religion required that he should learn a trade, should become proficient in the art of making tents out of this same material, which was called from the name of his native province "cilicium."

But some suppose that Paul's parents were wealthy, and that when he changed his religion, and became a follower of the despised Nazarene, he was disinherited, and that he alludes to this fact when he declares that for Christ's sake he "suffered the loss of all things."

However, much of conjecture must necessarily surround the details of the early life of St. Paul. It has been said, "The plain, the mountain, the river and the sea still remain to us, the rich harvests of corn still grow luxuriantly after the rains of spring; the same tents of goat's hair are still seen covering the plains in the busy harvest; there is the same solitude and silence in the intolerable dust and heat of the summer, the same sunset lingers on the pointed summits of the Taurus, the same shadows gathered in the deep ravines."

LUXEBERRY WHITE ENAMEL
First Choice for Over Fifty Years
BERRY BROTHERS' VARNISHES
This spring when you decide to build, to varnish your living room floor or refinish your bedrooms in white enamel, remember that Berry Brothers' products have been the first choice of home owners, architects, builders, painters and decorators for over fifty years. They have stood the test of time in every land and continue to give lasting satisfaction.
Liquid Granite is a floor varnish of unusual beauty, toughness, and elasticity. Washing with soap and water has no harmful effect. It stands the hardest wear.
Luxeberry White Enamel is a white enamel that stays white and does not check or crack. For the white finishing of bedrooms, bathrooms, staircases, furniture, etc., there is nothing so fully satisfactory—your choice of a brilliant porcelain-like finish or rich dull effects.

Want your share of that $60,000,000 fund?

IF you're a policyholder in any old-line life-insurance company (except one), you've contributed to an annual fund for agency-expense which in 1912 amounted to more than $60,000,000.

You'll never get your contribution back or any part of it—now; but you need never pay it out again—you can save it—if you will steer clear of life-insurance agents and deal direct with the one non-agency institution in America—the Postal Life Insurance Company.

Net Cost Low in the POSTAL LIFE
because
1st. Commission Dividends ranging, on whole-life policies, up to 40% of the premium go to policyholders the first year.
2d. Renewal-Commission Dividends and Office-Expense Savings covered by the 9½%
guaranteed dividends go to Policyholders in subsequent years.
3. The Usual contingent policy dividends, based on the Company's earnings, still further reduce the cost each year after the first.

THE Company's Health Bureau also performs a most important service in health-conservation by issuing timely Health Bulletins for the benefit of its policyholders, and by providing, for those who so desire, one free medical examination each year—a privilege not accorded by any other company.

It will thus be seen that the Postal Life Saves You Money and Safeguards Your Health.

POSTAL LIFE BUILDING

It will be well worth your while to find out just what the Company will do for you on any standard form of policy—whole life, limited-payment life, endowment, joint-life, monthly-income, or child's welfare.

For quick action simply write and say:

"Mail full insurance particulars for my age as per advertisement in Christian Herald of March 25th," and be sure to give

1. Your Full Name.
2. Your Occupation. 3. The exact Date of Birth

The Company will promptly send you (by mail only) figures for your age with the amount of dividends guaranteed; also additional policy dividends now being paid, showing the Postal's low net cost.

No agent will be sent to visit you; the Company does not employ agents. By dealing direct, you get the benefit of the commission other companies pay the agent.

For broiling or for frying appetizing steak, the Thick Sheet

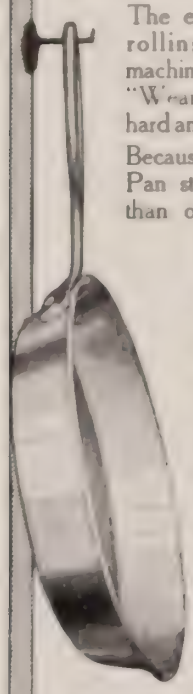
"Wear-Ever"

Aluminum Fry Pan

is excellent because it stores up such a large amount of heat that it sears the meat immediately, cooks thoroughly and quickly.



The enormous pressure of rolling mill and stamping machine makes the metal in "Wear-Ever" pans dense, hard and smooth, ⅛ in. thick.

Because the "Wear-Ever" Pan stores up more heat than ordinary fry pans, a large amount of heat should be applied to the pan when first placed over the fire in order to "fill" the pan with heat. As soon as the pan is heated throughout, the amount of heat should be reduced.

"Wear-Ever" utensils are stamped from thick, hard, sheet aluminum, without joint, seam or solder.

If not obtainable at your dealer's send us 15 two-cent stamps (Canadian stamps accepted), and we will send you prepaid a one-quart "Wear-Ever" Saucepan.

THE MONEY-MAKERS' CLUB

BY MARGARET E. SANGSTER, JR.

I LOVE letters, don't you? I love to have the postman come in with his hands full and his pack loaded, all for me. And sometimes I think that the little talking-bird must have told you my love of them, because the postman is bringing me stacks of them, especially club letters. . . . Would it take all of the charm away if I showed you some letters addressed to me and showed them willingly?

Here is a letter from a "Club Girl" with six grandchildren. She says in a lavender-faint, old-fashioned handwriting:

"I have been interested, oh, so interested, in the club ever since I read about 'Pandora's Box.' But because you speak so much about your girls I had an idea that I was too old for the Money-Makers. Am I?"

Right now I want to tell you that nobody is too old or too young for our club.

A girl writes this tiny word to me: "I love pretty clothes. Do you think I am silly? And I'm going to use the money I make to buy the hats and suits and slippers that I need."

This note drifted in a few days ago from Michigan. The writer says: "I received the club booklet a short while ago and I think it is a grand idea. Of course, I'm going to be a member. I was so excited about it that I forgot to write to you."

My next letter comes up from the Southland. It is just as enthusiastic as the others. "I am crazy about the plans," the letter whispers to me. "Why, the presents are wonderful, and the money is so easy to get, and there is so little work to do."

You would laugh if you could look over my shoulder just now. The letter I am reading is such a funny one. It is from an impressionable schoolgirl and the page is one mass of dashes, exclamation points and underlined words. Do you know when people use exclamation points and underline words? They do it when they are excited and pleased. I shall try to quote the letter exactly:

"I am having such a good time Making Money! You see I have never made money before, and I love to! Yesterday a package came and when I opened it I was surprised. Surprised is a mild word to use! I have been getting such beautiful presents and so many crisp dollar bills lately that I am absolutely scared!"

The next letter comes from a sweet lady from my own State. "I enjoy my work as a member of the Money-Makers' Club," she writes, "and hope to be very successful in it. I feel somehow as if God is helping me, and it makes me very happy and contented."

From West Virginia a note has just been handed to me. On a chance I am going to write down the message it contains—no matter what that message is. (Excuse me, while I open the envelope.) This is what the letter says:

"MY DEAR FRIEND: I am just writing to you to tell you how very glad I am that I belong to your club. I do want to make money so badly that 'Pandora's Box' was a godsend to me. The work is like child's play and the reward is very large."

Some of you are whispering. I can hear you. You are saying: "I think she made up the letter. Why, the mail probably brought in something cross and disappointing instead of that very-much-pleased message." But, girls dear, the cross, dissatisfied letters are about one to every thousand sweet, happy letters. Do you believe me now?

There is just one more letter that I want to show you; one tiny little letter that pleased me more than any I have received for ages. It is from a dear lady who lives in California. She says: "I am so happy! Your Money-Making has helped me such a lot. To-day the sky is a pile of sapphires and the sunshine is a stream of gold. I love you, dear lady, and I love all of the girls, and I love the club. I love everything and everybody. Somehow, I feel that the springtime is coming and God's in his heaven!"

Doesn't a letter like this warm your very heart? Doesn't it make you feel like singing and laughing and having a good time? It makes me feel very happy.

Our club has done a great many rather wonderful things, I think. First of all, of course, we have shown a large army of girls and women how to earn spending money and have in that way helped them to be independent. And then after the first thing come these specials:

We have helped brides to buy pretty clothes for their trousseaus. We have helped two little invalids to have the doctors and treatments they needed. We have shown some artistic little girls the way to getting lessons, and we have made boarding-schools and music and lectures a possibility to others. Besides that, we have sent presents out as special reward of merit to the busiest workers.

The club has been going just about five months. I think we have done wonders, don't you? We have members from every State, Canada, England, South America and Turkey, Mexico and France, and we are growing every minute.

Girls dear, this is an invitation to you. If you need some money and want a beautiful club pin, and pictures and stationery, and frocks and other necessary things that every girl-heart loves, join our club. We may not (but I'm laughing as I say it) be able to help you, but we may be able to do wonders. Won't you give us a chance?

THE EXTREMITY

"I—I," he stammered, "I was thinkin' 'bout the rent—"

Polly rose up and faced him. "The rent!" she said. "I haven't got it, I won't have it." She tore the note from her pocket. "I found this hundred-dollar bill in the road. I meant to keep it, we needed money so. But it's yours, it's one o' the papers you dropped near the library. Take it! Take it!"

Magruder caught it as she threw it toward him. A grin overspread his countenance. "A hundred dollars!" he said. "What I cause to say is, you might as well spend the rent for a present for Jimmy here. I ought to ha' told you when I met you, but I wanted to see me lawyer first. For do you think I'd let Andy Carnegie down me when I'm celebratin' me birthday? Polly, me swateheart, I've been thinkin' o' you two, and—But this a hundred-dollar bill? You hadn't your specs when you picked it up. 'One Hundred Dollars a year saved by buying from Dan, the pedler.' It's one of his new circ'lars he handed out to me."

He laid the paper on the table. "Ould lady, in thirty years you've paid the worth o' this house over and over. The deed's bein' made out. It's me birthday present to you that's often helped me with your charefulness. Forget what you thought the paper was, you honest ould soul. Look! the sun's comin' out—it's cl'arin'. And I've lots to do before I go to town and give Missus Maginnis her green emer'ld ring. Chare up, swateheart! See you later," and he was gone.

"Lord! Lord!" said Polly brokenly.

ANSWERED PRAYERS

IF ALL the letters received for the Answered Prayer Department were printed in full there would scarcely be room for anything else in the weekly issue of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD. We wish that more space could be devoted to these varied requests and to the acknowledgments of prayers answered. But after all, the greatest thing about prayer is not that it brings us the things we ask for, but that it brings us close to God himself. Every true prayer seeks not so much a gift, but God. So every letter referred to in these columns, even if only the initials appear, means that some earnest soul is seeking to come nearer to God. And together this great band of people who believe in him are praying that all these manifold needs will be met and that God himself will use our Prayer League to further his work in the world.

Prayers Answered

A subscriber from Michigan writes: "I sent a request for prayer, and before it was printed the answer had been received." Mrs. H. G. G. writes from Philadelphia: "My niece has returned from the hospital and is gradually regaining her health. I thank the Bowery Mission and all who prayed for her recovery." Mrs. C. K. L., of Millersville, Pa., writes: "Not long since I requested prayer through THE CHRISTIAN HERALD for a brother. God has granted an answer; my brother has found employment—just the kind he has been wanting. A request for another dear one has been answered." Mrs. W. H. writes from Galena, Ill.: "I wish to acknowledge the answer to a prayer for my son that he might secure a position he had sought for." A Reader from Marion, Ind., writes: "Praise the Lord for answering two special prayers for me lately. He saved a dear one, and sent the cure for our little one, who was very sick." S., Tenafly, N. J., expresses "grateful acknowledgment of answer to prayer for the recovery of a beloved daughter from a dangerous illness."

Acknowledgments of answers to prayers have also been received from:

Mrs. J. B., Oswego, N. Y.; Mrs. C. M., Bronson, Mich.; E. C., Brooklyn, N. Y.; Mrs. S., Los Angeles, Calif.; Mrs. J. E. S., Independent, Mo.; L. E. B., Guilford, Me.; Mrs. K., Pine Brook, N. Y.; Mrs. M. L. C., Honey Grove, Texas; Mrs. T. J. B., Montreal, Ind.; Miss E. McC., Anderson, S. C.; Mrs. A. B.; Belle-Plaine, Minn.; R. C. B., Vienna, Va.; Mrs. M. E. T., Perry, N. Y.; C. M. D., Naples, N. Y.; J. G.; Mrs. C. E. M., Saxton, N. Y.; Mrs. M. A. S., Somerville, N. J.; Mrs. E. K. C., Washington; Mrs. J. R. B., Kane, Ill.; Mrs. A. N. C., Topeka, Kan.; M. E. M., Moore's Corner, Mass.; Mrs. A. M., Brighton, Colo.; Mrs. G. W., Cornville, Me.; M. C., Bellville, Ohio; Mrs. E. H. L.; Augusta, Mich.; Mrs. E. R.; Boonville, N. Y.; Mrs. L. D., Cortlandt, N. Y.; E. M. H., Stamford, Texas; Mrs. G. McC., Des Moines, Iowa; Mrs. L. J. H., Winchester, Ill.; Mrs. T. P. H., Washington, D. C.

One of the unexpressed hopes in inaugurating the Prayer League was that local leagues might be established in various centers. Before anything definite was done toward carrying out the idea the welcome news comes, in a letter from Mr. D. L. Gruver, of Rupert, Pa., that a group of men in that town have banded themselves together to join in the noonday prayer. The members of this first local CHRISTIAN HERALD Prayer League are Frank R. Adams, Frank Bamby, B. M. Betz, Lincoln Boody, Andrew Z. Duck, Howard Fisher, John W. Geiger, D. L. Gruver, Simon Long, Charles H. McBride, Charles Mensch, Albert Newman, F. B. Rhone, Arthur Roberts, C. C. Roberts, Robert Wirt, Wesley Wright. We shall be glad to get news of the formation of other leagues and brief accounts of their plans and experiences.

Mrs. E. H. L., for the success of the prohibition amendment bill now before Congress.

Mention was made last week of little nine-year-old Catherine Winters, who disappeared from her parents' home at Newcastle, Ind., some time ago. A request comes from her father and mother, Dr. and Mrs. W. A. Winters, that the members of the Prayer League join in prayer for her safe return. S. M. requests prayer that he may become a true Christian; M. A. (to know that she is saved); Mrs. I. W. (for a deeper work of grace); Miss M. H. (to be blessed spiritually and to know that she is a child of God).; Mrs. A. A. (to have the assurance that sins are forgiven and to find peace); E. D. (to be a better Christian); C. N. (for a clean heart); D. R. (to be brought back to the fold). E. B. L. asks prayers that the failing eyesight of her widowed mother be restored.

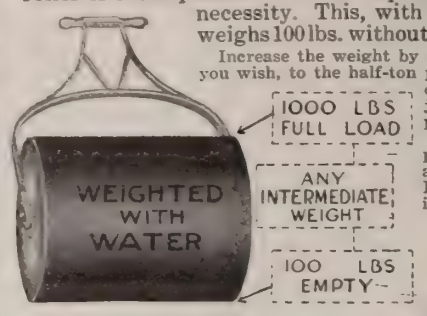
"ANY-WEIGHT" WATER-BALLAST-ROLLERS | MAKE BEAUTIFUL LAWNS

A LAWN results from frequently rolling a patch of grass with machines of the many weights it demands in its various moods. One fixed weight roller is incompetent—a dozen impossible—the "ANYWEIGHT" a positive necessity. This, with its acetylene welded hollow steel shell, weighs 100 lbs. without ballast—just right for wet Spring lawn.



Increase the weight by filling hollow shell with water, drop by drop if you wish, to the half-ton pressure demanded by dry summer lawn, drive or tennis court. It's filled or emptied in a jiffy—the machine fits the job; the price any pocketbook.

One or two sections of hardened and rust proofed steel—roller bearings—steel handles—adjustable counterpoise weights if ordered. Fills and empties at either end of drum near its end, without upending.

Buys This Improved Guaranteed Vacuum Cleaner & Sweeper at $11.20 Less Than Catalogue Price

30 Days' Free Trial

Never before has such a liberal offer been made; you can't afford to pass it by. Think of it! Buying a high-grade $25.00 vacuum cleaner and sweeper for only $13.80 at one dollar a month; or cash with order, $13.30. Why, you would never know you had paid for it—just like finding one. Madam, by all means take advantage of my free trial offer given below. Don't continue to use the old-style, back-breaking broom that drives the dirt into the carpet, raises a big dust, makes a hiding place for germs, and endangers the lives of your little ones as well as your own. Adopt the modern, easy, sensible, effective method by using

No Aches The "Smith" No Dust

New Model 47

Three Machines in One

It can be used as a vacuum cleaner, a carpet sweeper, or both combined. Has a beautiful mahogany finish; is high-grade in every detail. Guaranteed for one year. It's light-weight, of neat design and is perfectly noiseless; felt lined top eliminates that drumming sound; wheels are rubber-tired and have 14 ball-bearings each, 56 in all. It has been tried and proven a perfect machine under all conditions of service. It is the kind that will stand the wear and tear. You can use it a lifetime and the chances are it will never require repairs or even adjusting. The total weight is only 12 pounds. A child can operate it. It is easy to clean, no littering up the floor or carpets. The sweeper picks up matches, threads, strings, needles, etc., while the vacuum cleaner sucks out the dirt and dust. Gets every bit of it. Children can play on the floor without soiling the hands or clothing after using it. It will save its price each year in doctor's bills eliminated.

DO YOU KNOW YOUR BIBLE?

THE correct answers and Honor Roll for Question List No. 2 will be published next week. The new questions, List No. 3, are given herewith. Notice that in this 1914 course it is in most cases necessary to make definite statements in your answers; the reference alone cannot be counted correct, unless that is all that is asked for.

List No. 3

1. In what three books of the Bible is the narrative of Hezekiah contained?
2. What verse states the excellence of his character in the highest terms?
3. What works of religious reform did Hezekiah undertake at the beginning of his reign, both outside and within Jerusalem?
4. To what cause did he attribute the disaster of Judah and what did he declare to be his purpose?
5. (a) What feast did Hezekiah re-establish, and whom did he invite to it? (b) What eloquent exhortation to consecration is found in his letter of invitation? (c) What emotion did the people experience at this celebration?
6. What great national disaster overtook the kingdom of Israel while Hezekiah was king of Judah?
7. (a) What king of Assyria sent expeditions against Judah during Hezekiah's reign? (b) In what forceful and eloquent remark did Hezekiah express the difference between the resources of the armies of this king and his own?
8. (a) What did Hezekiah do with an insulting letter received from a representative of the king of Assyria? (b) What was the result?
9. What fault in Hezekiah's life is recorded?
10. What promises were made to him through the prophet Isaiah on the occasion of his serious illness?

TRUST AND REJOICE

ALTHOUGH no fruit be on our vines,
No herd within the stall,
Yet still we'll trust Jehovah God;
He knows about it all.

Although the fig tree fails to bloom,
And harvest seemeth small,
Yet still we'll trust Jehovah God,
And on his name we'll call.

Although the cares of life may crowd
And burdens heavy fall,
Yet still we'll trust Jehovah God
And praise his name through all.

WANTED TO KNOW

The Truth About Grape-Nuts Food

It doesn't matter so much what you hear about a thing, it's what you know that counts. And correct knowledge is most likely to come from personal experience.

"About a year ago," writes a N.Y. man, "I was bothered by indigestion, especially during the forenoon. I tried several remedies without any permanent improvement.

"My breakfast usually consisted of oatmeal, steak or chops, bread, coffee and some fruit.

"Hearing so much about Grape-Nuts, I concluded to give it a trial and find out if all I had heard of it was true.

"So I began with Grape-Nuts and cream, soft-boiled eggs, toast, a cup of Postum and some fruit. Before the end of the first week I was rid of the acidity of the stomach and felt much relieved.

"By the end of the second week all traces of indigestion had disappeared and I was in first rate health once more. Before beginning this course of diet, I never had any appetite for lunch, but now I can enjoy the meal at noon time."

"I've proved for myself what those Doctors say about Sanatogen"

THERE is tremendous weight in the written opinions of over 19,000 practising physicians. But the strongest proof for you is the proof of your own experience.

It is what Sanatogen does in nourishing your exhausted nerves, in giving you better sleep, appetite, digestion and energy, that will give you the greatest confidence.

Your decision—today—to try Sanatogen, is a decision to prove for yourself that what so many American and European physicians and so many active, thinking professional men and women have said about Sanatogen's service, may apply with equal force and blessing to YOU.

Sanatogen is sold by good druggists everywhere in three sizes, from $1.00.

Sanatogen received the Grand Prize at the International Congress of Medicine, London, 1913

Prof. Thos. B. Stillman, M.S. Ph. D.
The well-known research chemist of New York, writes:
"The chemical union of the constituents of Sanatogen is a true one, representative of the highest skill in the formation of a product containing phosphorus in the organic phosphate condition, and so combined that digestion and assimilation of Sanatogen are rendered complete with the greatest ease."

Mme. Sarah Grand,
Author of "The Heavenly Twins," writes:
"I began to take Sanatogen after nearly 4 years' of enforced idleness from extreme debility, and felt the benefit almost immediately, and now, after taking it steadily 3 times a day for 12 weeks, I find myself able to enjoy both work and play again and also am able to do as much of both as I ever did."

SANATOGEN
RECOGNIZED BY OVER 19,000 PHYSICIANS

Write for "Nerve Health Regained"—a handsomely illustrated booklet. The basic facts of health, the scientific "HOW" and "WHY" of Sanatogen, told here from the physician's point of view, are as remarkable as they are convincing. Address THE BAUER CHEMICAL CO., 26 F Irving Place, New York.

TIRED OUT

From the painting by Theodor Alt

IT is the little personal touches about a home that count. The artistic hanging of a drapery, the harmonious grouping of furniture, the sunny freshness of a newly washed curtain, the glowing cleanness of ornaments and bric-a-brac—such things as these help make home homelike and show not merely industry on the part of the housekeeper but a knack of properly caring for fine things.

Reduced to its simplest form, this knack of keeping silver, china, linens, laces, upholstery, etc., at their best is nothing more than a knowledge of the possibilities of Ivory Soap.

Of course, special hints sometimes are helpful, such as the directions below for rehanging a lace door panel. But the one thing necessary is to realize how many things ordinarily never attempted with soap may be accomplished to entire satisfaction with the mild, pure Ivory.

To suggest some of these unusual uses we have compiled a booklet of about 100 recipes received from various sources. These recipes will be found exceedingly interesting and exceptionally helpful. You may have a copy by asking for "Unusual Uses of Ivory Soap." Address The Procter & Gamble Co., Dept. U-1, Cincinnati, Ohio.

To Wash a Lace Door Panel

First, wash the glass in the door. Then wash the lace in the usual way in a good suds of Ivory Soap and lukewarm water. Rinse well, then starch. Slip in rods while panel is wet, place in position on door, pull lace straight and let it dry. This prevents shrinking and makes the panel look like new.

A WEEKLY ILLUSTRATED NEWSPAPER FOR THE HOME

THE FAMOUS "HAYSTACKS" ON THE NAVAJO RESERVATION, ARIZONA

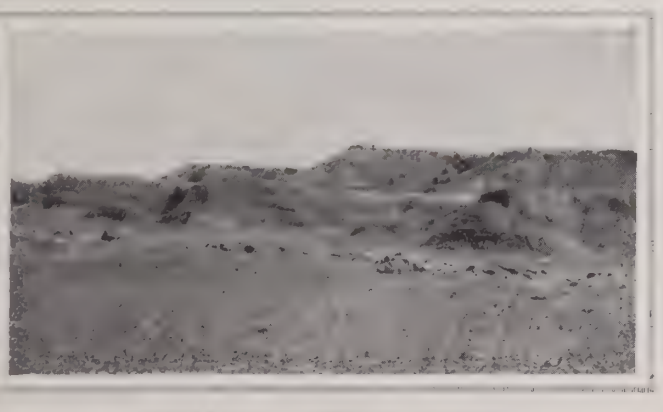
OUR SOUTHWESTERN BEDOUINS

BY JOHN L. COWAN

THOSE who are accustomed to lament the approaching extinction of the "noble red man" leave out of consideration the Navajos, whose numbers are increasing with sufficient rapidity to make the extermination of that tribe appear one of the most unlikely of contingencies. In 1900 it was officially estimated that the tribe numbered about sixteen thousand persons. It is believed by missionaries and other white residents on the reservation that the tribe now numbers at least twenty-eight thousand.

The birth rate of the Navajos is no higher than that of the Pueblos, Cheyennes, Utes and other tribes. That they have thus far withstood contact with civilization, with results less disastrous than is usually the case with aboriginal peoples, is due to their refusal to be coaxed or coerced into the white man's way of living.

Their reservation covers approximately 20,000 square miles, in northeastern Arizona and northwestern New Mexico. In addition, they occupy the major part of the Hopi reservation, and thousands of square miles of public lands and railroad lands in New Mexico, Arizona and southern Utah. Roughly speaking, the territory they occupy extends 200 miles from north to south and 250 miles from east to west. Most of this region is 5,000 feet and more above sea level, with an excessively dry climate, hot in summer, but not extremely cold in winter. Much of the land is desert or semi-desert in character, although a large area is well timbered, and the extent of pasture land is very great.



THE PAINTED DESERT OF ARIZONA

The Navajos are the least gregarious of native American tribes, never congregating in towns and villages, and never forming permanent communities. Their homes, called hogans, are mere hovels, built of stones or the trunks and limbs of trees, with rounded roofs thickly covered with earth. A smoke vent in the roof and a doorway in the side are the only means of ventilation. In cold weather (which is never of long duration in that portion of the Southwest), these cave-like structures are kept tightly closed, so that no one but an Indian could live in them at all. But when springtime comes, the Navajo squaw constructs a summer cottage, sometimes consisting of no more than a windbreak of sagebrush around a circular cleared space. Sometimes the summer hogan is a shady bower under a desert cedar tree, with leafy branches piled around as a measure of protection against winds and sandstorms. Sometimes it is a shelter formed by the utilization of old pieces of canvas, sheet iron and other castaway material picked up around the refuse dumps of the railroad towns. In any event, the dwellers in the summer hogans are practically in the open all the time. Some protection is afforded from the rays of the noonday sun, and the force of the prevailing winds is broken, but sunshine penetrates to every part of the rude shelter some time in the day, and fresh air is never for a moment excluded.

Beyond doubt, the summer hogan is one of the most important factors in promoting the health of the Navajos. Another factor of equal importance is found in the semi-nomadic habits of the people. They are not true nomads, but desert Bedouins, moving whenever necessary to secure better pasturage or a more abundant water supply for their sheep and goats. In the course of the summer, an entire family may travel thus for hundreds of miles. When winter comes, they may or may not return to the winter hogan of the year before.

The Navajos, like all other Indians, are filthy and uncleanly in their habits. To remove garbage, refuse or decaying animal or vegetable matter from the vicinity of their homes never occurs to them. A hogan has not been occupied long until it becomes offensive, and the squaws never "clean house." It is, then, fortunate that the family moves often.

Another practice of the Navajos that promotes health among them, however repugnant it may be to us, is their disposition of the dead. In the presence of the living, the Navajo is without fear, but his terror of the dead is abject and unreasoning. The dead are believed to be possessed only of malevolent feelings toward the survivors, with unlimited powers for working evil upon those who carelessly place themselves within the power of the spirits. So when any one dies, the only anxiety of the surviving relatives is to get rid of the body as quickly as possible. If there are any white men living in the neighborhood, an effort is made to induce them to perform the offices of undertaker. If not, the disposition of the body depends somewhat upon circumstances. If the hogan is built of wood, it is set on fire and burned with the body in it. If of stone, the body is usually taken outside, the entrance to the hogan closed up with stones or sticks, and a hole made in the wall opposite to permit the evil spirits to enter and depart,

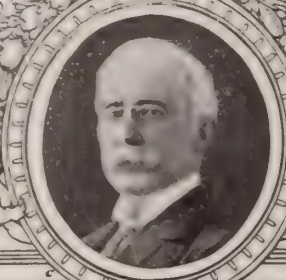
WHAT IS CONVERSION?



A SERMON

BY

J. H. JOWETT, D.D.*

"I AM . . . I will arise and go to my father, and will say unto him, Father, I have sinned against heaven, and before thee, and am no more worthy to be called thy son." Luke 15: 18-19

THIS man's conversion began when he began to think. There came a moment, in the midst of his waywardness and sinfulness and want, when he deliberately pulled himself together, and began to think, and that moment marks the beginning of his conversion. There came a pause, a quiet lull in the awful storm, an interval of saneness, and in the Master's vivid phrase, "he came to himself." "He came to himself!" Why, that is how we speak of a man who has been wandering in delirium, whose thoughts have been moving beyond the control of his will—when his reason returns, we speak of the man as having "come to himself."

And so the Master speaks of sin as a kind of delirium, and moral sanity begins to return when the man lays hold of his thoughts, calls them in from their delirious wandering, and fixes them strongly upon himself. It is then that the man can be said to have come to himself. That is the beginning of conversion, when a man's will controls his thoughts, and he says, "Now let me see where I am." And so the prodigal began to take stock. He looked at his rags, his dirt, his wretched and emaciated condition; he looked at his surroundings; he looked at the way along which his life had journeyed; he called to mind his wastefulness, his lust, his debauchery, his violent outrage upon truth and purity, his open contempt for the claims of conscience and the sanctities of home; and as he gazed upon all these things, he began to see himself, his very self, and in that vision of his abject and wretched self there was contained the beginning of a return to moral and spiritual health.

It is even so to-day. We must pull up, and fix our thoughts upon ourselves. We must see ourselves, and realize our condition. Now that cannot be done cursorily; it cannot be done hastily. It is the fruit of calm and determined deliberateness. If a man wishes to see himself, to take stock of himself, he will have to go about it in the same careful and painstaking and detailed manner with which he takes stock of the goods in his warehouse. Don't let any man assume that it requires less care to know the contents of his life than to know the contents of his shop.

It cannot be known at a glance; it demands a detailed inspection. But how rarely we find men deliberately ransacking their hearts, turning over moral and spiritual possessions, noting the things which are moth-eaten, the endowments which are running to waste, the dispositions which are sour or filthy, noting everything, labeling everything, assigning to everything its value. How rarely you find it! But they did it in the olden days. It has been done in every age by all who have attained to saintliness. Turn to the Psalms. What have you there? You have the richest devotional literature in the world. And what is it all about? The human heart, the multiform and amazing intricacies of the human heart. We are permitted to look into the very books of men who have made determined examinations of their inner life, who have sought out and marked their moral and spiritual contents. That is what the saints of the Old Testament did. They inspected their hearts as with a candle and knew them. And that has been characteristic of all who shine in that procession in holiness, they have taken a candle and searched their hearts. Cannot their works and acts have intense and earnest must have been their search.

Take that precious little book, The Devout Life, by St. Francis or The Imitation of Christ, by Thomas a Kempis, or take any of the works, say, all the works of John Henry Newman, and you will find on every page an amazing knowledge of the human heart, and the hearing each saintly writer had searched and known his own. Why, was not this one of the chief characteristics of our great Puritan forefathers, at any rate of those whose glory is their radiance of spirit? They busied themselves in the inner sanctuaries of the heart. They were great at introspection, great at moral analysis, great at tracking a sin to its roots, and bringing it out to the light. They were great at self-searching, these strong old Puritans, and in all their preaching they sought to get their hearts to take a candle and go round their inner life and take stock of their very selves.

But you say, "There is something very morbid in all this, something very morbid in turning over one's moral sores and gazing at them." It is far better to seek them out, and gaze at them, and know your condition than to have a moral putrefaction proceeding of which you are absolutely ignorant. I cannot consider it a sign of health for a man to be unconscious of his moral disease. I urge you then to look within, take a long, searching look. Track the ravages of sin. Bring out to the light the unclean things, and name them. Don't give them vague and general names. Label them with accuracy. Call that "falsehood," and that "jealousy," and that "malice," and that "backbiting," and that "passion," and that "lust," and that "excessive love of money," and that "excessive love of drink." Give them their proper names. Overhaul your purposes, and motives, and ambitions; turn them over as you would turn over a stone in a meadow, and mark the vermin that lurk beneath. If you have no time to do it in the day, then in God's name spend a night about it! It would be a night well spent for any man to use the hours of deep silence to commune with his own heart, and meet his own soul face to face! You would realize your condition; you would know yourself! Then, when you have seen your real self, look at your ideal self! When you see what you are, look at what you might be. Look up!

In some of the smaller Swiss towns the streets are very narrow, and very dirty; filth and refuse are allowed to accumulate until in many places there is an intolerable stench. But if you look up, even from the very midst of the uncleanness, you may see the great emblem of purity, the mountain summit, clothed with the dazzling white of the spotless snow. And when you are tracking the narrow byways of your own heart, amid all its defilements and corruption, lift up your eyes unto the hills, unto that beauty of holiness, whiter than snow, that unsullied purity whose loveliness we see in Christ, and say: "Such is my Father, such ought I to be; for such was I created"; and out of such startling contrast will be born again the cry of the smitten prodigal, "I am not worthy to be called thy son."

Now, follow the prodigal a little further. The deliberation is followed by a great decision: "I will arise and go to my father." He solemnly decides to have done with the old life, to forsake it, and to go home. Mark this well. It is what we in these days call decision for Christ. A man looks at his own heart and God, and sees his real self. Then he registers a solemn vow that the old life shall be ended, and henceforth he will be on the side of the Lord. Now that moment of decision is a moment of infinite significance. Its influence cannot be measured. I am afraid that decisions for Christ are often made in partial thoughtlessness, or at any rate not with that deep seriousness and gravity which the occasion demands. They are often made in circumstances which are vague and unimpressive. And so the decision is carved lightly, when it ought to be graven deep.

I have known people who have decided for Christ, say at some revival meeting, but the decision has been so lightly made that it was like a resolution written in sand, which the first strong wave of temptation wiped utterly away. Now I would invest the act of decision with great solemnity. I would surround it with everything that is calculated to inspire awe and deep soberness of mind. I would make it as solemn as a death-bed scene, for what else is it but a death-bed scene? When a man decides for Christ, it is the death of the old life! He is closing a volume. He is ringing the knell of a wasted past, and the act ought to be performed with an impressiveness which will remain engraved upon his mind forever.

Let me go more into detail. Suppose there be a young fellow who is weary of his past life, who is conscious of his own unworthiness, and who inclines to decide for Christ. Well, of course you may here and now, in the secrecy of your own heart, make the great decision. But I would do more than that. I would seek out some Christian man, a good, true, trusty counselor, one who knows God and loves him, and yearns for others to know and love him too. Tell him you are deciding for Christ, and you wish to register the great decision. Take a pen in your hand, and on your knees write out your decision. Let it be something like this: "In the presence of my Saviour and my brother, I now resolve that this moment shall mark a turning-point in my life. I will arise and go to my Father." Perhaps you say it is not necessary to have the friend present. All right, be alone, only let the act of decision be one of clear, solemn definiteness, and let it be registered in some outward form. It will redeem the decision from all vagueness. I know of nothing which could be more impressive than for a man to be, if you like, alone, in his own chamber, upon his knees, writing out a solemn pledge, a great moral decision. It would be a moment, the influence of which would follow him to his dying day. I am concerned that a man's decision should be registered deep, in characters that can never be effaced, and I point out to you a plain course which I know will help to this attainment.

Then, after the decision, what then? "He went to his father." He threw himself, with all his sins and wants, upon the father's love. He made a full, frank, manly, yet humble confession of his waywardness and sin, and then flung himself, in all his helplessness, upon the father's mercy. Decision must be followed by absolute submission. We must go to our Father, and take with us our polluted affection, which is like a befouled stream, our violated conscience, which is like an injured bell, and our enfeebled will, which is like a broken reed, and we must cast ourselves upon his love. Tell him that you have heard that in spite of all your sins Jesus has made it possible for a sinner to become a saint, and you are leaning altogether upon his word. Tell him that morally and spiritually you are a great invalid, but that you have heard that Jesus is full of saving health, and you humbly crave to share his strength. Tell him that you have loved the garish day, and, spite of fears, pride ruled your will, and humbly ask him to remember not past years!

Arise, and go to your Father, and tell him that you are his unworthy son, and ask him to take you home, into the habitation of purity and truth. Arise, and just go to your Father, and tell him that you have resolved to give up your past life, that henceforth you want to be numbered among the pure and good, that you don't know how it all is to be accomplished, but that there is One who has promised to take the work into his own hands, and you humbly leave it all with him, with Jesus of Nazareth, the friend of publicans and sinners!

What then?—

> If I ask him to receive me, will he say me nay?
> Not till earth and not till heaven pass away.

The Late Sydney Whittemore

IN an article on the life and work of the late Mr. Sydney Whittemore, the Rev. A. B. Simpson gives some interesting facts which did not appear in the recent notice of Mr. Whittemore's death in THE CHRISTIAN HERALD, and which we gladly reproduce. "Mr. Whittemore," writes Dr. Simpson, "was born of a widely known and old New York family. He was a reserved man of great force and character and many varied gifts. He was a fine example of business integrity, an impressive speaker and a wise counselor. His highest ministry, perhaps, was in his personal contact with individual workers of the various rescue missions, and the files of his office are full of the most touching expressions of comfort and gratitude from those to whom he was a blessing. . . . Mr. Whittemore during the last few years threw himself with special energy and great effectiveness into the rescue mission work not only of New York City but of the entire country. He was elected three times in succession president of what is now known as the International Union of Gospel Workers, which embraces the United States and Canada, and presided at a great meeting of this society held a few months ago in Calvary Baptist Church, New York. Mr. Whittemore was an honored elder of the Presbyterian Church until his death."

DAILY MEDITATION

FOR EVERY DAY IN THE YEAR, BASED ON THE WORDS OF JESUS

BY PROFESSOR W. H. T. DAU

SUNDAY, April 5. Mark 4: 39. "Peace, be still." The calm voyage across the placid lake has been sadly interrupted by a great storm. For a while the disciples have battled against the fury of wind and waves. No doubt, anxious glances have been cast in the direction of the Master. Yes, he, the Shepherd of Israel who neither slumbers nor sleeps, is enjoying in his assumed humanity that boon which God grants to his beloved when they are weary. He is a true man. But look! Presently he stands in the water-logged ship in the grandeur of his majesty. Human help had not availed to keep the bark afloat. The Lord of the earth and sea must now come to the rescue. He chides the wind, and he speaks to the sea as a master speaks to his dog. One word suffices. The uproar of the elements subsides, and there is a great calm. "What manner of man is this, that even the wind and the sea obey him?" He is the God who made the sea and who rides on the wings of the wind as on his chariot. This storm on Lake Tiberias has ever been regarded as descriptive of the fate of the church, tossed with many a tempest. All the powers of earth and hell have seemed to combine to destroy it. Innumerable times its ruin has seemed imminent. Suddenly a brief word has been heard above the strife of tongues and the fury of persecution, and quiet has been restored with such astonishing promptness that the disciples have said: The Lord has rebuked our adversaries, and they are scattered. "God is our refuge and strength, a very present help in trouble. Therefore will not we fear, though the waters roar and be troubled. God is in our midst; we shall not be moved: God will help us, and that right early."

MONDAY, April 6. Mark 4: 40. "Why are ye so fearful? how is it that ye have no faith?" A worse storm than that which was rioting in the Sea of Galilee had broken loose in the hearts of the disciples. Their hearts were tossed with terrible doubts and fears. The spectacle of the majestic unconcern of their sleeping Master should have sufficed to dissipate all fears of the safe ending of their voyage. But the lesson was lost on them. After quelling the uprising of the elements Jesus now addresses himself to calming the trembling spirits of his disciples. He remands them to the position of safety which they had foolishly quitted. Back to faith, to unwavering trust that in the company of Jesus no real harm can betide the disciple, and that all things must work together for good to them that love God! Our agonies become memorable to us because of the discoveries we made in them how weak our boasted confidence is when put to a serious test. We may even laugh at our fears after we have been placed in safety. But the best use we can make of our experiences of diffidence, timidity, and despair is to humble ourselves before the Lord and acknowledge that we cannot even depend on our faith without his support. "If it had not been the Lord who was on our side, the waters had overwhelmed us." Let us look unto Jesus, the Author and Finisher of our faith.

TUESDAY, April 7. Mark 5: 8, 9. "Come out of the man, thou unclean spirit. What is thy name?" We have here an exchange of words between Jesus and an unclean spirit. As Jesus was about to utter the powerful command that would force the devil to quit the poor demoniac, perhaps as he was just giving the ejecting order, the unclean spirit essays to stay the word of Omnipotence by a passionate plea to be let alone. The unclean spirit knows that when Jesus chooses to employ his almighty power his word is irresistible. It is the word of "the Son of the most high God." The request of the unclean spirit was not granted. It was the demand of a maddened fool. Thus might a convicted murderer violently expostulate with his executioner. Still, Jesus momentarily arrests his action to ask the spirit a question. Why? To show to the bystanders the appalling magnitude of the demoniac's misery and to manifest the greatness of his own power over the forces of hell. A legion of devils assail a single person! How vast must the multitude of them all be! The devil who apes God in all things also wants to be a "lord of hosts." But the Lord who came to destroy the works of the devil is mightier than the unnumbered hosts of hell.

WEDNESDAY, April 8. Matthew 8: 32. "Go." We may put into this curt order of the Lord in intensified form all the contempt and disgust with which we spurn something foul, loathsome and hideous. But it is a comfort to know that the devil must be a beggar even for such a contemptuous word. The entire action belongs in the chapter of the permissive providence of God. The final judgment still being in abeyance, our Lord in his earthly estate still recognizes the necessary existence of evil and the operation of the forces of evil among men. He permits the pecuniary loss to the owners of the swine and rouses them to a perception of the wicked powers that were busy among them and of their own damnable indifference to their misery. The catastrophe here related made a great impression throughout the country of the Gadarenes. But they failed to appreciate the brief visit of the heavenly Stranger who had come among them. They missed a grand spiritual opportunity because they thought more of their swine than of their Redeemer.

THURSDAY, April 9. Mark 5: 19. "Go home to thy friends, and tell them how great things the Lord hath done for thee, and hath had compassion on thee." The cured demoniac wished to go with Jesus, rendering him grateful service and feasting his soul continually on the compassion which Jesus had shown him. But our Lord wants him to remain in his country. He is to be a living monument to these gross and callous Gadarenes of the lovingkindness and mercy of the Son of man who came to seek and save that which was lost. The mission of Jesus might have been misinterpreted by the Gadarenes who were wincing under the pecuniary loss which the fury of the devils had caused them with his permission. In their fellow citizen they were to behold a proof every day that the mission of Jesus was not to destroy but to restore. Those who have obtained help from the Lord in their afflictions may here read a direction that concerns them also: they are to be living witnesses of the saving grace of God. The reclaimed drunkard, the lewd person, the miser, the prodigal, from whom the devils of lust and passion have been expelled, owe it to Jesus to tell their friends how great things Jesus has done for them and has had compassion on them.

FRIDAY, April 10. Matthew 9: 2. "Son, be of good cheer; thy sins be forgiven thee." It is a perfectly Scriptural thought to connect suffering in general with sin. The connection is shown upon the very entrance of sin into this world, Gen. 3: 14-19. But it is not for us to pass judgment rashly on particular sufferers, as we do not know the reasons and purposes for which God has afflicted them. See John 9: 2, 3. In the case before us the encouraging greeting of our Lord is intended to lead the party to an understanding of the greater mercy which they must seek from him. They probably had thought only of the physical restoration of their crippled comrade. Jesus would have them think of the awful cause of all suffering, and of their friend's spiritual misery. He would remove the root of the evil rather than cut down a few noxious branches. He would have the soul filled with the cheering assurance of God's pardon, ere he eases the pain-racked limbs. Yes, that is the greatest boon which the mercy of God in Christ Jesus can bestow on us: the divine pardon which gives us the assurance that our guilt has been canceled and we are made righteous in the sight of God. That brings a great peace to the troubled conscience, and makes the heart throb with a deep joy. Hear Paul: "Being justified by faith, we have peace with God through our Lord Jesus Christ: by whom also we have access by faith into this grace wherein we stand, and rejoice in the hope of the glory of God."

SATURDAY, April 11. Matthew 9: 4-6. "Wherefore think ye evil in your hearts? For whether is easier, to say, Thy sins be forgiven thee; or to say, Arise, and walk? But that ye may know that the Son of man hath power on earth to forgive sins, Arise, take up thy bed, and go unto thine house." For a mere man to assume authority to sit in judgment on the relation of one of his fellow men to his Maker, for a mere man to remit or retain the sin of his fellow man at his option, for mere men to compel a fellow man to confess every minute detail of a sinful act, and then to make a traffic of the forgiveness of sin, that is indeed blasphemy. Of such an act the Jews at Capernaum thought Jesus guilty. He read their thoughts. They denied that he had authority to forgive sin, because they denied his divinity. While Jesus at once asserts his divinity by a divine act which they must admit, he emphasizes in his reply to them the fact that the power to forgive sin is a power which he has as "the Son of man." He must exercise it, and that here on earth, as the appointed Redeemer, if he is at all to discharge his office as the Redeemer. He has afterwards commissioned his people, and especially his Gospel messengers in his name to declare forgiveness to be open to the penitent.

THE GREATEST MISSION FIELD

IN VIEW of recent developments in China, including the rehabilitation of Confucianism as the official moral code of the nation, special significance attaches to statistics just compiled under the auspices of the evangelical churches in the republic. The total Protestant evangelical church membership in the nation is 470,000, with 548 ordained Chinese pastors and 5,364 unordained workers, 4,712 Chinese Christian school teachers, 1,789 Bible women, 496 native assistants and other native helpers, bringing the aggregate of those engaged in Christian service at the present time up to 15,500. There are 2,955 Christian congregations. America and Europe are represented by 5,452 white missionaries. The Christian schools have 86,241 primary scholars and 31,384 in the intermediate schools and colleges. A single denomination—the Methodist Church—supports 600 primary schools with 12,923 pupils, and has a church membership of 37,000. Last year, the native Christian congregations contributed $320,000 for the spread of the Gospel among their own people. Yet with all this magnificent growth, representing probably a million, in and out of the churches, who have been reached by the Gospel, it is at best only a substantial beginning. China's 400,000,000 constitute the greatest of missionary problems. While the strength of the missionary army is steadily increasing, there is one part of the Gospel campaign in China which is far from receiving the attention it deserves. We must win the hearts of the children, who in the coming years will themselves be soul-winners. This view is being strongly impressed upon the missionaries, who, by their devoted labors in schools, industrial institutions and mission orphanages, are making splendid progress with the rising generation. Their appeal to our readers to help support 1,000 children in the orphanages is one that should be taken advantage of by all who hope and pray that China may yet be won for Christ.

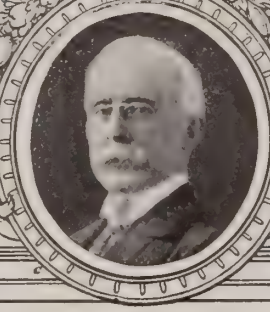
WHAT IS CONVERSION?



A SERMON

BY

J. H. JOWETT, D.D.*

TEXT: "I will arise and go to my father, and will say unto him, Father, I have sinned against heaven, and before thee, and am no more worthy to be called thy son." Luke 15: 18-19

THIS man's conversion began when he began to think. There came a moment, in the midst of his waywardness and sinfulness and want, when he deliberately pulled himself together, and began to think, and that moment marks the beginning of his conversion. There came a pause, a quiet lull in the awful storm, an interval of saneness, and in the Master's vivid phrase, "he came to himself." "He came to himself!" Why, that is how we speak of a man who has been wandering in delirium, whose thoughts have been moving beyond the control of his will—when his reason returns, we speak of the man as having "come to himself."

I would make it as solemn as a death-bed scene, for what else is it but a death-bed scene? When a man decides for Christ, it is the death of the old life! He is closing a volume. He is ringing the knell of a wasted past, and the act ought to be performed with an impressiveness which will remain engraved upon his mind forever.

Let me go more into detail. Suppose there be a young fellow who is weary of his past life, who is conscious of his own unworthiness, and who inclines to decide for Christ. Well, of course you may here and now, in the secrecy of your own heart, make the great decision. But I would do more than that. I would seek out some Christian man, a good, true, trusty counselor, one who knows God and loves him, and yearns for others to know and love him too. Tell him you are deciding for Christ, and you wish to register the great decision. Take a pen in your hand, and on your knees write out your decision. Let it be something like this: "In the presence of my Saviour and my brother, I now resolve that this moment shall mark a turning-point in my life. I will arise and go to my Father." Perhaps you say it is not necessary to have the friend present. All right, be alone, only let the act of decision be one of clear, solemn definiteness, and let it be registered in some outward form. It will redeem the decision from all vagueness. I know of nothing which could be more impressive than for a man to be, if you like, alone, in his own chamber, upon his knees, writing out a solemn pledge, a great moral decision. It would be a moment, the influence of which would follow him to his dying day. I am concerned that a man's decision should be registered deep, in characters that can never be effaced, and I point out to you a plain course which I know will help to this attainment.

Then, after the decision, what then? "He went to his father." He threw himself, with all his sins and wants, upon the father's love. He made a full, frank, manly, yet humble confession of his waywardness and sin, and then flung himself, in all his helplessness, upon the father's mercy. Decision must be followed by absolute submission. We must go to our Father, and take with us our polluted affection, which is like a befouled stream, our violated conscience, which is like an injured bell, and our enfeebled will, which is like a broken reed, and we must cast ourselves upon his love. Tell him that you have heard that in spite of all your sins Jesus has made it possible for a sinner to become a saint, and you are leaning altogether upon his word. Tell him that morally and spiritually you are a great invalid, but that you have heard that Jesus is full of saving health, and you humbly crave to share his strength. Tell him that you have loved the garish day, and, spite of fears, pride ruled your will, and humbly ask him to remember not past years!

Arise, and go to your Father, and tell him that you are his unworthy son, and ask him to take you home, into the habitation of purity and truth. Arise, and just go to your Father, and tell him that you have resolved to give up your past life, that henceforth you want to be numbered among the pure and good, that you don't know how it all is to be accomplished, but that there is One who has promised to take the work into his own hands, and you humbly leave it all with him, with Jesus of Nazareth, the friend of publicans and sinners!

What then?—

> If I ask him to receive me, will he say me nay?
> Not till earth and not till heaven pass away.

The Late Sydney Whittemore

IN an article on the life and work of the late Mr. Sydney Whittemore, the Rev. A. B. Simpson gives some interesting facts which did not appear in the recent notice of Mr. Whittemore's death in THE CHRISTIAN HERALD, and which we gladly reproduce. "Mr. Whittemore," writes Dr. Simpson, "was born of a widely known and old New York family. He was a reserved man of great force and character and many varied gifts. He was a fine example of business integrity, an impressive speaker and a wise counselor. His highest ministry, perhaps, was in his personal contact with individual workers of the various rescue missions, and the files of his office are full of the most touching expressions of comfort and gratitude from those to whom he was a blessing. . . . Mr. Whittemore during the last few years threw himself with special energy and great effectiveness into the rescue mission work not only of New York City but of the entire country. He was elected three times in succession president of what is now known as the International Union of Gospel Workers, which embraces the United States and Canada, and presided at a great meeting of this society held a few months ago in Calvary Baptist Church, New York. Mr. Whittemore was an honored elder of the Presbyterian Church until his death."

DAILY MEDITATION

FOR EVERY DAY IN THE YEAR, BASED ON THE WORDS OF JESUS

BY PROFESSOR W. H. T. DAU

SUNDAY, April 5. Mark 4: 39. "Peace, be still." The calm voyage across the placid lake has been sadly interrupted by a great storm. For a while the disciples have battled against the fury of wind and waves. No doubt, anxious glances have been cast in the direction of the Master. Yes, he, the Shepherd of Israel who neither slumbers nor sleeps, is enjoying in his assumed humanity that boon which God grants to his beloved when they are weary. He is a true man. But look! Presently he stands in the water-logged ship in the grandeur of his majesty. Human help had not availed to keep the bark afloat. The Lord of the earth and sea must now come to the rescue. He chides the wind, and he speaks to the sea as a master speaks to his dog. One word suffices. The uproar of the elements subsides, and there is a great calm. "What manner of man is this, that even the wind and the sea obey him?" He is the God who made the sea and who rides on the wings of the wind as on his chariot. This storm on Lake Tiberias has ever been regarded as descriptive of the fate of the church, tossed with many a tempest. All the powers of earth and hell have seemed to combine to destroy it. Innumerable times its ruin has seemed imminent. Suddenly a brief word has been heard above the strife of tongues and the fury of persecution, and quiet has been restored with such astonishing promptness that the disciples have said: The Lord has rebuked our adversaries, and they are scattered. "God is our refuge and strength, a very present help in trouble. Therefore will not we fear, though the waters roar and be troubled. God is in our midst; we shall not be moved: God will help us, and that right early."

MONDAY, April 6. Mark 4: 40. "Why are ye so fearful? how is it that ye have no faith?" A worse storm than that which was rioting in the Sea of Galilee had broken loose in the hearts of the disciples. Their hearts were tossed with terrible doubts and fears. The spectacle of the majestic unconcern of their sleeping Master should have sufficed to dissipate all fears of the safe ending of their voyage. But the lesson was lost on them. After quelling the uprising of the elements Jesus now addresses himself to calming the trembling spirits of his disciples. He remands them to the position of safety which they had foolishly quitted. Back to faith, to unwavering trust that in the company of Jesus no real harm can betide the disciple, and that all things must work together for good to them that love God! Our agonies become memorable to us because of the discoveries we made in them how weak our boasted confidence is when put to a serious test. We may even laugh at our fears after we have been placed in safety. But the best use we can make of our experiences of diffidence, timidity, and despair is to humble ourselves before the Lord and acknowledge that we cannot even depend on our faith without his support. "If it had not been the Lord who was on our side, the waters had overwhelmed us." Let us look unto Jesus, the Author and Finisher of our faith.

TUESDAY, April 7. Mark 5: 8, 9. "Come out of the man, thou unclean spirit. What is thy name?" We have here an exchange of words between Jesus and an unclean spirit. As Jesus was about to utter the powerful command that would force the devil to quit the poor demoniac, perhaps as he was just giving the ejecting order, the unclean spirit essays to stay the word of Omnipotence by a passionate plea to be let alone. The unclean spirit knows that when Jesus chooses to employ his almighty power his word is irresistible. It is the word of "the Son of the most high God." The request of the unclean spirit was not granted. It was the demand of a maddened fool. Thus might a convicted murderer violently expostulate with his executioner. Still, Jesus momentarily arrests his action to ask the spirit a question. Why? To show to the bystanders the appalling magnitude of the demoniac's misery and to manifest the greatness of his own power over the forces of hell. A legion of devils assail a single person! How vast must the multitude of them all be! The devil who apes God in all things also wants to be a "lord of hosts." But the Lord who came to destroy the works of the devil is mightier than the unnumbered hosts of hell.

WEDNESDAY, April 8. Matthew 8: 32. "Go." We may put into this curt order of the Lord in intensified form all the contempt and disgust with which we spurn something foul, loathsome and hideous. But it is a comfort to know that the devil must be a beggar even for such a contemptuous word. The entire action belongs in the chapter of the permissive providence of God. The final judgment still being in abeyance, our Lord in his earthly estate still recognizes the necessary existence of evil and the operation of the forces of evil among men. He permits the pecuniary loss to the owners of the swine and rouses them to a perception of the wicked powers that were busy among them and of their own damnable indifference to their misery. The catastrophe here related made a great impression throughout the country of the Gadarenes. But they failed to appreciate the brief visit of the heavenly Stranger who had come among them. They missed a grand spiritual opportunity because they thought more of their swine than of their Redeemer.

THURSDAY, April 9. Mark 5: 19. "Go home to thy friends, and tell them how great things the Lord hath done for thee, and hath had compassion on thee." The cured demoniac wished to go with Jesus, rendering him grateful service and feasting his soul continually on the compassion which Jesus had shown him. But our Lord wants him to remain in his country. He is to be a living monument to these gross and callous Gadarenes of the lovingkindness and mercy of the Son of man who came to seek and save that which was lost. The mission of Jesus might have been misinterpreted by the Gadarenes who were wincing under the pecuniary loss which the fury of the devils had caused them with his permission. In their fellow citizen they were to behold a proof every day that the mission of Jesus was not to destroy but to restore. Those who have obtained help from the Lord in their afflictions may here read a direction that concerns them also: they are to be living witnesses of the saving grace of God. The reclaimed drunkard, the lewd person, the miser, the prodigal, from whom the devils of lust and passion have been expelled, owe it to Jesus to tell their friends how great things Jesus has done for them and has had compassion on them.

FRIDAY, April 10. Matthew 9: 2. "Son, be of good cheer; thy sins be forgiven thee." It is a perfectly Scriptural thought to connect suffering in general with sin. The connection is shown upon the very entrance of sin into this world, Gen. 3: 14-19. But it is not for us to pass judgment rashly on particular sufferers, as we do not know the reasons and purposes for which God has afflicted them. See John 9: 2, 3. In the case before us the encouraging greeting of our Lord is intended to lead the party to an understanding of the greater mercy which they must seek from him. They probably had thought only of the physical restoration of their crippled comrade. Jesus would have them think of the awful cause of all suffering, and of their friend's spiritual misery. He would remove the root of the evil rather than cut down a few noxious branches. He would have the soul filled with the cheering assurance of God's pardon, ere he eases the pain-racked limbs. Yes, that is the greatest boon which the mercy of God in Christ Jesus can bestow on us: the divine pardon which gives us the assurance that our guilt has been canceled and we are made righteous in the sight of God. That brings a great peace to the troubled conscience, and makes the heart throb with a deep joy. Hear Paul: "Being justified by faith, we have peace with God through our Lord Jesus Christ: by whom also we have access by faith into this grace wherein we stand, and rejoice in the hope of the glory of God."

SATURDAY, April 11. Matthew 9: 4-6. "Wherefore think ye evil in your hearts? For whether is easier, to say, Thy sins be forgiven thee; or to say, Arise, and walk? But that ye may know that the Son of man hath power on earth to forgive sins, Arise, take up thy bed, and go unto thine house." For a mere man to assume authority to sit in judgment on the relation of one of his fellow men to his Maker, for a mere man to remit or retain the sin of his fellow man at his option, for mere men to compel a fellow man to confess every minute detail of a sinful act, and then to make a traffic of the forgiveness of sin, that is indeed blasphemy. Of such an act the Jews at Capernaum thought Jesus guilty. He read their thoughts. They denied that he had authority to forgive sin, because they denied his divinity. While Jesus at once asserts his divinity by a divine act which they must admit, he emphasizes in his reply to them the fact that the power to forgive sin is a power which he has as "the Son of man." He must exercise it, and that here on earth, as the appointed Redeemer, if he is at all to discharge his office as the Redeemer. He has afterwards commissioned his people, and especially his Gospel messengers in his name to declare forgiveness to be open to the penitent.

THE GREATEST MISSION FIELD

IN VIEW of recent developments in China, including the rehabilitation of Confucianism as the official moral code of the nation, special significance attaches to statistics just compiled under the auspices of the evangelical churches in the republic. The total Protestant evangelical church membership in the nation is 470,000, with 548 ordained Chinese pastors and 5,364 unordained workers, 4,712 Chinese Christian school teachers, 1,789 Bible women, 496 native assistants and other native helpers, bringing the aggregate of those engaged in Christian service at the present time up to 15,500. There are 2,955 Christian congregations. America and Europe are represented by 5,452 white missionaries. The Christian schools have 86,241 primary scholars and 31,384 in the intermediate schools and colleges. A single denomination—the Methodist Church—supports 600 primary schools with 12,923 pupils, and has a church membership of 37,000. Last year, the native Christian congregations contributed $320,000 for the spread of the Gospel among their own people. Yet with all this magnificent growth, representing probably a million, in and out of the churches, who have been reached by the Gospel, it is at best only a substantial beginning. China's 400,000,000 constitute the greatest of missionary problems. While the strength of the missionary army is steadily increasing, there is one part of the Gospel campaign in China which is far from receiving the attention it deserves. We must win the hearts of the children, who in the coming years will themselves be soul-winners. This view is being strongly impressed upon the missionaries, who, by their devoted labors in schools, industrial institutions and mission orphanages, are making splendid progress with the rising generation. Their appeal to our readers to help support 1,000 children in the orphanages is one that should be taken advantage of by all who hope and pray that China may yet be won for Christ.

Cyrus Townsend Brady's thrilling new serial story, "A Little Angel of the Mountains," begins in THE CHRISTIAN HERALD on April 15.

DOINGS OF THE DENOMINATIONS

IN RESPONSE to a very general request, THE CHRISTIAN HERALD this week introduces a new feature which we believe will be welcomed by our readers. We shall publish from time to time the news of important denominational activities, giving equal representation to all the various bodies representative of Protestantism in America, including Methodists, Episcopalians, Baptists, Lutherans, Congregationalists, Presbyterians, Reformed, Disciples, Moravians, and others. Correspondence on this line from authoritative sources is welcome.

Activity in Lutheran Circles

By Pastor L. B. Wolf

ONE of the outstanding coming events in the General Synod of the Lutheran Church is the preparation being made for the worthy celebration of the one hundredth anniversary of the nailing of the theses on the door of the Castle Church at Wittenberg. An influential committee was appointed at Atchison, Kan., for the preparation of a program. In connection with the celebration, an endeavor will be made to raise a million-dollar fund for education.

AN "EVERY-MEMBER" CANVASS

At the last meeting of the General Synod at Atchison the Laymen's Missionary Movement was heartily endorsed and a plan for a simultaneous "Every-Member Canvass" was recommended in all the churches some time during 1914, preferably the first week in Lent. The executive committee of the Laymen's Missionary Movement, in obedience to the General Synod, has again prepared a budget to continue two secretaries in the field during the current biennium. At a recent meeting it was determined to underwrite the amount needed for such work. The mission boards of the church agree, as heretofore, to stand under this movement and do all they can to encourage its realization in the churches. During the last year, church after church has had the "Every-Member Canvass" and all testify to the beneficent influence of undertaking this new plan in church finance. The General Synod has heartily endorsed the united missionary campaign and through the secretaries of the boards has pledged their support to the same and assisted in all possible ways in carrying out the plans of the united missionary campaign.

LUTHERAN MISSIONS

The General Synod's missions in India and Africa closed a notable year. The African mission suffered terribly because of withdrawals and deaths due to climate. In the India work progress in every department has marked the year, over 2,500 baptisms in the already large church membership being added. New buildings are being called for in our educational work—a science hall in connection with the college, new school buildings in connection with elementary and other schools. The Sylvanus Stall Memorial, just completed, is a noble edifice in the interest of women's higher education. From the field there is a loud call for reinforcements for every department of the work. It is proposed to send out these reinforcements in the near future.

EDUCATIONAL COLLEGES

Among the colleges of the church there are signs of great advancement. Pennsylvania College at Gettysburg, Pa., has completed a $100,000 endowment and is now starting out to enlarge its preparatory school plant and move forward in all directions. Wittenberg Seminary at Springfield, Ohio, has been fortunate in receiving the large endowment from the estate of the late Dr. M. W. Harter, a little short of $200,000 being realized. Susquehanna University at Selinsgrove, Pa., has recently opened the Stadt Laboratory Building—an up-to-date science hall. The Gettysburg Seminary has recently realized the Fritz legacy of about $30,000.

At the last General Synod meeting the Board of Education was instructed to take under advisement the opening of a women's college. Committees are at work trying to carry out the recommendation.

Among the Moravian Churches

By Paul de Schweinitz, D.D.

ON October 31, 1913, Comenius Hall, the main building of the Moravian College and Theological Seminary at Bethlehem, Pa., was destroyed by fire, entailing a loss of nearly $60,000, with only $25,000 insurance. This was said to be the handsomest building of the Moravian Church anywhere in the world. Here are educated not only the Moravian ministers for service in the United States and Canada, but also the Moravian missionaries for service in any part of the world. The work of rebuilding was begun as soon as the ruins were cold. Energetic efforts are now being made to gather the necessary funds, which owing to the limited membership of the Moravian Church is an exceedingly difficult task. Bishop C. L. Moench, D.D., president of the Board of Trustees, is devoting February, March and April to a personal canvass in the Western States, particularly Wisconsin and North Dakota.

THE NEW WALDENSIAN CHURCH IN ROME

FEBRUARY 8, 1914, will be a memorable date in the history of new Italy. On that day a magnificent Waldensian church, worthy of the Eternal City, the gift of Mrs. John S. Kennedy of New York, was dedicated to the worship in spirit and truth. The building, of Romanic style (the formal opening of which has already been described in THE CHRISTIAN HERALD) erected on Piazza Cavour, at the entrance of the Prati di Castello, the residential district of Rome, is impressive outside and inside. Floral decorations, frescoes, stained glass windows, the pulpit, the communion table, all speak a language of art which is pleasing to the Italian mind and soul. The main auditorium can accommodate 1,500 people. There were 1,800 present on the day it was dedicated. At 4.30 P.M., when the church was already full and the organist, Professor Tourrett, was playing, there came along the central aisle a procession of pastors from the two hundred or more Waldensian churches scattered all over Italy, and representatives from the other churches in Rome, preceded by four pastors in Geneva gowns. In the procession also were Rev. Dr. Luzzi, moderator of the Waldensian Church; Dr. Luzzi, of Florence, the preacher of the day; Dr. Meillon, the president of the board; Dr. Rostagno, the pastor of the new church. Dr. Luzzi took as his text Ezek. 4: 6, and delivered a short, masterful sermon. The choir of the church sang beautifully, and the public joined in the Latin Prayer after the creed. Next day, Monday, February 9, at 10 a.m., the inauguration of the Waldensian School were treated at a special audience by King Victor Emmanuel III at the Quirinal palace. The new church has rooms for special services, and has within the edifice, a mission dispensary, gymnasium, circulating library, etc. It is suggested that the church should be erected close to the place where Paschal, the Waldensian martyr, was burned at the stake in 1560 in the presence of Pope Pius IV; in the city where Peter Waldo, in 1176, harangued his reformed exiles; on the corner of the piazza which bears the name of the great statesman Cavour, who said he was "A free church in a free State"; and that the church should be the gift of a citizen of America, where there is perfect freedom of consciousness. The American Waldensian Aid Society, 156 West Seventy-ninth Street, New York City, will send free literature about the Waldensians to all who ask for it. Rev. Liborio Cou-

A NEW CENTER OF LABOR

The Moravians have been carrying on work in Elizabeth, N. J., since 1855. The location of their work had gradually become a very undesirable part of the city, as the church stood immediately opposite a huge brewery. A suitable location was secured at the corner of Lafayette and Reid Streets. A parsonage was erected on Reid Street and what will later be used as the Sunday School building, chapel and parish house was built on Lafayette Street at a cost of $11,000.

Until the church proper can be built, this will be used for the regular divine worship of the congregation. It was formally opened for divine services by Bishop C. L. Moench, D.D., on January 4, 1914. The Rev. A. E. Francke, B.D., is the energetic pastor of this charge.

A New Methodist College in China

By E. B. Price

WORD has just come to hand in a letter from Bishop Bashford that the title to some forty acres of land, recently purchased for a college site by M. E. missionaries at Nanchang, China, has just been perfected. The Provincial Assembly has given enthusiastic approval to the project. There is a possibility that Methodist workers will be empowered to revise and direct the system of education throughout the entire province of Kiangsi. One high official spoke as follows to Mr. H. C. Hwang, a strong M. E. Christian worker in the province: "When you have made good in this college, so that we can justify our course before the public, you become our provincial commissioner of education and introduce your whole system from primary schools to colleges throughout the province as our official Chinese system."

Bishop Bashford writes: "This land lies immediately north of the city wall. With the suburbs of the city already extending to the land, with the government mint built just beyond the college grounds on land bought from the same temple, with the government parade grounds lying just east of our land and the proposed railway terminus to be erected near the northeast corner of our grounds, and especially with the proposal to tear down the city walls and establish a street car system around the city, this land probably is worth today $40,000. A similar purchase was made by Dr. Goucher of an almost similar amount of land considerably farther from the city of Tokyo than this land is from the center of Nanchang thirty years ago for $10,000. It is worth to-day $500,000. The same is true of the site of the St. John's College, located some five miles from the center of Shanghai. Fifty thousand dollars contributed to-day for the erection of a Christian college for Nanchang will do more spiritually to transform China than ten times that amount twenty-five years hence.

"But no commercial use of this land can count for so much in the upbuilding of Nanchang, with its million people, or for the Kiangsi Province with its twenty-six millions, or for China with its three hundred to four hundred millions of people, as the erection of college buildings and the use of the land for the Christian training of the young men of China for centuries to come."

DIFFICULTIES OVERCOME

The actual purchase was made two years ago at a cost of about $3,000. The governor of the province at that time refused to permit the stamping of the deeds by the officials until the approval of the Provincial Assembly should be secured. He feared that under the pretext of buying land for mission purposes, the foreigners meant to force the opening of Nanchang as a treaty port. Missionary workers at Nanchang spent considerable time for several months calling upon high officials. The plans for building up a strong educational center were made clear, and many of the officials were soon enthusiastically in favor of the project, and the Provincial Assembly officially authorized the commissioner of foreign affairs to perfect the title.

Schwenckfeldians Making Progress

THE latest statistical report of the Schwenckfelder Church shows a membership of 1,025, and a Sunday school enrolment of 1,700. This is a gain of twenty-five in church membership and thirty five in the Sunday school.

The Schwenckfelder Church is one of the smallest Christian denominations, there being but four congregations in existence, all in Pennsylvania; three in Montgomery county and one in Philadelphia. In addition to the regular church activities, the denomination maintains Perkiomen Seminary, a high grade secondary school located at Pennsburg, Pa., and has its own missionary in Miss Flora K. Heebner, who is stationed at Taiku, Shansi, China, under the direction of the American Board, where the Schwenckfelders have erected their own school building, and have recently donated $1,000 for the erection of a home for Miss Heebner.

With the co-operation of Hartford Theological Seminary, the Schwenckfelders are publishing the writings of their founder, Caspar Schwenckfeld, under the title of Corpus Schwenckfeldianorum, to consist of seventeen volumes of encyclopedic size, or about 1,000 pages each. Three volumes have already appeared and volume four is now in press.

GOSPEL TRIUMPHS IN LIBERIA

HARRY H. JONES, missionary of the Liberian Industrial Mission, with headquarters at Monrovia, the capital of the African "Black Republic," went out to that field eleven years ago. His Gospel labors among the native heathen have been greatly blessed. He writes to THE CHRISTIAN HERALD:

"I have spent most of my time among the Gollah and Pessah tribes. Not only is the Gospel making progress here, but civilized customs are being adopted. For instance, at the outset of my experience, I used to pay my native helper one yard of cloth plus two-thirds of a quart of rice per day for his services. This was the universal price. To-day he cannot be got for less than twenty-four cents cash and two meals. Eleven years ago all of the native produce went for rum, tobacco and cheap cloth; to-day, I am thankful to say that I see less rum pass my door in a month than I saw in a week eleven years ago. Eleven years ago, the native accepted merchandise for all labor and produce: to-day he demands and gets cash.

CHRISTIANITY IS QUIETLY BUT SURELY DISPLACING HEATHENISM

"Eleven years ago, the West African Gospel Mission, of which I was a part, had to beg and sometimes even to buy outright the native children for religious training; to-day the natives beg me to take their children. Moreover, they are willing to pay the sum of twenty-five cents per month to help support and teach their children.

"It was a common thing in the old days for a native to depend on his numerous wives for support; but to-day he is planting a coffee farm. Systematic farming is gradually finding its place in Liberia.

"But the greatest transformation is a spiritual one. Christianity is quietly but surely displacing heathenism.

"This great change can only be comprehended by those who live among these people, teaching them the value of labor and leading them into the light of Gospel truth.

"We have had a rather notable revival among the Gollahs and Pessahs and many were baptized. During the meeting, there were some exciting scenes, but at the last the converts were wonderfully clothed and in their right minds. Those who witnessed the demonstrations of God's power during that revival will not soon forget it.

"Pray for us, that God may continue to keep us in his hands."

WATERS OF MARAH

BY ELIZABETH BURGESS HUGHES

JUST because the new minister was too young—or at least he looked too young—and too ready to laugh, Mrs. Bayne promptly announced her disapproval at the Ladies' Aid. She was one of those persons who are at no loss to express their private opinions at any time or place.

"We need a leader, a settled man, not—not that silly boy," explained she with disconcerting frankness. "Take my word for it, he'll be courting some girl as flighty as he before long, and his mind won't be on his work at all. I don't like to prophesy, but—"

"Really, I don't think we need cross bridges before we reach them," interfered little Mrs. Hiney cheerfully. "He seems to me an exceptionally earnest young man, and even if he isn't many months out of college he can build up our church as efficiently as anybody, if he has the proper aid. Youth's a fault soon outgrown. At any rate, fearing and expecting failure isn't exactly the proper attitude on our part, is it?"

"You'll see." Mrs. Bayne shook her head, and a sudden silence fell on the little group. Mrs. Hiney was the only member of the Aid who ever openly contradicted Lucinda Bayne, for the latter was a person of importance.

"He—why, he tells jokes! And David says he heard him humming a love song one day. So different from dear old Brother Jarvis. He thought levity unbecoming a servant of God. Of course, I don't reckon such things are wrong in themselves, but a minister of the Gospel ought to set an example of dignity."

"His being young sort of excuses him, doesn't it?" asked Mrs. Plympton with a nervous smile. "Young people can't be old folks, you know—till their proper time. And—" she sighed—"that comes soon enough. Though of course Mrs. Bayne is more or less right about a minister being dignified and all that," she added hastily, scenting disapproval in Mrs. Bayne's eye-glassed glance. "But let's just try to make the best of it."

It was a hard winter. Even the Ladies' Aid found it difficult to meet with desirable regularity those blue Friday afternoons. The gray sky hung like an endless frown over the little village, and snow lay in patches here and there for weeks at a time. Was it possible that spring, the violet-crowned, would ever come?

But, to all appearances, this desolation of Nature had not touched the new minister. He had been born with an up-curved mouth and eyes sunnily blue. Maybe, as Mrs. Bayne had said, he wasn't suited to the ministry! For it was true that the dreadful state of a lost and ruined world appeared to weigh on him very lightly and he talked so little about hell that Deacon Standish was heard to wonder if he believed in it at all. In this austere little New England circle he seemed as oddly out of place as a jewel on a nun's habit. Young, vital, a man with a child's laugh in his blood, and human tenderness in voice and manner, he found himself as much misunderstood as the duck who should have been hatched a chicken. Yet no thought of being a martyr had ever occurred to him. When they stared and wondered he set it down to "just their way." Seeing their religious gloom, the singular, intense grayness of their taut lives, he tried hard to bring them a broader viewpoint, a sunnier worship of God. That they resented it he had not yet discovered.

But the truth came with startling force one afternoon, when on his way home from a pastoral visit to a hypochondriacal old lady who obstinately refused to be cheered, and admitted she liked the Old Testament better than the New, he observed Deacon Standish bent laboriously over his woodpile, gathering an armful of wood. The lugubrious and brooding expression of the old man's face might have warned him, had he seen it; but he hadn't—and over the fence went a snowball, aimed with considerable precision, plump against the deacon's broad back.

The old man dropped his wood, straightened with a jerk and perceived the minister outside his gate, grinning sheepishly like a mischievous youngster, his yellow hair vital sunshine against the somber background. Had Deacon Standish been a different sort of man—had he even remembered his youth—he would have grinned back and the pact of eternal friendship would then and there have been sealed. As it was, the deacon stood staring, startled past immediate speech, horror in every line of his face. Then—

"You—a minister o' God, lowering your conduct to the level of an urchin in the street; you, as set an example to our young, and preach the Lord's word in our meetin' house— Well, you'll be asked to resign before the month's out, I'm thinking. And a good riddance it'll be; we need a shepherd, not a clown," he flung at him.

It was a cruel speech—just the sort narrow, unthinking men make every day to souls bigger than themselves whom they fail to understand. The new minister stood listening, all the ruddy color drained out of his face; then, with a nod and kindly word of farewell, he turned and went his way.

Afterward there was little change in his attitude toward his flock. One may not alter the spirit of his religion at the instigation of a crabbed old man. But sometimes his laugh would die suddenly, as he caught the hard, disapproving glance of one of his members.

Then, without a day's or hour's warning, came the epidemic, sweeping down upon the little village with the force of a hurricane. Those who could, fled at its first approach; but now almost every home had its victim. Churches and schools were closed, and civic concern faded before personal anxiety. The "black mirror" of the hearse caught the reflection of an almost deserted street, over which the drifting snows and lashing rains shed the added pall of winter.

In their homes the new minister toiled sleeplessly with his people; indeed he seemed to have awakened overnight a spirit of patience and healing. The terror and grief about him appeared to have gone to the very soul of the man, lending him new strength and power. Night after night he refused to rest, and when he stood over dying pillows his transfigured face checked many a breaking human outcry.

So, in the winter stillness, he wrestled with the great angel Pain, and when it had folded its mighty wings and passed from their midst, reaction slowly set in. Mrs. Bayne had lost her first-born, and Deacon Standish his wife. There were others who sat in shadow—a shadow that was long in lifting. So engrossed was the village with its selfish grief that it was April before some one awoke to the fact that something ailed the minister. During the epidemic, when he had gone whole weeks with scarcely a night's sleep, he had looked white and a bit thin; but his smile and quick, boyish word of cheer were ready as ever.

Now, however, he did not smile often, and he walked slowly, as if he felt the weight of his own body. Head downbent, he even passed the members of his flock at times without greeting. He was not physically ill, for an officious brother had sent Dr. Venner to find out.

"He's all right," said that worthy—"or at least, if he's got a trouble it's mental. To tell the truth, I can't exactly make him out."

Well, the thing they had hoped for was here. They had a "dignified" pastor. Even old Mr. Jarvis could not have outdistanced him on that score. He met all suddenly-cordial advances with a bland, cold imperturbability that chilled; he stopped singing on Sundays and made his sermons brief and overscientific. Speculation ran rife. What had happened? Was it that the recent nearness of death had really shown him himself and he regretted his late unseemly conduct? Or was he just growing in grace—attaining full Christian stature? But—"oh," said Mrs. Bayne one day at the Ladies'

The Call of Power

A RECENT novel, supposed to be largely the author's own life story, tells of the delight with which he first explored the fields of universal knowledge as revealed in the world's great books. Particularly was he thrilled by the writings of Spencer, who not only gave him new pieces of knowledge but gave him rules and principles by which he could correlate all knowledge, a chart by which he could find the way around the vast expanses of the universe. These discoveries gave him new sensations of power. He was no longer a blind, spiritless, insignificant unit in the infinite complexities of the universe, but an intelligent participant in them; nay, more: his knowledge gave him a sense of mastership. He was lifted above his fellows because he understood what they were ignorant of.

Here is something which appeals to the adventurous spirit in man—to explore new fields of knowledge with charts and implements which show the lonely and magnificent way. But there is a still higher, more thrilling lure than the lure of knowledge; that is the lure of power. This new voyager had no thought that he could change anything out there in the fields he explored. He was, after all, nothing but an observer. The call of knowledge itself has nothing but this to offer. But the call of power is a call not only to observe but to change; not only to see, but to create. What would a brave, adventurous spirit think of a call to come out into the universe and create new forces, change existing relations, help in the establishment of a new universe?

It is some faint echo of a call like this that moves the inventor, the mechanic, the engineer, the business man, the politician. To find power, to use it, to change the work of nature, to change the thoughts and convictions and speech and acts of men, compelling them to follow the paths marked out—these are some of the ambitions of the man who hears the call of power.

But what if one could get into intimate touch with the source of all the power in the universe? What if one could become the personal friend of the great personal Mover of all the forces of the cosmos? What if one were invited to receive the gift of power from the center of all power? What if one were asked to help in changing the universe that exists for a universe that is to be? Can we conceive of a higher call than that? Can we conceive of a career more splendid?

It is precisely that call which comes to us from the lips of Christ. It is precisely that career to which he invites us. "All power is given unto me in heaven and in earth," he said. And, "Behold, I give unto you power." We are called to be "workers together with God." We are asked to receive his power that we may help him in his infinite tasks.

But the way up to these dizzy heights of power is down to the lowest depths of humiliation and self surrender. The only people who cannot share God's spiritual power are the people who hold to the idea that they have some useful power of their own. The souls God cannot use in his vast work are the souls which will not yield to him in complete surrender.

The humblest saint of God, bowed in prayer, is mightier than all the human and natural forces of the universe. To bring by faith God's power down to change the hearts and acts of men; to win souls for the heavenly kingdom; to help to spread the knowledge of the glory of God, which is some day to cover the earth as the waters cover the sea, to have a part in the creation of the new heaven and the new earth wherein dwelleth righteousness—this is the sublimest call that can touch the ear and fire the soul.

Conditions in Japan

AFFAIRS in Japan at the present time, according to the correspondents of leading newspapers in England and France, are in a rather unsatisfactory condition. Added to the domestic financial crisis, which has existed for several months past, a considerable part of the empire is fighting famine on account of crop failures, and the devastation wrought by the recent volcanic eruption has left thousands of the Mikado's subjects homeless and destitute. Our missionaries write sympathetically of these conditions, which official relief is inadequate to meet. But Japan's troubles are not wholly domestic. Le Temps, a leading Paris journal, says that an ominous cloud has risen in the Far East and that the late understanding between Japan and Russia has fallen through. Russia has her eyes on Manchuria, and, since the last war, has been energetically strengthening her army and navy to a point which amounts to a serious menace. She can now put 1,400,000 troops in the field immediately, with the latest military equipment, and on a war footing her armies would aggregate 6,000,000 men. Whether the conjectures of European correspondents as to the designs of Russia on Manchuria be well founded or not, it is certain that they are now being seriously discussed in the Japanese press. Further, it is represented that China and Russia have reached a mutual understanding, and that the anti-Japanese attitude of China is attributable to this fact. In view of these changed conditions, it is pointed out, Japan is less disposed to press her claims on the immigration question and more desirous of cultivating friendly relations with the United States. She is even inclined to regret her recent effusive display of friendship toward Mexico. While Japan's entanglements with other Powers possess little interest for Americans, who may even regard them as mere political rumors on the part of correspondents, her home afflictions entitle her to our warmest sympathy. A number of our missionaries are helping in the relief work, and the letters received by THE CHRISTIAN HERALD show that the reports of suffering are far short of the reality.

Burning the Bible

THE news from Manila of the public burning of several hundred Gospels and other portions of Scripture in the plaza of Vigan, in northern Luzon, will naturally excite a thrill of indignation. It demonstrates the truth of the statement, so often made use of by Catholics, that "Rome never changes." She is still the same old Bible-burning Rome of the Middle Ages. Tyndale's Bibles were burned publicly in England by order of the fanatical prelates, but for every Bible so destroyed a dozen came forth from the presses to take their place. Thank God, it will be the same in the Philippines! Wherever the Papal Church has endeavored to crush the Bible, it has signally failed. Our missionary organizations, our Bible societies, our Protestant churches everywhere should see to it that the Bible is scattered broadcast throughout the Philippines, and that the Word of God, notwithstanding Catholic intolerance, has free course in those islands for the spiritual enlightenment of their neglected people. It is significant to note, as the Philippine journal, the Renacimiento Filipino, announces, that "on the day following the plaza Bible-burning, more than three thousand Bibles (presumably Gospels and portions like those destroyed) were sold by representatives of the American Bible Society."

There are doubtless many good people who would gravely question the possibility of such a thing happening under the American flag anywhere in the world. It has been confirmed, however, by news received by the American Bible Society. The thing is a fact. No doubt representation will be made concerning it to the government, and it will be interesting to note what action, if any, is taken. It is not surprising that the Renacimiento Filipino should brand it as "one of the most iniquitous and uncalled-for acts ever done in the name of a world-wide religious belief."

Dr. Jowett to Remain Here

READERS of this journal will be glad to learn that Rev. Dr. Jowett is to remain in the United States, having declined a call to Union Chapel, Islington, England. Since coming here several years ago, he has more than fulfilled the high expectations that were raised, and has taken his place as one of the foremost spiritual preachers of our time. Among the great divines of all the denominations whose sermons appear from week to week in THE CHRISTIAN HERALD, there is none who is more warmly welcomed or who brings a more helpful message.

Dr. Jowett will contribute nine great sermons to THE CHRISTIAN HERALD pulpit during the current year, the first of the series on "What Is Conversion?" appearing in the present issue. Our readers will unite with us in the hope that he may long be spared to give forth these inspiring evangelical Gospel messages through the medium of their favorite journal.

The Beauty of Old Age

ONE of our dear old readers has just passed the century mark. She was a hundred years young on March 23. She is well and active and enjoyed the felicitations which kindly neighbors and church associates showered upon her on her birthday. She would have been glad to meet her CHRISTIAN HERALD friends, too, for she has been a devoted reader of this journal for fifteen years. This noble old lady, who has attained such matriarchal distinction, is Mrs. A. H. Barnes of Lockport, Ill.

There is a glory in old age when it is the sunset time of a Christian life. There are springs of daily refreshing of which the world does not know. There are still opportunities for kindly service. God leads our dear old friends all the way. They have traveled farther than most of us along the road that leads heavenward and in many instances have reached that point where, with spiritually quickened vision, they can almost penetrate the thin veil which hides what lies beyond. To them heaven is a very real thing, and Jesus is a real Saviour and friend. So they look forward not with doubt or misgiving, but with joy, to the reunion in the "good land" hereafter with those who have already passed over.

Precious in God's eyes are his aged saints. Besides other blessings, he gives them wisdom in the things that relate to the eternal life. Let us not hold lightly the counsel of these veterans, who can look back over many a struggle and temptation which they have conquered, but which we have yet to meet. Let us love and honor them while they are with us and comfort them in every way. We hold them with us a little while as hostages from heaven, where they belong.

"A Little Angel of the Mountains"

A RARE delight is in store for readers of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD in the new serial story, "A Little Angel of the Mountains," by Dr. Cyrus Townsend Brady, which begins in our issue of April 15. People who like tales of real life, tales of action and danger and courage, tales full of the breath of the open air, with views of the mountains and trees, will enjoy this story of the frontier. Faithful pictures are drawn of the ugly results of sin, sin as it has existed in some of the rough mining camps of the West. But the Little Angel, though not always triumphant, together with friends who come to his support, shows that goodness is stronger than evil after all.

Dr. Brady is a writer of wide fame. He has delighted CHRISTIAN HERALD readers with other stories in the past, and they will follow him eagerly through this new and thrilling romance.

Boy Stabs His Nurse

THE papers report a sad instance of early depravity in the stabbing of a nurse of nineteen by a little boy of wealth, only four years of age. The boy went into the kitchen and was creating a disturbance, when the nurse told him to leave it. He refused, and she took him by the left hand to lead him out, when he seized a sharp potato-knife from the table and plunged it into the girl's side, inflicting a dangerous wound, and sending her to the hospital hovering between life and death. The little fellow did not intend to kill the servant, or to seriously wound her; he only had a spasm of anger and did intend violent resistance. One of the dangers of a home of wealth and culture is the spoiled child. The best nurse for a child is its mother. If she have the means or desire, she may hire whomsoever she may please to help her. If she be the right kind of a woman she cannot farm out the care or moral training of her child to any one else, no matter how beautiful in spirit or dutiful in service. She is the one to gently lead to self-control, and authoritatively compel obedience. No queen upon the throne has a greater privilege and responsibility than the mother, who trains her children well for God and humanity. The value of home training is described by the wise man in the following words:

Train up a child in the way he should go; and when he is old, he will not depart from it. (Prov. 22: 6.)

Bishop Visits Gunmen

BISHOP GREER of New York went to Sing Sing prison the other day and visited the four gunmen who are condemned to death for the Rosenthal murder. The men were "Dago Frank," "Gyp the Blood," "Lefty Louie" and "Whitey" Lewis. Bishop Greer said his interviews and devotions with the men were too sacred for public mention. He was not so silent when it came to questions of inhumanity in the prison. Among other things he said: "I am more than ever convinced of the immediate necessity for prison reform. I believe the warden is doing his best, but the building and furnishings are such as to make it impossible to shut men up behind the bars there without real cruelty. The cells are poorly lighted and ventilated, and there is practically no sanitation." It is a pity that the Empire State, so rich and usually so generous, should allow such a disgrace as some of its penal institutions. Christ condemns severely the failure to show the proper spirit toward prisoners, claiming that their neglect was a mistreatment of him:

I was a stranger, and ye took me not in: naked, and ye clothed me not: sick, and in prison, and ye visited me not. (Matt. 25: 43.)

Eight Million Telephones Busy

THERE are 8,133,017 telephones busy in the United States, conveying over twenty-seven million messages every day. The telephone stations reach 70,000 localities, 10,000 more than the number of post offices. The total wire mileage is over sixteen millions, of which 92 per cent. is copper. One-half of this mileage has been placed underground at an expense of $181,000,000. Over fifty million dollars will be expended in construction this year. All of Europe has only two-fifths of the telephone traffic of the United States. Telephone and telegraph wires were not known in olden times, or if they were the traces of them have been lost. Their method of communication was slow and limited. First, they sent messages by footmen; then by men riding a horse or some other animal; then by a man in a conveyance, or in a boat propelled by oar or sail. And that was the best the world could do in that direction for thousands of years till the time when steam, electricity, and even the fickle wind were pressed into service to bear messages. The communication between the king of Syria and the king of Israel by a letter sent by a general is thus referred to:

And the king of Syria said, Go to, go, and I will send a letter unto the king of Israel. (II Kings 5: 5.)

Medals for Preventing Accidents

THREE medals, of gold, silver, and bronze, to be known as the E. H. Harriman Memorial Medals, are awarded for the first time by the American Museum of Safety for the best work done during the year by an American steam railroad in accident prevention and industrial hygiene. The medals were donated by Mrs. E. H. Harriman. The gold medal is awarded to the railroad which makes the best record; the silver medal to the operating department which has been most successful in bringing the gold medal to that road, and the bronze medal to the employee who individually has made the best record in promoting safety of life, and conditions for good health. The Southern Pacific railroad was awarded the gold medal, William Sproule, president, was voted the silver medal, and William Schwab received the bronze medal. How commendable to thus promote safety to body. How important it is to care for the safety of the soul, which can come only by divine help suggested by the prayer:

Hold thou me up, and I shall be safe. (Ps. 119: 117.)

Wood Preserved by Salt

EXPERTS of the United States Forest Service have discovered that the waters of the Great Salt Lake act as a preservative against decay in timbers. In replacing a railroad trestle, recently burned along the north shore of the Great Salt Lake, it was found that the piles were still perfectly sound, after forty-three years of service. In looking for the cause, since the piles were only of local pine and fir, it was discovered that the timbers were impregnated with salt. At another point on the lake, 18-inch piles, set twenty-nine years ago, were similarly preserved with salt. It is pointed out that the reason why the waters of the Salt Lake act as a strong preservative, as distinguished from ocean waters, is because the lake water is so much more salty. Valuable as salt is to us as a condiment and food for man and beast, and as a preserver of meats, it was much more so to the Jews, who, in addition to the other uses, required such vast quantities for their religious sacrifices. Fortunately they had an unlimited supply of it from a salt lake of their own which they called the Dead Sea. It was so thick with salt that not a plant or fish could live in it. On the shores of this Dead Sea the Hebrews found more than all the salt they needed. The preservative, the saving element in the individual heart and in society is Christ's love. His love in the hearts of Christians is the salt that will save the institutions of mankind from intellectual, moral, and spiritual corruption. It will be well for sociologists, philanthropists, and reformers to remember that Christ is the only one who can purify and uplift human society; that this purification and uplifting can only be accomplished by Christlike men and women through their influence and service. This truth Christ declares:

Ye are the salt of the earth. (Matt. 5: 13.)

HON. WILLIAM GIBBS MCADOO

McADOO-WILSON ENGAGEMENT ANNOUNCED

ON MARCH 13 the secretary to the President gave to the press the following: "The President and Mrs. Wilson announce the engagement of their youngest daughter, Eleanor Randolph, to Hon. William Gibbs McAdoo." It is believed that the wedding will take place in June. Mr. McAdoo is Secretary of the Treasury. He is fifty and Miss Wilson is twenty-four years of age. Miss Wilson was educated in private schools at Princeton, spent two years in a collegiate course at Raleigh, N. C., and then took a course of painting at the Academy of Fine Arts in Philadelphia. She is tall and dark, unlike her sisters, Mrs. Sayre and Miss Margaret. Mr. McAdoo was born at Marietta, Ga., spent two years at the University of Tennessee, was clerk of the United States Circuit Court at Chattanooga, practiced law in that city and in New York, organized a company which took over the old tunnel under the Hudson, which had proven a failure, and in 1903 became the president of the Hudson and Manhattan Railroad Company, the $70,000,000 corporation which built and controls the Hudson River tubes. The wedding will be the fourteenth celebration at the White House. The thirteenth was the marriage of Miss Jessie Woodrow Wilson to Francis Boyes Sayre, on the twenty-fifth of last November. This marriage, like the last one at the White House, will be one of nation-wide interest. In the earliest history of the race we learn of the divine institution of marriage. "And the Lord God said, It is not good that the man should be alone; I will make him a helpmeet for him." (Gen. 2: 18.)

American Horses

BREEDERS of American horses may expect to find a ready sale in Germany this season, according to Consul-General R. P. Skinner, stationed at Berlin. Advertisements in certain American newspapers, he reports, asking for offers of 800 to 1,000 three- or four-year-old thoroughbreds and crossbreds without performance or pedigree; 600 thoroughbreds from five to eight years old, and 1,000 heavy cart horses are probably based on a real demand in the German market. It is understood that the German Government will make extensive purchases of horses this season for army use. Mr. Skinner says that 10,000 head will be wanted before the close of the year. The purchases are made by a board of army officers sitting in various parts of the empire. The American horses will be sent to German horse dealers who will re-sell them to the army board. It is a pity that the demand should not be for well-broken farm horses to plow the fields of peace, rather than horses to train for the field of battle. The prophet makes this reference to the war horse:

Every one turned to his course, as the horse rusheth into the battle. (Jer. 8: 6.)

Religion and National Life

WINSTON CHURCHILL made an address in a Jewish synagogue in New York City the other day, in which he said some important things about religion and its relation to the nation. Among other things he said: "As old as the history of Israel is the struggle between revelation and tradition, which is revelation petrified. There are to-day, as there were in the time of Amos, materialistic Jews as well as spiritual Jews. It was the spirituality of the Jewish people that impressed itself more than any other on the history and destiny of mankind. The spectacle of empty churches has now been of sufficient duration to reveal one significant fact—which for some time has been lost sight of—and that is, that no man, and no society, and no nation can live without religion." The prophet thus expresses the wreckage of a nation separated from God:

For the nation and kingdom that will not serve thee shall perish. (Isa. 60: 12.)

A STRANGE ARCHEOLOGICAL FIND

BY PROFESSOR ALBERT T. CLAY

IN THE recent issue of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD for March 18, an account was given of a cylinder of Nebuchadnezzar, including the translation of it. The cylinder, as had been stated, was found by Arabs at a site known as Wana-Sedoum.

It is not unusual to find several duplicates of such inscriptions, which were walled up in the buildings, but for some unknown reason the scribe made more than the usual number of this inscription, one of which is to be found also in the Yale Babylonian collection.

The larger portion of the cylinder is taken up with an account of the king's important building operations in and around Babylon, the capital of the empire since the days of Amraphel (Gen. 14: 1). Among the many buildings which he built or restored is mentioned Esagila, the temple of Babylon, and Etemenanki, its tower, which is the ancient Tower of Babel, referred to in Genesis. After reading all the king's vainglorious sayings concerning his achievements, we can almost, with the writer of the book of Daniel, hear the king say, as he looked out upon the city, "Is not this great Babylon that I have built?" for in truth, no greater builder in history is known than Nebuchadnezzar. Even at the present time many evidences are visible of his activities, for the ruins at Babylon have for generations been a quarry for the builders of Bagdad and Hilah, where can be seen many buildings containing bricks bearing the titles of Nebuchadnezzar. But especially have his stamped bricks been used in the construction of the great dam which harnesses the Euphrates for irrigation purposes, which has just been finished, and which will again bring life and fertility into this region.

The closing part of the inscription refers to the king's operations at Marad. In fact, all but this part of the inscription is taken from another, now in the British Museum. To this inscription he added an account of his operations at Marad, the translation of which follows: "At that time for Lugal-Marada, my lord, his temple in Marad, which from distant days its old foundation stone no previous king had seen, its old foundation stone I sought for, I beheld, and upon the foundation stone of Naram-Sin, king, my ancient ancestor, I laid its foundation. An inscription with my name I made, and placed in the midst of it." This is followed by a prayer to Lugal-Marada.

The place where the cylinder was discovered, as mentioned, was Wana-Sedoum, or as given in Kiepert's map, Wannet es Sa'dun, a site on the Euphrates, almost due west of Nippur, and a little south of the west of the modern town of Daghara.

Naram-Sin, the son of Sargon, was the well-known king of Accad, one of the cities of Nimrod's kingdom (Gen. 10: 10). He lived, according to Nabonidus, the father of the Biblical Belshazzar, 3,200 years before the time of Nabonidus. Nabonidus makes this statement in an account of operations quite similar to those of Nebuchadnezzar's in connection with rebuilding the temple Ebarra at Nippur, where, he said, he dug down eighteen cubits and came upon the foundation stone of Naram-Sin, who lived 3,200 years before his time. This would give us the date 3750 B. C. for Naram-Sin. Scholars have endeavored to reduce this date a thousand years. Recent discoveries, however, seem to indicate that Nabonidus knew more about ancient chronology than modern scholars. However, Naram-Sin's date is between two and three thousand years prior to that of Nebuchadnezzar, who reigned 604 to 561 B. C.

FOUNDATION STONE OF HEATHEN TEMPLE LAID BY NARAM-SIN, KING OF ACCAD, 3750 B.C., RECENTLY UNEARTHED IN BABYLONIA

More recently, an inscribed stone found its wa into the Yale Babylonian collection. The Arabs wh found it through illicit excavations said it came fro the same site, namely, Wana-Sedoum. It is writte in the archaic character and proved, when tran lated, to belong to Naram-Sin, the same king r ferred to by Nebuchadnezzar. The translation it follows: "Naram-Sin, the mighty king of th four quarters, the subduer of nine armies in o year: when those armies he overcame, and three their kings he bound and led captive before En-L in that day Libet-ili, his son, patesi of Marad, bui the temple of Lugal-Marada in Marad. Whoeve removes this inscribed stone, may the gods Shamas and Lugal-Marada tear out his estate and exte minate his seed."

This, in truth, is one of the stones that Nebucha nezzar saw when he restored the temple at Mara It has a slight depression in the center, alongsi of which is found the inscription. This depressio suggests that it is a gate socket, but the hole is s slight that the post on which the gate or door swun would scarcely remain in position. Some other e planation may later be found which will prove mo reasonable. A number of such foundation ston have been found at Nippur, Umma, and Ur belon ing to other kings. They remind us of the passag of the prophet, "Behold, I lay in Zion for a found tion a stone, a tried stone, a precious corner-sto of sure foundation." (Isa. 28: 16.)

To look upon an inscription of Nebuchadnezza so well known to all Biblical students, is one of th privileges that the spade of the excavator and th patient toil of the decipherer enable us to enjo but to look upon one of the archaic inscribed ston which this ancient king says he saw is witho question unique. The inscription refers to his bein king of the four quarters, which includes the lan of the Amorites, Subartu, Elam, and Sumer; an also that he conquered nine kings in one yea Some day tablets will be found recording these fac in their dates, and we shall know exactly what yea of his reign is referred to. The inscription al gives us the name of another son of the kin namely, Libet-ilu, the governor or priest-king Marad.

The site of Marad has been sought for in vai Different attempts have been made to locate th ancient city. The cylinders referring to the restor tion of the temple which had been found at Wan Sedoum, naturally suggested the identification this site, but the foundation stone of the temp having also been found there, establishes definitel that this is the ancient city.

ISLAM TURNING TO THE LIGHT

BY M. E. KING

[The writer of this article is a missionary, traveler, and lecturer, who has been much in Moslem lands, and who now gives his impression of religious conditions there. His views are in striking contrast to those in a recent article in the columns of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD by another writer.]

THE day has come for the redemption of Islam. Two hundred million people, one seventh of the world's population, burdened with the accumulated superstition, stagnation and oppression of 1,300 years, are beholding a new vision. The old system has had its day, and has become effete and worthless. Millions are plunging into a deeper night over the precipice of doubt. The political events of the past eighteen months in the Moslem world have foreshadowed the collapse of the Ottoman Empire and the social disintegration of the Moslem's religion.

There is abundant evidence that this conviction is strengthening in countries where Islam has been supreme. The downfall of the supremacy of the state carries with it the dissolution of the Koran faith, where they have been one and inseparable.

The loss of Morocco, Tripoli, the Ægean Isles and Turkey in Europe has shocked the dominion of the Sultan. Failure in diplomacy, bankruptcy in finance, and the loss of 7,500,000 subjects have destroyed the prestige of Islam as a church. Its strongest supporters are dazed and unnerved by this sudden blow. Revolution in Arabia and Persia, with serious dissension in the home government, threaten disaster, so that people on the streets, not only in London but in Beirut and Damascus, now discuss the partition of these countries among European nations.

Popular education is sweeping through Moslem populations with a speed unparalleled in history. Young Islam is seized with an irresistible impulse to learn. The cloud of illiteracy and ignorance brooding over the Moslems must now dissolve in the sunshine of Christian education. Light on the character of Mohammed, and the traditions of Islam, as reflected from Christian civilization and intensified by the phenomenal shrinkage of the Moslem power, has weakened their love of the Koran. A great movement in Java jeopardizes their faith. Recently 30,000 assembled to discuss measures for self-government and fo the substitution of the Christian fait for the religion of the false prophe Educated Moslems are writing art cles for the press on the "dying force at work in their religion." Not lon since, a large delegated body met Cairo to study the cause of this d cadence. They called for reform, bu it was not an inherent demand fo progress, rather the echo of despai Here is an extract from one of the essays: "There is no true and livin Islam left in the world." In an Arab journal was recently found this co fession: "The fate of the Moslem is due to our mutual hatred of one a other, so we have lost the whole worl and our sickness is incurable." The power to proselyte is no longer linke to the sword. Thousands are callin for the Bible to contrast Christianit with the Koran. Recently Moslem ordered in one month 100,000 Bibl to be printed in Arabic at Beirut. I the past year Christ has been preache on the streets of what were considere the most dangerous cities, like Mecc and Medina, to which tens of thou sands make annual pilgrimages.

In Cairo hundreds of students fro their great university throng the mi sions to hear converted Moslems te the story of the Cross. The rush fo the truth is evidently ushering in a epoch beyond human vision. Pionee missionaries have had fifty years o long suffering and patient waiting, bu now has opened an era for action.

MORNING HYMN

BY JOSEPH HAMILTON

Almighty Father! Throned in heaven high,
Yet to thy feeble children always nigh:
We rise to bless thee for the morning light,
And all thy tender care throughout the night.

Strong Son of God! Who ere creation's morn,
Before the angels or the worlds were born,
To die for sinners wast ordained; Oh may
Thy precious blood wash all our sins away.

Eternal Spirit! Source of light and fire:
With holy zeal our hearts and lives inspire;
Guide, guard, control; allay our needless fears;
Revive our hope, and wipe away our tears.

Thrice Holy Trinity! Thou three in one,
Whose love eternal, like the circling sun,
Sweeps round our sinful world: for this we pray,
That all the world may see a heavenly day.

TURNING MISERY INTO MIGHT

IF it were merely that a thousand little motherless and fatherless boys and girls in a distant land would otherwise have to share the poverty and misery endured by hundreds of thousands n that same country, we might not feel it to be our iuty and delight to keep this small host of Chinese rphans continually before our readers. But these housand and five young lives have become our vards for a much higher purpose than merely to give hem a good start in life. These lives are destined o have implanted in them the truths of the Gospel f Jesus Christ—if you do your part. These boys nd girls by your provision will become just so nany living units of Christianizing influence in hat vast heathen population.

All missionary enterprise to-day is concentrating pon childhood as the surest and speediest method f transforming heathen lands. And here in our ands have been placed this remarkable company f bright, impressionable lives to be given the imress of Him who, looking with divine wisdom forvard through the centuries, laid down this very rinciple of his church's growth in the urgent adnonition: "Suffer the little children to come unto ne . . . for of such is the kingdom of heaven."

We have courage in upholding this God-given ork because of the strong interest and willing help nown by so many of our readers. Several hundred f these children are now assured their care and ducation in the orphanage through the goodness f patrons who contribute $20 annually for the purose, the cost per annum for one child. But many eaders cannot devote so much to this object, and naller gifts that continually come in from prayerul hearts, swell the fund, which is devoted in its enrety to the work. That should be of great satisaction to all who have a part in this work, for they an feel, whether they do little or much, that their ifts are spent directly upon the children.

Will such an impulse as this that prompted ertha Lee to send $1 be allowed to waste itself in uitless benefit to "some heathen nobody"? Not if we read our Bible aright. She says: "It is not very much, but I am a poor girl and I wanted to help a little. One that loves children." You have helped much, not little, Bertha Lee.

Many say, as does "A Friend from Scotia," who sends $2: "I wish it were ten times as much." We believe every gift will accomplish all the giver's heart desires. A letter whose every line speaks of age, contains five dollars, and a wish that it were a million "to help bring all China to the feet of the Lord." Who will say that the Lord cannot or will not endow that five dollars with the potency of a million for spreading the Gospel through the years to come?

ALL THEY ASK IS A FAIR CHANCE

Reader, Mebane, N. C., writes: "Please accept this (50 cents) as a small offering for the China orphans. It is very small, and I wish I could send more, but can't just now. I'm interested, even if my gift is small."

Mrs. G. M., Toronto, Ohio, writes: "I have noticed your appeal for funds to help support the Chinese orphans. I am inclosing $5 of the Lord's money, which I hope you will apply to the fund, and may God's blessing go with it. My prayer is that many of them may be saved and that they will enter into the Lord's work, and be the means of helping to save China for Christ. For truly the harvest is great, but the laborers are few."

Mrs. K. M. H., Lebanon, Ind., writes: "Enclosed please find $2 for the China Orphan Fund. I trust it may help a little. I am a widow, seventy years old, dependent on my children, so cannot send large amounts. I have tried to help many of the causes which THE CHRISTIAN HERALD brings to our notice. I have read and loved the paper twenty-one years, and expect to take it all my days."

Mr. and Mrs. L. A. S. send $20, in the prayerful hope that "God will bless it to the glorifying of his holy name." And so the dollars come in that mean safety, health, education, and, God willing, salvation and a life of Christian service for one thousand and five cast-out Chinese children. Children whose hearts are just as tender, just as capable of love and gratitude as the hearts of our happy Christian American boys and girls. Will you help to carry on this important and beautiful work? Address China Orphan Fund, CHRISTIAN HERALD, Bible House, New York.

BIBLE-BURNING IN THE PHILIPPINES

NEWS was received in New York a few days ago of the burning of some two hundred and fifty Bibles in the public plaza of Vigan, one of the most important cities of uzon, in the Philippines. The Renacimiento Filino of Manila, of February 3, gives the particulars the occurrence and says: "The Bibles were rned by representatives of the Catholic Church, evidence of the displeasure of the old established urch over the activity displayed by the Protestant ssionaries in spreading the Word of God throughout the provinces." It adds that it was "one of the st fanatical and iniquitous acts perpetrated in e name of religion since the days of the inquisiin." We quote the following details from the anila journal:

"As reported by witnesses of Vigan, the facts e as follows: Some three weeks ago the traveling presentatives of the American Bible Association nounced a series of cinematograph exhibitions in gan, the capital of Ilocos Sur. The Bibles sold re paper bound, and printed in the Ilocano lanage. As an inducement to the purchase of the bles, and an added inducement to witness the riptural films to be shown by the traveling cineatograph entertainment, two propositions were made to the public of Vigan. The first was that with every Bible sold a ticket was to be given gratis to the cinematograph show. The second was that with each ticket to the performance a Bible was to be given. The prices of the Bibles were 10 and 20 centavos only. As a result, more than 6,000 Bibles were sold during the three days during which Protestant missionaries exhibited the films.

"Two religious organizations, however, are contesting the field in that district, the representatives of one of the Catholic Church organizations contesting the entrance of the Protestant missionaries. In opposition to the Bible distribution scheme of the Protestants, the Catholic authorities evolved an idea which was expected to set at naught the efforts of the American Bible Association. During the three evenings' performance of the traveling cinematograph, the lighting arrangements of which were operated by means of the automobile motor which carried the cinematograph machine and outfit, some five thousand of the good books were taken as admission fees to the tent-hall erected by the Protestants.

"The day following the last Protestant performance, announcement was made by the representatives of the Catholic Church that they had leased the local cinematograph owned by Sr. Reyes, and that a cinematograph performance under the auspices of the Catholic Church would be given on that evening. Most interesting of all was the announcement that the price for admission would be a Bible. No cash would be accepted; Bibles only were to be legal tender at the box office.

"More than two thousand admission fees to the older church cinematograph performance were paid by means of the unique currency. Little knew the spectators who had paid their admission by means of Bibles what was to be the final end. The result was shown on the following afternoon, however, when the public of Vigan was invited by the representatives of the Church of Rome to witness a unique spectacle upon the church plaza. Thousands of Vigan people gathered at the hour named, and were treated to the unprecedented spectacle of two thousand five hundred Christian Bibles being consumed in a fire ignited for their destruction in the center of the plaza. No explanation of the meaning of the act was given by the Catholic authorities, but the understanding was that jealousy of the success of the Protestant missionaries was the primary cause of the action of the Roman church officials.

A WEEK IN THE WORLD'S NEWS

Getting Everybody Employed

THE problem of the unemployed has had the attention of legislatures and social organizations for months. In different sections demonstrations by groups of unemployed men whose real relation to the problem of employment is not determined, have produced unfavorable press notices. In New York State Governor Glynn, through the Department of Agriculture, managed to find work on farms of the State for the unemployed of New York City. Applications were invited and arrangements made to transport the men free of charge. It was stated that 10,000 workers were needed in the country. On March 16 an advance contingent of some one hundred men, including a few boys and some women, all of whom had stated that they were experienced farm workers, were sent to an interior point of the State. The result thus far has not been such as was expected, as the "laborers" seem unwilling to accept much better terms than were offered by farmers, and the latter do not appear keen for engaging city workers. The experiment will probably be given a longer test.

Woman Suffrage Postponed

THE Senate took final and adverse action on March 19 on the joint resolution to submit to the States a constitutional amendment for woman suffrage, the vote standing 59 in favor and 34 opposed, but less than the two-thirds vote necessary. This postpones the time when the country may speak upon this question. Before the vote was taken unsuccessful attempts were made to attach the race question to the proposed amendment by limiting woman suffrage to white women. The National American Woman Suffrage Association has formally requested President Wilson to name the first Saturday in May as an annual "Woman's Independence Day, in recognition of the loyalty of American women to the spirit and claims of 1776."

Keel of Our Greatest Ship Laid

LOOKING forward to the launching, ten months hence, of what will then be the greatest of superdreadnoughts, excelling the Pennsylvania, now in course of construction at Newport News, the keel of the new United States battleship, to be known as No. 39 until named, was laid in the New York navy yard at Brooklyn March 19, Assistant Secretary of the Navy F. D. Roosevelt fastening the first bolt plate in place in the presence of a small company who stood uncovered during the ceremony, the navy yard band playing the "Star Spangled Banner."

Black Sea Tidal Wave

A HURRICANE which drove the waters of the Black Sea in waterspouts and a tidal wave inland on March 14, caused death to over 1,000 persons and destroyed hundreds of buildings. The storm lasted two hours and wrought widespread destruction. The Russian province of Kutais, where the storm occurred, faces both the Sea of Azov and the Black Sea, and the devastated villages were largely inhabited by fishermen and farmers.

For Practical Arbitration

THERE is now sitting in Washington the International Tribunal of Arbitration, created by treaty, to consider pecuniary claims between this country and Great Britain, involving damages approximating $6,000,000. Some of these complaints have grown out of the Spanish-American war, one being for damages claimed to have been sustained by Great Britain by Admiral Dewey's cutting of the cable in Manila Bay. Loss of missionary property through native attacks in Africa form the largest one American claim. The president of the committee is from France, and it includes Canadian as well as American and British members.

Tragedy in French Politics

BECAUSE of political opposition on the part of a Paris paper, Le Figaro, to the minister of finance, M. Caillaux, the wife of the latter on March 16 shot to death Gaston Calmette, the editor of the paper. Some domestic scandal seemed involved in connection with the paper's attempt to destroy the standing of the minister of finance, who was pleading in the keeping of an income tax, unpopular with Le Figaro. The murderess was imprisoned, the husband resigned from the cabinet. Tremendous public excitement was caused by the tragedy and loyalists in Paris sought to turn the alleged revelations of political immorality on the part of the minister of finance to their advantage. Rioting occurred in Paris in connection with attempts of Royalists to make addresses on the grave.

Blind Boys Guard Royalty

A BAND of blind boys from Scotia marched the entrance to the National Institute for the Blind, London, on March 20, when the king and queen visited it on their coronation tour. Great numbers of blind Britons assembled outside the hall to cheer the royal pair.

Railroads Getting Attention

PRESIDENT WILSON is giving close attention to the various questions now affecting the railroad business. The application of Eastern roads for an advance of 5 per cent. in freight rates is still under advisement; the effect of the New Haven Railroad are about to be submitted to Attorney-General McReynolds in hope that a plan for untangling the various parts may be evolved; the Lehigh Valley Railroad is made co-respondent with the Lehigh Valley Coal Company and other corporations in a suit by the government under the Sherman anti-trust law.

FAMOUS WELLESLEY COLLEGE HAS SERIOUS FIRE.

A FIRE, said to have done a million dollars of damage, attacked Wellesley College at Wellesley, Mass., on the night of March 17, and only the splendid courage of the three hundred young women students and instructors in College Hall, the burned building, prevented loss of life. Two women on the floor that gave the alarm and in response to the fire gongs the smoke-filled halls were later rescued with very great difficulty by heads of houses, few of whom carried personal effects. Her quick thought in this and presence in every matter cost of the building, which was one now gutted by flames. The rescue was brought to students is credited with the perfect working of the system. At the first call outside the building the students and three members of the faculty did not suspect, and then members returned into the building and assisted them to escape. The fire did so quickly, and its discovery was in the nick of time. It was generally decided to close the college until some time in April, and large numbers of the students started at once for home, several hundred of them being attended at the Grand Central Station in New York by an excited crowd of relatives and friends.

Practical Business Altruism

SEVERAL months ago the business world was startled by the closing of the bank maintained by the proprietors of a group of department stores doing business in several cities. The resultant troubles involved the Fourteenth Street Store and the Simpson-Crawford Company of New York, whose combined army of over two thousand employees faced discharge on March 14 through the compulsory closing of those stores by order of the receiver. Mr. John Claflin, head of the H. B. Claflin Company, promptly directed the stores controlled by his firm to find places for as many as possible of those employees; other big department houses also found room for many upon their rolls, by their timely act preventing a great deal of suffering, as practically all deserving employees of the two closed stores were thus taken care of. The affairs of the banking house and its department store connections are now matters of court inquiry and adjustment.

To Preach for World Peace

THE secretary of the Church Peace Union, founded by Andrew Carnegie, has stated to the press that arrangements are under way to secure the consent of upward of 50,000 ministers to devote their preaching on May 17 to the advance of universal peace and to advocating the third Hague conference. Bishop Greer is president of the Union and Rev. Frederick Lynch is secretary. A system of local committees throughout the United States, with ministers as the nuclei, is proposed, and other activities are in contemplation.

Farmers to Benefit by Parcel Post

FARMERS will be able to send butter, eggs, fruits and other commodities in securely packed boxes or crates, weighing a maximum of twenty pounds, within first and second zones of the parcel post system, an approximate distance of one hundred and fifty miles from point of shipment, by a change in the regulations announced by Postmaster-General Burleson, March 15.

Report on "Monroe" Disaster

AFTER taking voluminous testimony in relation to the Monroe steamship disaster off the Virginia coast on January 30, the Federal Board of Inquiry has rendered a divided opinion which leaves the blame for the tragedy undecided, since one captain is blamed by one inspector and the other captain by the other inspector. The case must now be reviewed by the supervising inspector at New York. Our story of the accident stated that the Nantucket went into dry dock at Norfolk. A correspondent states that we should have said Newport News.

Irish War May Be Near

THE crisis in Home Rule for Ireland seemed close at hand March 19, when Premier Asquith refused in Parliament to consider compromise proposals made by leaders of the Ulster Unionists, Sir Edward Carson and Andrew Bonar Law, to the effect that the question be submitted to the country on the understanding that if the referendum resulted adversely to the Unionists' cause Ulster would accept the decision. Further developments indicate the gravity of the situation, and the departure for Ulster of several Unionist leaders gave rise to predictions of government plans for military occupation of the province and a possible early conflict of arms.

AT EASTER TIME*

SUNDAY SCHOOL LESSON BY DR. AND MRS. WILBUR F. CRAFTS

JESUS rose from his grave in the early dawn of that first day of the week nearly nineteen hundred years ago, and since then we have called it "the Lord's Day," or we say "Sabbath" with a new meaning. The angel who rolled away the stone was the first to see him risen; then the Roman soldiers, the keepers who did shake and became as dead men when they saw him come out of his grave. (Matt. 28: 4.) Then he was seen by Mary Magdalene as she stood at the empty garden tomb weeping, because she thought some one had taken away his body, and she did not know where they had laid him. The next to see the risen Lord were the women who had come bringing spices to wrap around the dead body of Jesus. Jesus met them when they were on their way somewhere along the road over the hills to tell the apostles what the angel had told them: "He is not here, for he is risen." "Behold Jesus met them, saying, All hail. And they came and held him by the feet and worshiped him." (Matt. 28: 6, 9.) Then Jesus said unto them: "Go tell my brethren that they go into Galilee, and there shall they see me." (Matt. 28: 10.) And so women were the first heralds of the risen Lord.

Probably the next to see Jesus were the two friends walking together from Jerusalem to Emmaus in the afternoon of the resurrection day. And as they walked they talked about what had been reported in Jerusalem: that Jesus had risen from the dead. And as they walked and talked, Jesus himself joined them, but they did not recognize him. They probably had no personal acquaintance with him. He joined their conversation without revealing himself, and when they had told him all that they had heard, Jesus replied by repeating from the prophets what had been written concerning the event. He taught them as a rabbi might have done, but with such unusual fervor and insight that they afterwards testified: "Did not our heart burn within us, while he talked with us by the way, and while he opened to us the Scriptures?"

When they reached their home in Emmaus, Jesus still being with them, they invited him to come in and eat with them. And it was in the breaking of bread that they came to a realization that their guest was Jesus himself! Gladly would they have detained him, but he vanished out of their sight.

When we, the writers of this lesson, were travelers in the Holy Land, we yearned to take the walk from Jerusalem to Emmaus, and we would have had great thoughts by the way, and would earnestly have prayed that his Spirit might have gone with us, and instructed and inspired us. But we were told that the site of Emmaus is not surely known. We comforted ourselves with the assurance that wherever we go in this world Jesus will walk and talk with us, and so he will with each and every one.

A certain gentleman who had much to say about "materializing the truth" chided us for going to the Holy Land at all. "And what did you find there?" he said, "nothing but an empty tomb!" We replied, "Yes, we saw the tomb, and rejoiced that it was empty, for if the body of Jesus had been there all hope of our own resurrection would have been destroyed."

On March 27, 1904, Mars Hill in Athens was covered with pilgrims on their way to participate in the World's Sunday School Convention in Jerusalem. It was the Sabbath day, and Dr. John Ports was the preacher. In beginning his sermon he said: "Amidst these immediate surroundings, the apostle Paul in lonely grandeur, in the midst of philosophers and a miscellaneous crowd, proclaimed the glorious Gospel of Jesus and the resurrection. You remember some said: 'What will this babbler say?' other some, 'He seemeth to be a setter forth of strange gods,' because he preached unto them Jesus and the resurrection. Therefore the place where we, in the providence of God, are gathered together this morning has a significance all its own." Some of the points made by Dr. Ports are as follows: "There is no subject in the New Testament used for so many purposes as the glorious resurrection. Think of it to-day in relation to salvation. 'Who was delivered up for our offenses, and was raised again for our justification.' Think of it in relation to hope and heaven. 'Blessed be the God and Father of our Lord Jesus Christ, which according to his abundant mercy hath begotten us again unto a lively hope by the resurrection of Jesus Christ from the dead.'

"Think of it in relation to bereavement: 'I would not have you to be ignorant, brethren, concerning them which are asleep, . . . for if we believe that Jesus died and rose again, even so them also which sleep in Jesus will God bring with him.'

"Think of it in relation to spiritual life and work: 'If ye then be risen with Christ, seek those things which are above, where Christ sitteth on the right hand of God.' 'That I might know him and the power of his resurrection.' To preach Jesus and the resurrection is to preach a triumphantly vindicated Christ. Suppose the grave had not been vacant on the morning of the third day; suppose the Roman seal had not been broken; suppose the stone had not been rolled away. What then? Why, Jesus Christ an impostor and Christianity a dismal failure and a fraud. Therefore to preach Jesus and the resurrection is to preach a triumphantly vindicated Christ. The preaching of Jesus and the resurrection is the only hope for the world's evangelization." (The occasion on which this sermon was preached is one of the most vivid memories of the Sunday School Cruise, and second only to the communion service that was held within a few rods of Calvary.)

"THE Garden Tomb" for twenty-five years or more has been considered by English Christians the veritable tomb of Christ, in contradistinction to "the Holy Sepulcher," so-called, over which the great old church is built. Professor E. Warren Clark says of the "Garden Tomb": "The location, structure and remarkable character of this sepulcher classes it among the most interesting discoveries of modern times. First, its location. It fulfils the requirement of being a new tomb in a garden near the place of crucifixion and 'nigh at hand' (John 19: 41, 42); the hill Golgotha itself fits into the narrative perfectly. It is not inside the ancient Herodian wall, but without the gate, and yet 'nigh unto the city.' It is close to the public highway whence 'they that passed railed on him, wagging their heads.' (Mark 15: 29.) It is upon an elevation on the summit of which is a pile of stones. Upon removing a few of these the visitor looks down into a deep pit where the skulls and other bones of executed criminals may yet be seen. West of this pile of stones under the edge of the hill is the sepulcher hewn in the rock (Matt. 27: 60), which we believe in all probability to be the tomb of Joseph of Arimathea. This remarkable proximity of the place of criminal execution reminds us of the paradoxical prophecy of Isaiah (53: 9): 'He made his grave with the wicked and with the rich in his death.' It has but one of the three loculi finished, and it has been occupied for one burial only."

To me the darksome tomb
Is but a narrow room
Where I must rest in peace from sorrow free.
Thy death shall give me power
To cry in that dark hour:
"O death, O grave, where is thy victory?"
The grave cannot destroy;
Only the flesh can die;
And e'en the body triumphs o'er decay;
Clothed by thy wondrous might,
In robes of dazzling light,
My flesh shall burst the grave at that last day.

S. FRANCK.

A dying Scotchman was asked: "Have you a glimpse of glory now, my brother, that you are dying?" He roused himself from his lethargy at such a question, and raising himself from the agonies of death, said: "I'll hae none o' your glimpses noo that I am dying, since I ha'en a full look at him for forty year." We all hope to have that full look at Christ in dying. Let us have it now!

A little girl connected with the Evangelical school in Rome had a long sickness. Her great delight was to have the Bible read to her. And as she was dying she said: "I'm going to Jesus—here he is—I see him, mamma. He is come to take me—Jesus!" and her face had the smile of an angel. An old man who had frequently been to visit her said: "Tell me, how is one able to rejoice at a moment which all the world fears?" That scene made a Christian out of him.

We walk through the cemetery and read what we find on the tombstones. We discover that death claims all ages. A few days or months old—one, two, three, ten, forty, fifty, seventy, a hundred years old—perhaps older. Referring to this, a preacher once said: "Some seeds fall from the trees in the early springtime; some in the bright summer days; some in the autumn's mellowness, and some cling to the boughs long after winter has come, and at last fall in the blanket of snow, which God sees is as necessary to them as the soft and warm soil is to other seeds. So he calls some to drop their mortality that it may develop the beauty of the immortal in early childhood; some in middle manhood; and some in old age. He times all our coming and going."

The sorrowful tree grows on the Island of Goa, near Bombay, India. It is so called because it flourishes only in the night. All through the day and even at sunset no flowers are to be seen; but when it begins to grow dark, the tree is quite full of them, and thus it continues flowering in the night throughout the whole year. Does it not remind us of the human flowers in the cemetery, gathered in the night of death to be gathered into garlands for Christ, to last throughout eternity?

Last summer in passing through a churchyard cemetery in Lincolnshire, England, in which we saw graves several hundred years old, we were much impressed to see stones in the shape of hearts with inscriptions upon them lying quite generally upon the graves. It was a tender sight and made us think of the love that could not grow old, or be effaced by death.

The flowers never seem so beautiful as now. And springing, joyous life is everywhere luring us to think more of life than death. Let them teach us sweet lessons of how to live nobler, sweeter lives. Let us be as the lily, pure in thought and word; sweet as the rose in deeds that make others glad; filled with humility like the violets; strong and bright like the daisies; tender and sweet like the hyacinths; cheery and bright like the daffodils. Thus, in our heart gardens, we may each grow an Easter bouquet that will not fade, but will be immortal.

OUR SUNDAY SCHOOL SUPERINTENDENTS' ROUND TABLE

—WOULD YOU kindly send a few suggestive names for our Ladies' Adult Bible Class?—Mrs. C. M. P.

Deborah Band (see Judges 4 and 5); the Jochebed Mothers' League (see Num. 26: 59, also Ex. 1); the Lois and Eunice Club (see II Tim. 1: 1-5).

—WE ARE ANXIOUS to have in our Sunday school a teachers' training course, and notes and outlines prepared. The American Institute of Sacred Literature has been introduced. Can you recommend this for special Bible study? If you cannot recommend this, will you put us in touch with something that is all right? —Mrs. L. O.

We would advise you by all means to use the teacher training course prepared by the International Sunday School Association. It is in line with other departments of Sunday school work. It is constructive, not destructive. It is prepared by those who have long been identified with Sunday school work, and fully know the needs of Sunday schools.

Questions and Answers

Questioner, Harrisburg, Ore. What is the best answer to the question why we should believe the Scriptures? Is the fact that the Bible is the only book handed down to us through the ages the best answer?

No; that is not the best answer. Some ancient writings, like the Vedas, for instance, are almost as ancient as the Bible. And many tablets and monuments are in existence, containing words written as long ago as the writings of the Scriptures. There are many powerful arguments for the Bible, but the greatest is that every person who will really study it finds that it does tell the truth about the human soul. When a man reads in an arithmetic that two and two make four, he does not stop to ask himself why he should believe the arithmetic. He knows instinctively and intuitively that the arithmetic is telling him the truth. So when an honest man studies the Bible he finds it full of truths about himself. The Bible tells him he is a sinner; and he knows that is true. The Bible tells him about God, and he finds in his heart a deep conviction that just such a God exists. The Bible offers forgiveness and the man knows he needs it. Step by step and point by point, the Bible shows the man what he is and what he needs and points the way to finding the fulfilment of his needs and desires. People find in the Bible help for bearing their trials, power to resist temptation, assurance of immortality and friendship with God. A man who never saw the Bible before, when he reads of God in it, realizes that he always needed and longed for God but did not know how to find him till the Bible showed him the way. Particularly does it show him how to find God in Christ. That, after all, is the supreme mission of the Bible—to lead men to Christ. But, again, taking the Bible as literature, we find that it hangs together, that it bears within itself the evidence that it is true. Start with the writings of Paul. Here is a level-headed, highly educated, practical man who has left to the world's literature certain letters to groups of friends. These letters tell about Paul's personal knowledge of Christ, his personal friendship for him, his personal endeavors to forward the work of Christ which he had formerly antagonized until Christ himself appeared to him and set him right. Paul tells of becoming acquainted later with men who had known Christ in the flesh, Peter, James, John and others. We find that these men also wrote about Jesus, John writing three letters and a narrative of his life; Peter writing two letters, and apparently giving much of the information to his nephew Mark, who wrote another version of the life of Jesus. Luke, another friend of Paul and probably also a personal friend of Jesus, wrote another version of his life and wrote the history of what his apostles did through his power after he had risen from the dead and gone back to the heavenly world. These were all good, honest, intelligent men. We may believe what they wrote about Christ and his salvation just as we believe what Cæsar wrote about the Gallic Wars. Further, we find that Christ came from a people whose history is recorded in the books of the Bible and whose prophets uttered messages from God, many of them foretelling the coming of Christ. Peter connects the messages of the prophets with those of himself and the other apostles in II Peter 3: 2: "That ye may be mindful of the words which were spoken before by the holy prophets, and of the commandment of us the apostles of the Lord and Saviour." The Bible holds together about the person of Christ as the great divine-human document which reveals him to the world.

C. W. M., Roulette, Pa. 1. Andover Theological Seminary is independent, though chiefly dominated by Congregational influence; the same is true of Hartford Seminary. Union Theological Seminary is independent though largely under Presbyterian influence. Columbia University is non-sectarian. 2. Yes, professors in theological institutions are required to accept the position of the denomination controlling them, but often much freedom of interpretation is allowed in putting and answering the question itself.

Mrs. G. C. H., Columbus, Ohio. Our class recently studied The Valley, by Elizabeth Miller, and found the time well spent, learning much about the wanderings of the Children of Israel. We would like to have another book that would teach us more about the Bible and its times. Can you suggest one?

Ben Hur is probably by far the best book for such a purpose. It gives an amazing insight into the life and times of Jesus, catching also the spiritual power of the New Testament message. Even if it has been read once for its narrative interest it could well be studied again for its side lights on Scripture and the personality of Christ. Miss Miller, who wrote The Yoke, wrote a second book, Saul of Tarsus, which is also to be highly commended. Dr. James M. Ludlow has written a book, Deborah, a story dealing with the Maccabean period, published by Revell. Cyrus Townsend Brady's story The Fetters of Freedom, another narrative of St. Paul, is published by Dodd, Mead & Co. Then there are the novels dealing with important epochs and characters in church history, such as the Schonberg-Cotta Family, by Elizabeth R. Charles, dealing with the life and times of Luther, and Romola, by George Eliot, telling of Savonarola. If you wish to consider other books than novels, such a work as Twice-Born Men, by Harold Begbie, would be found extremely interesting, or you might wish to take some such work as Professor Rauschenbusch's Christianity and the Social Crisis, or some other work dealing in an interesting way with the serious economic problems of the day.

Reader, Vanhorn, Iowa. The passage in II Cor. 6: 14 should be interpreted in the light of I Cor 7: 12-17, in order to get a clear understanding of the apostle's meaning. He nowhere advises that a believing husband should leave his unbelieving wife, or the believing wife her husband; but rather holds that the unbeliever is sanctified by the believing one. (See verse 14.) There is always a danger in taking an isolated passage of Scripture out of its proper relation to the whole, instead of finding the true meaning by taking the related passages together.

W. E. G., York, Pa. Kindly point out the texts and evidence for your recent statement that "all tithing must be left to the enlightened conscience." Tithing is so fundamental it ought to be made Scripturally very plain and not left to human notion.

All the matters of the Mosaic law were put on a new basis after the life and sacrifice of Christ. Peter had to learn by a special vision that it was no longer wrong to eat the meats forbidden by the Jewish ceremonial law. Paul vehemently insisted that the basic law of circumcision was no longer binding. There is in the New Testament no specific command for tithing, but on the other hand the apostolic counsel that each Christian should, on the first day of the week, "lay by in store as God has prospered him." The New Testament standard is that all our money belongs to God; that we are but stewards of it, and that not one-tenth but ten-tenths must be used for his glory. The special value of the tithing method, however, is that it sets aside at least a tenth of the increase for definite Christian service.

D. B. J., Missouri. All that we know about the fowls that Noah took into the ark is told in Gen. 7. The clean were taken by sevens in order, as the older commentators concluded, that three pairs might be for perpetuating the species, while the seventh was reserved for sacrifice. Later scholars, however, hold that the passage should be interpreted as meaning seven pairs, and it is pointed out in verse 9 that they all went into the ark in pairs. It is evident from the Genesis narrative that the distinction between clean and unclean must have existed even before the flood.

Mrs. W. H. A. The case you mention is sad in the extreme. It would of course be impossible for the daughter you mention to honor her parent, because honor has been lost. The Scriptural injunction to honor parents can only mean that parents are to be honored when they themselves keep the moral law and so are deserving of honor. But the daughter you refer to, as well as all other children of erring parents, should remember the universal command to love. A mother loves her child even when he goes into the deepest sin; so it is not too much to ask the child to love his mother if she herself goes into evil ways. The great Christian Gospel of love can be brought to bear upon this as upon every other problem of human relationship. It is not at all improbable that if this daughter will still manifest a kindly interest in her mother, will seek to serve her and help her, will pray for her and continue patient and thoughtful and kind, she may yet win her to Christ and to a life of righteousness.

C. A. C., Edmonton, Canada. In the passage in John 20: 23, the word "remit" means "forgive." This power, however, was never exercised by any of the apostles and it plainly was never understood by them as possessed by them personally, or conveyed to them, but simply as a declarative message, to announce the divine readiness to forgive the repentant sinner.

Mr. E. T., of Petoskey, Mich., writes us the following interesting letter, which is in itself an answer to the question she asks. It states very well what tradition teaches about this fascinating subject: "In my readings of Jesus, I do not find any one that can understand what he did was during the eighteen years about which the Gospels are silent. In the last part of the thirteenth chapter of Matthew, we are told he had four brothers; sisters, three or more. Had there been only two sisters the expression would have been: 'Are they not both with us?' There were thus at least seven brothers and sisters all younger than Jesus. Tradition tells us that Joseph died soon after his return from Jerusalem. They were a poor family, some of the children very young. I think Jesus staid by his mother and helped to care for those children until the youngest one was grown. While he worked, God taught him. Humility was a big item from first to last. God planned that he be born in a stable and laid in a manger to teach humility. When the children were able to do for themselves, Jesus commenced his teachings, and the family broke up soon after. His mother and some of the brothers followed Jesus' company. His mother was always poor, and Jesus gave her to John rather than send her to her own children among the old neighbors."

P. D., Easton, Neb. A carat is the unit employed in weighing diamonds, pearls and other jewels; it is equal to 3.168 Troy grains. It is also used as a term to express the fineness of gold, and means the one-twenty-fourth part. A ring 18 carats fine is eighteen twenty-fourths pure gold and six twenty-fourths alloy.

M. R. K., Chicago, Ill. Barbers were formerly surgeons as well as hair-cutters. The pole was used as a sign to indicate the barber-surgeon's trade, and was painted with stripes around it to imitate the use of bandages in blood-letting.

A. L. B., Amsterdam, Ohio. John 1: 28 clearly states that the Baptist was baptizing in Bethabara beyond Jordan, and this, it must be inferred from the narrative, was before the baptism of Jesus. For more explicit statement, see Matt. 3: 5.

M. E. T., Crawfordsville, Iowa. It is believed that under the new currency law, existing forms of currency will not be disturbed except the national bank notes. Bonds now issued to secure this issue will be taken up at the rate of $25,000,000 a year and national bank currency will thus be gradually retired.

B. W. R., Parishville, N. Y. "Talc" is a very soft mineral, magnesium silicate, sometimes known as French chalk, and soapstone, and is used as a lubricant, filler for paper and in toilet powders. Address any manufacturer of the latter for further information.

Mrs. M. L. M., Cleburne, Texas. Concerning some of the matters mentioned in your letter there probably never will be such a thing as entire agreement. We must respect the opinions of others, however, if we believe them sincere. We should all be in the attitude of those who are willing to welcome light on matters we do not now see with clear vision.

A. C., Arlington, N. J. The "abomination of desolation" referred to in Matt. 24: 15 is believed to have been intended to point to the Roman ensigns, as the symbols of an idolatrous and unclean pagan power. In another book (I Maccabees 15: 4), which, though not in the canon of Scripture, is authentic history, the same expression is applied to the idolatrous profanation of the Jewish altar by Antiochus Epiphanes.

A LETTER 4,000 YEARS OLD

IF SOME one handed you a letter written over 4,000 years ago in Abraham's time and in his own city of Ur, how you would value it! The great find of Babylonian tablets of that period, a number of which have come into the possession of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD, makes this a possibility. Read last week's issue of this journal for full information concerning the tablets and how you may get one.

You scarcely can imagine conditions more inviting than those under which Crisco is manufactured. In sparkling bright rooms, uniformed employees make and pack Crisco.

THE MORE EXCELLENT WAY

WHEN the Greeks were about to pass the islands where the Sirens resided, three different remedies were invented for protection against their wiles: two by Ulysses, and the third by Orpheus. Ulysses commanded his associates to stop their ears with wax; while he, determining to make the trial and yet avoid the danger, ordered himself to be tied fast to a mast of the ship, giving strict charge not to be unbound, even though he himself should entreat it. But Orpheus, without any binding at all, escaped the danger by loudly chanting to his harp the praises of the gods, whereby he drowned the voices of the Sirens.

This illustrates the two universal methods of meeting temptation and other evils—the negative method and the positive method. The first seeks to exclude evil; the second to overcome evil with good. All prohibitive methods are negative. This kind has its uses, it also has its limits. The positive method is more efficient. To cease to do evil is important; to learn to do well is far more important. By learning to do well, we cease to do evil, just as darkness is driven out by the incoming dawn.

Phillips Brooks once said that it is not worth while to cross the street to break a man's idol, but that it is worth while to cross the ocean to tell him about God. Another great preacher declares that the reason why many men fail is because they thrust out the vice, and then forget to lay hold of the virtue. They evict the unclean spirit and leave a vacant house. He asserts that it is not reformation, but transformation, which men need. And to be transformed, a man must welcome the Spirit of God—the Holy Spirit—into his heart. There is an absorption of good that guards the soul against the infection of evil. There is a life of fellowship with Christ which can pass through temptation and yet be kept pure.

In the schoolroom, one teacher is inclined to begin every command with the words "Do not." "Do not whisper." "Do not read in such a monotonous tone." "Do not recite your history lesson like a parrot." Another teacher enthuses her pupils with her own love of knowledge. In the reading classes she makes them feel that they are speaking their own words. In the history class they are present on the battlefield. And, somehow, there is seldom any noise in the schoolroom from mischief or weariness or laziness, there is only the stir of interest and industry. By using the positive method she has awakened in her pupils high ideals and aspirations.

Thus it is always in the great school of life, and in the problems of humanity. We must not forget that "e-duco" means "to lead forth." Lead men out of darkness into the light. Arouse in them the latent longing for goodness and God. Get hold of the faith that lies buried in even the most hopeless nature, quicken it with love, and help that soul to dare to try to live by it. The positive, vital method is what men need.

Why is it that the true Christian does not hear the voice of the tempter? Because he is singing praises to his God. He knows there is a power in this that is greater than chains, and more effective than stopping the ears or using other negative methods. If he continues to sing praises to God out of a consecrated heart, he will pass all the sirens of the world in safety, for he has found the more excellent way.

BIBLE-BURNING IN THE PHILIPPINES

"All of Vigan is in a furore at present over the occurrence. Communications by the scores are said to have been exchanged between church and insular authorities over the matter, and the departments of three countries may soon be in correspondence. The act of the Catholic authorities served in a way as a boomerang as regards the sale of Bibles, as on the day following the plaza Bible burning, more than three thousand more Bibles were sold by the representative of the American Bible Association."

Discussing the event, the Renacimiento Filipino says editorially: "It is sad to have to record that the act was overdone. It bespeaks a narrowness of vision that can be attributed only to the religious fanatic. It is an example of the lesson that the Catholic Church taught six centuries ago. . . . While the question involved is one that has taken up the time of humanity and arrested the attention of the greatest minds and cost the lives of the most worthy men, it is a question that the Renacimiento Filipino is not afraid to touch upon. Independence of religious thought encourages it here to brand that scene as a remnant of religious barbarism as one of the most iniquitous and uncalled-for acts ever done in the name of a world-wide religious belief. . . . To burn those books in public, in the presence of an invited and awe-struck populace, is the last word in intolerance in this age of religious enlightenment."

The American Bible Society in the Bible House, New York, explains through one of its officials that the books burned were portions of Scripture, Gospels, etc., and that it had received word that some 250 copies were destroyed, and not 2,500 as reported in the Manila newspaper. The principle involved, however, is the same, irrespective of the number of books destroyed. It showed Rome's ancient hatred of the Bible and contempt for God's Word to be as vindictively active and destructive to-day as in those medieval times when Bible burnings were of frequent occurrence.

GO YE INTO ALL THE WORLD

BY CORNELIA F. WHITNEY

HO! to the harvest fields!
Reapers are few;
Riches of unshorn grain
Wait there for you.
Burnish your sickle blades
Bright for the Lord;
Haste, ere the daystar wanes,
Sheaves your reward!

Hark! 'tis the Husbandman
Calling for you;
"Rest not in idleness, Toilers are few."
Lo! from the sunrise lands
Famished calls rise;
Thirst-cries from Afric's sands
Reach to the skies.

List to the trumpet call
Circling the earth;
Millions are languishing
For the new birth.
Break them the Bread of Life;
Count not the loss;
Show them the world's one hope—
Calvary's Cross.

Northland and tropic isles,
Darkened Brazil,
Plead for the Gospel chimes
Dumb hearts to thrill.
Gird on your victor's sword,
Knights of our Lord;
Haste, ere the daylight fades,
Souls your reward!

PROFITABLE POULTRY KEEPING

EARNEST efforts are being made to relieve the congestion in cities by inducing some of the people to enter upon country life. This movement is not confined to our own land. It has been quite pronounced for many years in Belgium, France, Germany and England, and has also gained some headway in many other European countries.

For beginners with little or no capital, the question of a quick, ready-money income is of vital importance. There are two or three very promising prospects from this point of view, namely, the raising of truck or vegetable crops, cultivating such small fruits as strawberries, raspberries, etc., and the production of poultry and eggs. A small tract of orchard fruits in connection with poultry culture is strongly advocated as a highly profitable combination. The poultry, under successful management, would provide a ready-money income until the orchard came into bearing, and when the latter occurred, the income of the small holder would be both larger and steadier from year to year. Under any combination of the above-mentioned crops, the keeping of some poultry is urged as a means of instruction in the poultry industry and as a cash resource. For with the growth of population and the determination of the people to have pure-food laws enforced, there will be an increasing demand for fresh eggs as well as poultry for meat.

1. Begin with a few fowls. Many years ago the writer began with eighteen White Plymouth Rocks in order to acquire a practical knowledge without running too large a risk of loss. One of the greatest mistakes about keeping poultry or raising garden crops is the too prevalent belief that any one can do it successfully without previous experience. Let us set aside any such idea at once. Poultry need to be fed intelligently, to have their yards kept clean and sanitary, to be protected from inclement weather, and to be cared for when sick. When knowledge of these factors of successful poultry keeping have been learned, then it will be time to increase the size of the flock.

2. Don't overcrowd your quarters. Possibly more trouble will come to the poultry keeper from overcrowding than from any other cause. Chickens young and old are subject to ailments much as human beings are, and overcrowding is one of the chief means of spreading disease in poultry flocks.

3. Feed your fowls regularly. Better to keep fowls without food for a time than to overfeed them. Regular feeding tends to inculcate systematic methods on the part of poultry keepers and to maintain the vigor of the flock. And regular feeding includes a constant supply of clean, fresh water. This is particularly necessary in caring for poultry for the winter production of eggs. In freezing weather, supply the drinking-vessels with hot water. The labor will be more than paid for in the increased supply of eggs. Too many persons forget that an egg consists of about 60 per cent. water, and this must be supplied to fowls or eggs will not be produced so abundantly.

4. Keep the yards and pens clean. The former can be scraped with a hoe occasionally, and the refuse placed on the garden. No fertilizer can be purchased that will much surpass hen-yard scrapings in fertilizing value. Pens and dropping boards should be regularly cleaned and be given a sprinkling of slaked lime.

5. Guard vigilantly against chicken parasites. A dust bath of road dirt in a dry, sunny place is the best preventive against chicken lice. The fowls, when in health and vigor, will keep themselves practically free from this pest. But the chicken mite is not thus controlled. Its habit is to lodge under the perches during the day, only to crawl on to the fowls and suck their blood at night. Going over the perches with a paint brush and kerosene oil once or twice a week is an effective remedy for the chicken mite.

6. Keep some standard breed of fowls. The advantages of a definite breed over a mongrel or mixed breed, as the ordinary "barnyard" fowl, are many. Among these advantages may be mentioned the better results in breeding, increased opportunities for the sale of stock, a higher price for setting eggs, more uniformity in color, size, and shape of eggs, and better chances for higher prices for poultry. With spare moments alone given to the care of my small flock of fifty fowls, the income above expenditures during the past three years has averaged more than $130 per year, or more than $2.50 profit per hen each year. The receipts were secured without recourse to advertising, and without the receipt of fancy prices for eggs or stock, but are based on ordinary market prices of such products.

DOUBLING CHURCH ATTENDANCE

THE popular "Go-to-Church-Sunday" campaign achieved a signal success in the city of St. Paul on Sunday, March 1. The inspiring reports from a similar effort in Chicago and other cities encouraged the leaders to move forward with resolute wills. A special meeting was called of the ministers of the city. March 1 was chosen as the date of the effort in St. Paul, and an executive committee was appointed to employ all available means to urge general church attendance on that day.

On the committee were some of the most aggressive ministers in the city. Dr. M. D. Edwards, representing the Presbyterians, was chairman; Dr. C. T. Alexander (Baptist), Dr. G. M. Miller (Congregationalist), Dr. S. T. Willis (Disciples of Christ), Dr. W. S. Howard (Episcopalian), Rev. P. A. Long (Evangelical Association), Rev. P. S. Sjogren, Rev. C. E. Sybilrud and Rev. A. C. Kreinheder (Lutherans) and Dr. W. E. J. Gratz (Methodist).

As soon as the movement was organized and began work it grew with amazing rapidity and popularity. Cards and placards bearing the words: "Go to Church Sunday, March 1" were displayed and circulated all over the city, and the same slogan was in evidence on large cards on every street car in the Twin Cities. Thousands of "stickers" were supplied to business men who stuck them on the envelopes of their city letters. The telephone companies on Saturday and early Sunday morning rang up every subscriber and said: "We just called you to say, be sure and go to church March 1; that's all!" The newspapers, too, did great publicity service. The big department stores inserted Sunday campaign literature in their advertisements, and even in their packages of goods sent out to customers.

One hundred thousand people attended church services in St. Paul on that Sunday, which is double the number ordinarily attending. The people are enthusiastic over the result. A permanent publicity committee is now being formed to push the cause of the churches. Minneapolis had a similar campaign at the same time with results equally good. The best fruitage, however, will come in the permanent gains to the churches through "follow-up" methods, and this is what wise pastors and church officials are planning to do.

GREEN WIGS

BY MARGARET E. SANGSTER, JR.

Prelude

I AM lying flat on my back in bed trying to write an article with a cheerful spirit—to say nothing of a battered pencil. The reason tonsilitis and the cheerful spirit is ot very easy to capture. So, friends mine, if I seem to grope around for ords, remember that there is a buzz- w in my head, and if at times my ntences seem cross, remember that animal like a woodchuck is chew- g at my tonsils.

A few weeks ago I sat up stiffly in e subway train and gazed at a cer- in item in the fashion notes of my per. It was a startling little note inted in bold pe on a one- ch space. his is what it id:

"The mode hair dress- g will be fferent," the m ran, "for e ladies of shion will ear wigs to atch, or har- onize, with e color of eir gowns. e Russian urt ladies d some fa- ous Paris- is have al- ady been en at the eater or at lls with vid blue, k, crimson, orange, or green head- sses."

gasped and then I smiled, deris- ly, unbelievingly.

'Women will never cover up their tty hair," I soliloquized, "never. ey may slit their skirts and they y paint their faces, they may blow windows or slash paintings, but y will never wear colored wigs. ne clever reporter is trying to get a sensation." And I smiled again.

A week later I was walking up 'th Avenue in the late afternoon en I passed a little beauty parlor. ere, in a velvet-lined glass case, od wax heads covered with wigs of id color that caught and held the t rays of the sunshine.

looked at the case and then again aughed scornfully.

'Some clever hairdresser," I said myself, "has read the notice that aw in the paper. She will bring a at deal of notice to her little shop filling the windows with the latest of fashion gossip. And besides be- clever, she has a sense of humor." d I went on, smiling at the original ertisement.

was on my way to a concert a few hts later when I chanced to pass a hionable theater. As I drew near gaily lighted foyer, a gorgeous ousine with an impossible coat of ns painted on its door drew up at curbstone and a man jumped out l assisted a lady to alight. Before bewildered eyes a dazzling vision oped out and passed into the thea- a vision clad in bright green satin pers, green dress, and above all a en wig that shone vividly over a tling pink and white face.

gasped. My escort gasped. Then giggled, but my face was sober and et. I was thinking of the many ghs that I had had at the expense a sensational reporter and a clever rdresser. I gasped again.

What is the matter?" asked the at my side.

To think that she could," I mur- ed.

Women have always tried to make nselves as beautiful as possible. usands of years ago they strung h on dried fibres for necklaces and e flowers in their coarse, uncombed hair, and so attracted the attention they wished for. In Revolutionary days the first ladies of the land powdered their curls and looked very nearly as unnatural as the modern women with their colored wigs. And yet we look at the pictures with delight, and we call some of them charming.

In all parts of the world women are dressing their hair in silly, not at all pretty ways. In the wilds of Africa the belles twist their kinky wool into a tight knot and fasten it securely with an enemy's shin-bone. The effect is much worse than a green wig. In a part of Japan the girls build their glossy hair into huge butterflies. Wire frames are used for the purpose. In the far north the beautiful maidens (who are very fat and have noses that look like buttons) rub bear oil into their braids until they are very stiff and greasy looking. In Buckeburg, Germany, the women dress their hair after the fashion shown in the picture.

BUCKEBURG WOMEN IN FESTIVE COSTUME

On March 5 a Russian countess gave a grand ball in St. Petersburg. Seven colored wigs graced the party. They were of burnished gold, vivid blue, emerald green, magenta, deep violet, silver and pale blue.

Girls dear, fashions come and fashions go. Every day there is some new oddity introduced that is more terrible than the last one. But every day something is created that is beautiful. In the case next to the colored hair there will be new tortoise-shell combs. On the rack nearest the high-slit skirts there are dainty, old-world little dresses. It seems to me that you all have enough good common sense to tell the good from the bad, to distinguish the freakish from the truly pretty and fashionable.

Just the other day one of the newspapers told about a court ball, whether given by the German Emperor or some other monarch I am not now sure, attended by a lady who had gone too far in her costume to suit this emperor's sense of the proprieties. As the story goes, he sent a high official to the lady to escort her to her carriage with the explanation that the emperor had noticed that she had torn her dress up one side and by returning home at once she could repair it.

Postlude

Girls dear, I'm tired to death. The lights seem lower and dimmer than they did when I began to write. There are two buzz-saws in my head, and the woodchuck (if it is a woodchuck) has nearly chewed my tonsils off. I'm tired and I want to go to sleep. What if girls are wearing orange wigs, or purple wigs, or green wigs? I don't care. I only know that I'm going to pull my fluffy pink quilt up to my chin and snap off the lights and rest. I'm glad that I've finished, ever so glad! Aren't you?

THE YOUNG PEOPLE'S MEETINGS

NOTES ON THE LESSONS IN EPWORTH LEAGUE AND BAPTIST YOUNG PEOPLE'S UNION TOPICS

Easter*

ONE of the greatest miracles in life is that people are so indifferent about death. Many persons puzzle their brains over the miracles of the Bible and find it difficult to believe them. But this single miracle of the indifference of people about death is harder to understand than any of the miracles narrated in the Scriptures. When a criminal is sentenced to death a wave of pity goes out toward him from multitudes of hearts. Even although he may be base and wicked the fact that the time is set for him to die awakens widespread pity for him. Yet every one of us is sentenced to die, and none of us can tell the hour that the sentence will be fulfilled.

Now in the face of such facts it would seem that every one would be extremely anxious to find out what is to come after death and to make sure that death will find us ready. It is true that some earnest people refuse to go to the New Testament for the answer to these problems and say that the manly attitude is simply to do one's duty day by day and believe that if one does faithfully the daily work of life on this earth there can be no fear about life in another world if such life is to be found. But a far greater number adopt the attitude of complete indifference. They do their work and have their pleasures without serious thought, and if they were pressed to explain their attitude, might say that since the future is so uncertain they choose to snatch what pleasure they can moment by moment.

These views of death which we have been describing are pagan. We boast that we live in a Christian land, yet many citizens of that land fail to accept and use and enjoy the wonderful comfort and assurances of the Christian's book about the mysteries of the other life. The three great problems of life Christ and his apostles faced unflinchingly—the problem of sin, the problem of pain and the problem of death. They claimed that the truth of their philosophy absolutely answered every one of these three supremely distressing riddles. Christ came to conquer sin, to help us to bear our pain, and to show us a sure and glad way to eternal life.

Of all the Bible teachings about immortality this 15th chapter of I Cor. which we study for our Sabbath lesson is clearest, most incontrovertibly scientific, most amazingly comforting and encouraging. Read again the whole chapter, although our special study is with only the last twenty four verses. Paul begins the chapter with the clear testimony of the persons who saw Jesus alive after he had been killed, and follow this with the statement that because Jesus rose from the dead all his friends and followers shall also rise. At the 35th verse he begins the argument from science. A grain of wheat which appears to be dead is put in the ground and proves itself to be alive by bringing forth more grain. He points out the difference between physical life and the spiritual life, which is like the difference between different kinds of flesh and different kinds of existences throughout the universe. And the spiritual nature will, he declares, be brought through to mortal life for those who have faith in Jesus. How many aching hearts have found glad relief in his triumphant words: "O death, where is thy sting? O grave, where is thy victory?" The message comes with its thrilling joy to those who have lost loved ones and who are hoping which separated that other world from this and we know now that our loved ones are safe in him.

But this wonderful life pæan of Paul's is more than a message of comfort to those who read. It is a message of encouragement. Death, if it had not been conquered, would seem like a great damper to all earnest endeavor. But looking beyond death to the wonderful world and the wonderful opportunities in heaven our hearts rise bravely to the apostle's earnest exhortation: "Therefore, my beloved brethren, be ye steadfast, unmovable, always abounding in the work of the Lord, forasmuch as ye know that your labor is not in vain in the Lord."

The Gladness of Easter*

WHEN any one is reading a book what he is most anxious to know is: "Does it end happily?" We dislike to read a book which leaves us in gloom. There are two happy endings to the two great narratives of the New Testament. The first narrative is the life of Jesus himself. The second narrative is the life of his church. The story of Jesus' life on earth would be immeasurably sad if it left him on the cross. That would indeed be the world's most rayless tragedy. Those hands so busy in useful toil and in kindly service, nailed to the rough cross; those feet which had sought out sorrow in order that relief and comfort might be brought, also pierced and torn; the eyes which had looked forth with infinite tenderness and pity upon the sorrows of men and women and little children and which had revealed undreamed-of depths of sympathy, closed in death: the brow on which the light of heaven had shined, dark with the shadows of death, covered with dust and with blood from the crown of thorns; the heart that had throbbed with love for the sad and the needy and oppressed, pierced with the Roman soldier's spear. That would have been an ending too grievous to endure. But the story does not end that way. There are no tears in its ending. The Saviour met his weeping friend Mary of Magdala in the garden with the comforting words: "Why weepest thou?" Since he is risen there is no longer any reason for despair and grief. He spent those days before his ascension in bringing to his friends assurance of peace and joy. And he went back to heaven promising that he himself in actual spiritual presence would be with them always, even to the end of the age.

The happy ending in Revelation is but another part of this same happy ending of the Gospels. All Christ's followers are to share in the joy and splendor of his resurrection. We are to come to him with songs and everlasting joy upon our heads. May our faith in him, our love for him, our allegiance to him be so strong and bright this year that of all the Easters it shall be the gladdest we have ever known.

AMONG THE WORKERS

—EVANGELIST ROBERT L. LAYFIELD, of Kansas City, Mo., recently conducted a successful meeting at Hillsdale, Okla., when a goodly number professed Christ.

—THE INTERDENOMINATIONAL ASSOCIATION OF EVANGELISTS has begun a crusade for the purpose of suppressing the rapidly increasing tendency to objectionable advertising and immoral shows. Seven hundred evangelists were asked to help create sentiment on the subject, and a large number of replies have been received. The association cordially invites the co-operation of religious publications.

—MANY READERS will be glad to know that little Dora, the young African girl who, on the death of her father, was taken away from the American mission back to heathenism in the "bush," has been restored. Missionary J. M. L. Harrow writes to THE CHRISTIAN HERALD that Dora is now safe in the mission, and that the prayers in her behalf have been answered. Mr. Perkins, the missionary who had charge of the case at the time, is now in America on furlough.

—A LETTER from Aladjan, Turkey-in-Asia, to THE CHRISTIAN HERALD states that a number of the Turkish, Greek and Armenian inhabitants—about fifteen families, all Protestants—are making an effort to organize a Protestant church in the place, under a native pastor, Rev. A. N. Konzondjakoghlon. They have been worshiping since 1901 in a small building which is both Sunday school and church. They are endeavoring to raise money for a suitable building, but the people are extremely poor.

—PRE-REVOLUTIONARY DAYS are linked up with CHRISTIAN HERALD times in the life of one of our subscribers, Mrs. Sarah Jane Brett, of Vancouver, B. C., a granddaughter of John Dennis, a master shipbuilder, who was born in 1760 and died in 1832. He and his father were compelled to leave Philadelphia on account of their loyalty to the British crown. Mrs. Brett, who was born in 1821, remembers being at the home of her grandfather. This interesting bit of personal history comes to us from another subscriber, a nephew of Mrs. Brett, Mr. James R. Roaf, of Toronto. We wonder if there are others whose memories take hold of revolutionary times.

—A RECENT ARTICLE in THE CHRISTIAN HERALD stated that "Hell's Half Acre" in St. Louis had been cleaned up by a local mission. A correspondent from that city states that the North Cabanny Presbyterian Church under direction of Rev. Robert Evans has also been making a good light for righteousness in the same district for a number of years. Two saloonkeepers went out of business through the influence of the Hodiament Men's Bible Class, conducted among street car men at the Hodiament Barns near the territory by Mr. A. M. Roblee, a business man and a member of the West Presbyterian Church. Men of the Hamilton Avenue Christian Church have also been active in the reformation of this notorious section.

—AN AMERICAN council for the Nyassaland Mission of Central Africa has recently been organized. The Dutch Reformed Church of South Africa, the only native church laboring in that continent, has carried on this mission in British Nyassaland for twenty-three years with splendid results. It is now purposed to carry the Gospel message into Portuguese Nyassaland and British Northeastern Rhodesia, as well as the whole of Portuguese East Africa. There are at present seventeen central stations, sixty-four European workers, 700 outstations, 1,500 native evangelists, 70,000 pupils—adults and children—and 200,000 people reached by the Gospel. Last year $150,000 was raised for the work, but the enlarged plan will require much more.

—H. C. BELCHER and Lydia A. Pierce were married near Centerport, Cayuga County, N. Y., on January 15, 1850. Three boys were born to them, and in December 1855 they came to Michigan, crossing the first suspension bridge over Niagara, which was opened for use in August of that year. They took up their residence in Albion, Calhoun County, where Mr. Belcher enlisted and served two years in the war of the rebellion. Since 1867 Mr. and Mrs. Belcher have lived most of the time on a small farm in Allegan County, but for the past few years are living quietly and alone in the city of Allegan. In November of last year, Mr. Belcher was obliged to call a physician for the first time within his memory. They are both devoted members of and active workers in the Baptist Church, having been earnest Christians for many years.

MY PRAYER

I DO not know where duty lies;
I cannot see the clouded way;
I can but raise my trusting eyes
To him who is above, and say:
"Send what is best.

"Unloose the fetters from my feet;
Give me the courage to achieve
The right, however hard; to meet
Temptation squarely and to leave
To God the rest."

LOUISE MOSS.

ANSWERED PRAYERS

AGAIN we must beg our readers to make their letters short in writing to the Answered Prayer Department. A number of interesting and helpful letters have been held for some time because they are too long to be given space. If any of these friends are inclined to do so we should be glad to have them state their acknowledgment or request again in the briefest possible terms, and this will insure the prompt appearance of their communication or some definite reference to it. Letters from Mrs. D. G., Baldwin City, Kan.; Miss L. W., Greenville, S. C., and Mrs. M. G., Pasadena, Calif., contained questions so interesting that they are to be treated in the Mail-Bag. The answer to them will appear either next week or in one of the other issues in the near future.

Acknowledgments

Mrs. J. A. Hardy, Portsmouth, Va., whose suggestion was the immediate cause of the formation of the Prayer League, thanks God for answering the prayers of herself and husband for the recovery of a daughter from a very serious illness. It was feared that an operation would be necessary. This has been avoided and the hearts of her parents are full of gratitude. A Traveling Man writes: "I want to testify that God does answer prayer. I was almost overwhelmed. It seemed that nothing could save me from an awful trouble. I spent the night in praying, and read the book of John. The next day my prayers were answered, and I am restored to my position and strengthened in faith. I shall never let a day pass again that I do not beseech his guidance."

"With grateful hearts," writes S. F. G. from Minneapolis, Minn., "myself and family wish to acknowledge the goodness of God in answer to our prayers in Jesus' name in a financial difficulty that seemed impossible to be righted. Gradually the way has opened before us until the result is more and better than we could ask." Miss I. S. writes from Des Moines, Iowa: "I wish to acknowledge the answer to prayer for the recovery of my mother from a serious illness. Our hearts are full of thankfulness for God's loving kindness. Mrs. H. S. P., Ilion, N. Y., writes: "I want to acknowledge answer to prayer for my son both for spiritual help and for employment. He has a good position and good pay." Mrs. M. G. B. writes from West New Brighton, N. Y.: "God has answered my prayer in restoring me to health, and my son also. I am past eighty-three years old and can say surely goodness and mercy have followed me all the days of my life." Mrs. M. D., of Paris, Ill., writes: "I wish to acknowledge God's goodness in providing, in answer to prayer, employment for my son, who was in financial need."

Mrs. O. writes from South Dakota: "I wish to thank God for his complete forgiveness of my sinful past and the wonderful strength and courage he gave me just for the asking. He has answered my prayers many times." A. C. B. writes from New Cumberland, W. Va.: "God has lightened my burdens and helped me in time of sickness and trouble. He has helped me when all else failed." Mrs. E. R., of Richfield, Mich., writes: "I want to thank my heavenly Father for his goodness to me in sparing the life of my boy in an accident and also in healing him from sickness." Mrs. M. E. M. writes from Moores Corner, Mass.: "I know God will supply all I need, so I trust him for everything. Recently he answered a prayer so simply that when it was answered by sending one of the dearest little friends to me to cheer a poor woman I sat down and cried for joy."

Acknowledgments of answers to prayer have also been received from:

F., Tiffin, Ohio; Mrs. W. A. S., Dryden, Ont.; M. S. M., Troy, N. Y.; A Reader, Bucklin, Mo.; Mrs. N. A. P., Missouri; Mrs. A. E. M., Morrice, Mich.; Mrs. C. H. C., Paris, Ill.; Mrs. A. G. A., Urbana, Ill.; Mrs. N. B. W., Hillsboro, Ill.; J. T. S., Pavilion, N. Y.; L. A. S., Shavertown, N. Y.; Mrs. J. H. J., Comanche, Okla.; Mrs. J. B. M., Hudson, Colo.; Mrs. E. O., Greenville, Ill.; Mrs. L. D. R., Schodack, N. Y.; A. J. P., Bluemont, Va.; M. S. W., Kingsley, Pa.; E. B., Winfield, Kan.; Mrs. E. K., Castile, N. Y.; M. L. H., Whiting, Kan.

Requests for Prayer

A Troubled Reader sends from Connecticut a request, written in a trembling hand, for prayer "for a daughter who is living with some of the fiercest trials possible to a wife and mother, that she may have strength to endure; and for another daughter far down in the paths of sin, that she may be brought back to the God she has forsaken." "A Sister in Christ" from Buckland, Mo., requests prayers that God, "if it is his will, may give health to my daughter and her son and health and eyesight to me. Also salvation to two sisters." A Reader in Canada writes: "For several months a dark cloud of trouble has been hanging over me, and sometimes it seems more than I can bear. I ask the members of the Prayer League to join their prayers with mine." A Reader from New England requests prayers that a broken engagement may be re-established.

A. K. S., from Rockport, Mo., requests prayer for the restoration of failing eyesight. She writes: "I am past eighty and I would love to be able to do more for Christ and his cause. My heart is indeed thrilled, and I rejoice to know that those redeemed men take such an interest in the desires of others. Oh, that may others catch the zeal and earnestness which they manifest! God bless them more than they are able to ask." Mrs. H., of Kansas City, Mo., requests prayers for the lifting of a burden and for guidance and help in bringing up a family of small children. Mrs. L. W., of Locust, N. C., asks for prayer that God will help her in completing the preparation for foreign mission work.

Mrs. F. H. G. requests prayer for the salvation of four children and for a deeper work of grace in her own heart; J. J. McD., for the pardon of sins, and strength to serve God; A Reader from Hunt, N. Y., to know full forgiveness and be free from all sin; L. W., that joy of salvation may be restored, and heart cleansed from all sin; Mrs. R. C. G., that self, brothers and sisters may be "made whole"; D. F., that the joy of salvation may be restored; Mrs. C. G., that children may be saved, also to know her own sins forgiven; Mrs. T. H., that her children and herself may be saved; A Friend, New Jersey, that husband, daughter and self may be saved; H. G., for a revival in his own heart, and outpouring of God's Spirit upon the church; Mrs. J. H., that husband, self and family may lead a true Christian life; Miss E. M. K. requests prayer for relief from deep trouble arising from unjust treatment by a near relative for whom she asks prayer; Mrs. C. S. W., for outpouring of Spirit on self and family; W. O., to know sins forgiven; Mrs. E. W. and Mrs. C. D. W. to be filled with the Holy Spirit.

Mrs. B. F. P. requests prayers for a great spiritual awakening in Denton, Texas, through the simultaneous meetings held by all the churches in the city. A. R. S. requests prayer for a revival in the M. E. church of Rockport, Mo. Mrs. R. A. D. for a revival at Porterville, Calif. M. J. W., for the salvation of souls in Madruga, Cuba.; C. W. N., for the Protestants of Ulster in this time of crisis.

Conversion of Friends

The following friends request prayer for the conversion of sons:

Mrs. A. P. R.; Mrs. S. E.; Mrs. M. M. W.; P. B. G.; M. A. P.; Mrs. A. B.; M. C. L.; E. J. S.; Mrs. S. F. T.; Mrs. E. C. F.; Mrs. E. H.; Mrs. M. B. W.; M. B.; S. W. M.; M. M. T.; Mrs. J. C. T.; M. D. WATERS OF MARAH

Aid, with a sob, "if he'd just laugh again!" And silence fell over the women who listened.

Some one else was vaguely uneasy. Old Deacon Standish had missed the light laugh and the youthful fire of his pastor's presence. But not for worlds would he have admitted this. He had felt bitter toward him; but all that was wiped out during his wife's illness, when with persistence that would have broken down a frailer man, the minister had watched with him beside the dying.

One afternoon the deacon, stumbling up the parsonage steps, met Mrs. Bayne coming out. She was sobbing bitterly—so bitterly, in fact, that she passed the deacon without seeing him. Battling with a sense of uneasiness, he tapped gently on the study door, and when he opened it the minister was standing by his study table, looking at him with eyes that smiled not at all. Was this haggard, broken man the laughing boy he had rebuked? About his pastor's whole personality was the effect of slow and bitter blight.

"Brother Gordon, I—I—" The old man hesitated, a sort of piteous fear in his tones. Suddenly his defenses of dignity went down before the desolation of the other man's face.

"What is it, brother? You're in trouble. Can't—I want to—to help."

John Gordon threw up his head with an awful and bitter laugh. "You help—you! Nobody can help. God couldn't—if there is a God . . ."

Horror at what his minister had said broke like a wave over the listener. He began to tremble with the pitiful grief of the aged. "Brother—brother—" In an instant he was across the floor, his arms over the young shoulders. "You shan't say it—you shan't. There is a God and he's here now—he's going to help you. Pray—pray—"

"No," said Gordon quietly. "I don't think I shall ever pray again."

"John!" cried out the old man, the familiar name shocked out of him—"you've got to pray—you've got to have God, now! Oh, Father, keep thy lamb—he's slipping away from thee!" He dropped to the floor, hands lifted, tears running over his old cheeks. "Oh, God, give him back his faith—give back his youth and his laughter. God, God—draw near—show him our human need of thee! . . ."

In the still room no sound broke the silence that settled heavily after that last cry. The belated sun, struggling from dun clouds, shone for a minute over Gordon's head. The yellow glint of it struck like a knife into the deacon's heart. So he had seen it bent over his wife's dying figure, while winter sun filled the room.

"Don't fail him, Father!" he whispered, brokenly; and held tight to the minister's hands.

"So—you ask him to give back my laughter?" Gordon smiled, and looked down at the old figure much as might a contemptuous adult upon a foolish child. "It was that you first objected to, I believe. I wasn't staid enough. Well, I'm staid now. Life's gone. I'm moving about dead in a world of living men. Don't pray any more—God has forgotten me. I am as desolate as Job. Only—I shan't fill the land with my lamentations; don't fear. I sent your friend Mrs. Bayne away a while ago. She wanted to pray, too. Well—it won't matter now, but—" Something in the look of the lifted old face and the tears streaming down upon his hands seemed to penetrate the hard crust of grief. "My friend—I thank you! I wish we could have understood each other at first, when it did matter. I've shocked you, haven't I? Ah, but I'd tried so hard and hoped for so much that to have it all shattered in an hour—

"I wish you could have known my mother, Standish. Ours wasn't just the ordinary relation of mother and son. We worshiped each other. She was a wonderful mother, with that

Why you should care for your Throat Daily

YOU can now give the same daily attention to your throat as to your teeth; and throat care is even more important than tooth care.

The throat is the great breeding place for infectious germs which lodge there when inhaled from the dusty air and often invade the body to cause influenza or other infectious fevers. Sometimes they attack their breeding ground itself and give rise to sore throat or tonsilitis.

Throat specialists and the medical profession generally have hailed with great acclaim

Wulfings Formamint
THE GERM-KILLING THROAT TABLET

on account of its simplicity and efficiency. Formamint is a delicately flavored tablet, which is sucked like candy, setting free a powerful, yet harmless germicide, turning the saliva into an antiseptic liquid which bathes the entire lining membrane of mouth and throat.

To overcome sore throat and so forestall worse evils—or to prevent it altogether—you should use Formamint regularly. Its use is a pleasure, and the cleanliness produced is a safeguard and a source of personal satisfaction.

Free Sample Offer

Send a 2-cent stamp to pay postage and we will gladly send you a free trial tube. It is of generous size and will prove to you that Formamint is wonderfully effective as well as pleasant in mouth and throat troubles.

Dr. Wm. Lee Howard
The well-known medical author, writes:
"I have no hesitation in stating that in Formamint we have a remedy that is invaluable in keeping the mouth and air passages free from germ infection."

Jack London writes:
"I am tremendously pleased with the antiseptic qualities of your Formamint Tablets. Formamint is a real cleaner of mouth germs."

Mme. Adelina Patti
The Queen of Song, writes:
"I have taken Formamint Tablets for some time past and have much pleasure in saying that I find them very beneficial to the throat.

WATERS OF MARAH

rare gift of always holding one's confidence without sapping his judgment. Early she was left to earn her own living—and mine; a hard struggle it was, too, for she was always frail. But she managed somehow to educate me, and to keep up my courage and instil in me the old fine, homely virtues. How we both starved and froze that I might win out! . . . She was the happiest creature in the world when I was offered this church. Her parting caution was this: 'Always be happy, dear. Don't let the memory of what has been or fear of what is to be sadden you. A smile is braver than gloom. Any fool can be unhappy, but it takes courage and wisdom to be happy.'

"I was to bring her here when—when my people had learned to love me. She was waiting patiently. And—and there was another who was waiting, too—or so I thought. I'd met her in my college days. To me she was the embodiment of sweetness and purity. I—I—she'd told me she loved me enough to wait. A few weeks ago she married another man, with only a careless note of farewell to me. And my mother—my beautiful, brave mother—was burned to death—" He stopped, every muscle of his face convulsed. "It was an accident—an overturned lamp. . . . Standish, it's too much. No man can go through such things and come out wholly alive. And I must go on—on—I'm young, only twenty-four, and there's a lifetime before me—How am I to live it?"

At his feet Deacon Standish tightened his clasp on the clenched young hands; his lips moved in broken appeal.

"I don't know how you're to live it, brother—I don't know. I thought when Sarah died I couldn't go on. I thought it when my young son was drowned—but I did—I picked up life again each time and went on. And you'll do it, too. You're young and you've work to do.

"Why, look how we misunderstand each other—how I misunderstood you. No wonder we misunderstood God. Oh, brother, the waters of Marah are bitter, but . . . God knows—he knows!"

No answer came, but a little of the frozen look seemed to stir before the throbbing reality of the other man's compassion, understanding—and tears.

"We all love you—we've learned what narrow fools we were. Is that any consolation? And we need you. Why, you were God's own hero in the scourge here, and he'll reward you some time for that. And if—these other things happened when you were doing your best, remember this is the wrong side of the Weaver's pattern we're looking at. Isn't it anything to know when I saw you there bending over my dying Sarah I thought of an angel? Oh, boy, the women you've lost out of your life couldn't have made up for that one service. For your mother—she's in God's hands, and a long sight happier than if she was here in this gossipy village. John—John—be thankful there's still work for brain and hands! The whole world's suffering—your little moan of pain's just a note in the universal cry. Why, that's what Christ Jesus came for—to give us hope." He choked, and the slow tears came again. "I'm just a stumbling, foolish old man, boy, but I can't go out of this room without gaining your promise to remember that the everlasting arms are under you and won't fail you. We've got to live, you and I. Let's try to make the best of it. It—it won't be long, brother."

The April sun shifted, lessened and faded, its last light on John Gordon's bowed head. At last he lifted it, and the old man saw that the human call of soul to soul had thawed away the spiritual ice about the minister's heart.

"I—I've got to go on, deacon," he said. "I've got to go on. Maybe—some day—I'll laugh again. Will you go now and leave me alone with God? I want to . . . pray."

In the Days of Abraham and Daniel

BIBLELAND exploration has taken a wide range in recent years, especially in Babylonia, where numerous tablets have been excavated by American archeologists, some of the time of Abraham, who dwelt in Ur, and others as late as the time of the prophet Daniel, the last mentioned belonging to the reigns of Nebuchadnezzar and Nabonidus (the last Semitic king of Babylonia). THE CHRISTIAN HERALD has fortunately been able to procure a number of tablets of both periods. They are priceless relics, and will be greatly valued by the ultimate possessors. You can learn, by reading the article on the subject in last week's issue, how you can become the owner of one of these wonderful tablets.

METZ "22"

The METZ "22" is everything you want in a strictly first class car of the roadster type—stylish, speedy and wonderfully economical in operation. It is a thoroughly practical car, built to give enduring satisfaction. It saves you money when you buy it, and every hour you run it. It won the last Glidden Tour, competing with Cars that cost from five to ten times as much—the three cars comprising the METZ team being the only cars that held perfect scores, without time extension or additional allowance of any kind, for the entire eight days of the contest.

Winner of the Glidden Tour

COMPLETELY EQUIPPED FULLY GUARANTEED

The gearless transmission of the METZ "22" is one of the big features of its construction. It has no clutch to slip, no gears to strip—thus doing away entirely with gear troubles. Its equipment includes four-cylinder water-cooled motor, Bosch magneto, full elliptic springs, extension top, wind shield, artillery wheels, best quality Goodrich clincher tires, 5 lamps, horn, tools, etc. It travels 28 to 32 miles on one gallon of gasoline, makes 5 to 50 miles per hour on the high speed, and is a splendid hill climber.

A New Hernial Appliance

This Invention Holds More Firmly, Comfortably and Surely Than Any Truss.

Sent on Trial

The new Brooks Appliance for rupture thoroughly meets every test and every requirement that it is being ordered by the U. S. Government Department and is rapidly coming to be recognized as the most reliable, comfortable and dependable support ever invented. The Brooks Appliance is fitted with an Automatic Air Cushion which follows every movement of the body, always covers the ruptured spot and always where it should be to do the most good. The part of the cushion which comes in contact with the skin is soft, pliable gum rubber, clings closely, so that irritation and slipping is impossible, and yet it is cool and comfortable because of the constant circulation of air through it. It is simple of construction, so there is nothing to get out of order—nothing that can break.

We are selling this Appliance under a positive guarantee of money refunded if not satisfactory. We do not guarantee to cure any more than any doctor will guarantee to cure his patients. We do guarantee to furnish a perfect fitting Appliance, one that will give the wearer solid comfort and retain the protrusion at all times and under all circumstances.

The purchaser is the sole judge and if for any reason whatever (which does not have to be furnished us) it is returned, the price paid will be refunded in full.

THE CHURCH AT MURPHY'S CAMP

BY REV. A. S. FISKE, D.D.

I HAVE just noticed an article in THE CHRISTIAN HERALD about the Baptist Church in Santa Rosa, Calif., which was built of e lumber from a single redwood ee. I was on one of my horseback va- tions through upper California and d passed the village of Santa Rosa, ning for "Murphy's Camp." Leav- g the village, I came to a parting of e ways, uncertain which road to ce. Seeing a two-wheeled cart wn by a pair of ponies coming on ind me, I waited in the saddle to directions to Murphy's Camp. The ntleman stopped, smiled and said: ell, I'm going right there myself. fact, I am Murphy."

We passed a rather large and at- ctive church building and I ex- ssed myself as surprised to see so e an edifice in so small a hamlet and ed about it. "Why," said he, erybody turned in and helped the ptists to build it. I gave them the e out of which it was built." "The le," I exclaimed. "You mean the es!" "No," he said, "the tree. ery stick of wood in that building, m mud-sill to the last shingle, and e the inside finish to the last inch of ing and wall, and the two-story nday school and prayer-meeting cture across the rear, is from that tree, and there was left a lot of ff for shingles and scantling mate- . The whole building, outside and without a foot of plaster anywhere, rom that same tree, and I had the ber sawed for 'em according to the cifications of the architect."

or a week I rejoiced there in that ious camp. I saw them fell those ient monarchs, cutting with long- dled axes a scarf in one side per- s a couple of feet deep; then going he other side, with their long cross- saws, driving in first iron and n wooden wedges behind the saws, eep them from being pinched by vast weight. Then a tremor up e in the leafy top; a waver, a ying forth and back; then a swift swifter movement till, with a h that shook the entire forest, the t lay prone along the exact line "boss chopper" had designed!

I saw them cut great trunks into 12-foot logs, haul them away and roll them on to trucks on the little branch railroad to the mills, where they were ripped into halves by upright "rip-saws," then shunted sidewise to the circular gang-saws which cut them into every description of usable material for the homes and workshops of men. The waste was carried out on endless aprons to a huge waste heap, where the consuming fires were constantly burning. In the solemn midnights I watched them from my cabin windows and thought of the waste heaps of the universe and shuddered at the burning!

A Relic of Abraham's Day

ONE of the wonders of archeology is the discovery of the Babylonian tablets. Written in cuneiform characters on fine clay, over 2,000 years before Christ, they tell the story of the life, manners and customs of the days of Abraham. Many of the tablets were found in the ruins of Ur, the home of the patriarch. Read the article on these wonderful tablets in last week's CHRISTIAN HERALD, which tells how to become the possessor of one of those priceless relics of antiquity.

Does Your Figure Please You?

Your dressmaker can never make a gown look well on you unless you have a good figure and unless you carry it well

I want to make you realize that your figure and health are almost entirely in your own hands, and that by following my simple, hygienic directions in the privacy of your own room

You Can Be So Well

that your whole being vibrates health. I have helped 65,000 of the most refined, intellectual women of America to regain health and good figures; and have taught them how to keep well. Why not you? You are busy, but you can devote a few minutes a day, in the privacy of your own room, to following scientific, hygienic principles of health prescribed to your particular needs.

I have reduced the weight of over 32,000 women and increased the weight of as many more. In my work for reduction or building flesh, I strengthen every vital function so that you are full of life and energy.

My work has grown in favor because results are quick, natural and permanent, and because they are scientific and appeal to common sense. Fully one-third of my pupils are sent to me by those who have worked with me.

I wish you could stand with me at my window for a few minutes and, as the women pass, realize with me how many need better figures, better health. They could have them, too, with just a little daily effort which is easy—not as hard as what they are enduring.

The best physicians are my friends—their wives and daughters are my pupils—the medical magazines advertise my work. Someone in your town knows me. Ask your friends about my work. I am at my desk daily from 8 to 5.

No Drugs—No Medicines

I study each woman's case just as a physician studies it, the only difference being that instead of medicine I strengthen and put in place weakened organs by exercises for nerves and muscles controlling them, bringing a good circulation of warm blood to them, which I purify by teaching correct breathing. I relieve such ailments as

Indigestion	Sleeplessness	Catarrh	Suffering in
Constipation	Nervousness	Headaches	Pregnancy
Anaemia	Torpid Liver	Weakness	Rheumatism

I have published a free booklet showing how to stand and walk correctly and giving other information of vital interest to women. Write for it and I will also tell you about my work. If you are perfectly well and your figure is just what you wish, you may be able to help a dear friend—at least you will help me by your interest in this great movement for greater culture, refinement and beauty in woman. Sit down and write me NOW. Don't wait—you may forget it. I have had a wonderful experience and I should like to tell you about it.

THE ROOM OF BEGINNINGS

YOU have heard of the small good deed that inspired another, which in turn inspired another, until the original small good deed led to a great blessing. A living room in the home of a suburban woman reminds me of this story, for its transformation from a room of little meaning into one of real beauty and character came about in just such a small way.

The home-maker in this particular instance had "counted" upon refurnishing the room "after Christmas"; but when that convenient time arrived it was found that she had not very accurately counted the cost of the improvements planned; also there had been the unexpected expense of illness. Consequently, with the single improvement of new wallpaper—a charming light brown pattern with a faint shadow design—her ambitions and dreams of fine furniture vanished into air. Then she made the good resolve that started a revolution in the living room. "If I cannot afford all the beautiful new things I had set my heart on, I can at least get rid of a lot of ugly, old, useless things that only clutter up the room." And she did.

She began with the reading table; that much-abused article of furniture in most of our homes, where so many "artistic" little things — pamphlets, photographs, and assorted knick-knacks—find their way that the things which really belong there—the lamp, a few books, magazines and perhaps the work-basket—are almost crowded off.

When this particular table had been relieved of its burden of ornaments and souvenirs, the owner discovered that the table itself would be really good to look at if it were polished up a bit, only no one could see it because of the long, voluminous cover which completely hid whatever beauty it possessed. Accordingly, off went the cover and in its place was laid a square of coarse brown Russian crash decorated with a charming stencil pattern of poppies, in shades of orange and brown and green. This had been a present, kept until now carefully put away, but the effect of the bare table with its new cover furnished an inspiration. How lovely would be a pair of curtains in the wide doorway made like this mat! How much more attractive and dignified than those of shabby old-rose velours which had hung there for the past seven years!

In time they came. Not that they dropped from a clear sky, for it took, of course, some correspondence with one or two of the large paint manufacturers to find out just how to make a stencil design, what to work with and what best to work on. However, as instructions were simple and called for common sense rather than experience, the work was successfully done, and, in short order, new curtains of burlap, natural brown shade, with a rich stencil border, were hanging at the doors. What more natural to "improve" next than the windows?

Anybody can make simple little casement curtains of plain scrim, or voile, or even cheesecloth, but not everybody stops to consider how effective they are and how easily done. For the room we are speaking of they were made of very sheer scrim, cut to reach just below the window sill, slightly fulled across the panes and left to hang straight. Side curtains, same length, were next made of plain tan linen, a shade darker than the walls, and finished with a stencil border down one side and above the bottom hem to correspond with that used on the portieres, only with a smaller motif. The effect was altogether charming. The room was "growing"; growing fast, and so far improvements had cost very little. The home-maker forgot her disappointment at not having all new furniture and rugs in the joy of doing interior decorating herself.

The last thing to be "done over" was what perhaps would have come first had the room been planned all at once—the floor. The carpet was ugly; was shabby; was faded and worn; was, in short, quite "impossible." But a new one was no less out of the question. Then came a ray of hope with the suggestion of a neighbor that it might be dyed and made over into a rug. Others had been successfully done; why not this? It sounded more like fiction than fact; still, nothing could be worse than the carpet as it was; the risk was small. Finally after some little argument, and more correspondence with a manufacturer, up and away went the carpet, together with a few old pieces from the attic, and—actually did come back a brown rug. Not only a real rug but an attractive floor covering for the room, with a wide stained border of bare wood on all sides.

It had taken a good deal of thought, a lot of time and much of what we sometimes call "elbow grease" to persuade the old floor to take on a new, hard finish, but the end achieved more than paid for the labor spent. Finally, after all these innovations, there was still enough "repair money" left in the household budget to purchase two big, comfortable Craftsman style armchairs. Then the little woman who had accomplished all this looked about her new room with pride and satisfaction.

"I give you my word," she said, as I, too, looked with amazement upon the old room in the new guise, "all of this is the result of my sudden housecleaning of that table the day I discovered that it could really be beautiful, if we would give it half a chance, and the new stenciled square took the place of the old cover. That was literally the beginning of the end."

Truly, then, in our home-making we should not despise the day of small things. There is a little sermon for

CLEVER WIFE

Knew How to Keep Peace in Family.

It is quite significant, the number of persons who get well of alarming heart trouble when they let up on coffee and use Postum as the beverage at meals.

There is nothing surprising about it, however, because the harmful alkaloid—caffeine—in coffee is not present in Postum, which is made of clean, hard wheat.

"Two years ago I was having so much trouble with my heart," writes a lady in Washington, "that at times I felt quite alarmed. My husband took me to a specialist to have my heart examined.

"The doctor said he could find no organic trouble but said my heart was irritable from something I had been accustomed to, and asked me to try and remember what disagreed with me.

"I remembered that coffee always soured on my stomach and caused me trouble from palpitation of the heart. So I stopped coffee and began to use Postum. I have had no further trouble since.

"A neighbor of ours, an old man, was so irritable from drinking coffee that his wife wanted him to drink Postum. This made him very angry, but his wife secured some Postum and made it carefully according to directions.

"He drank the Postum and did not know the difference, and is still using it to his lasting benefit. He tells his wife that the 'coffee' is better than it used to be, so she smiles with him and keeps peace in the family by serving Postum instead of coffee."

Name given by the Postum Co., Battle Creek, Mich.

Postum now comes in two forms:

Regular Postum—must be well boiled. 15c and 25c packages.

Instant Postum—is a soluble powder. A teaspoonful dissolves quickly in a cup of hot water and, with cream and sugar, makes a delicious beverage instantly. 30c and 50c tins.

The cost per cup of both kinds is about the same.

the home-maker, it seems to me, in the idea back of the sectional bookcase; this adding of one good part to another, little by little, piece by piece. In this way many a man has acquired a library of no small size who, had he waited until he could afford to buy all the books and furniture outright, would have gone to the end of his days without any. It is the old "one-good-thing-at-a-time" idea of the aunt or grandmother who gives to a fortunate child from babyhood days one silver spoon on every birthday, commencing another dozen of forks, or knives, or more spoons, when the twelfth anniversary is reached.

It is idle to simply envy those lucky women who can start out from the beginning to furnish a new home or remodel an old. Suppose we should take a suggestion from the Boy Scouts with their "one good deed every day" and make it our practice to add one improvement every week in our homes. It need not be a new purchase; it may only be the getting rid of something already bad or useless that a room would be better off without; or it may be recovering with a twelve-cent cretonne a shabby stuffed chair. At all events let us put our wits to work to make the best of what we have, and when we do invest in a new bit of furniture or decoration let it be something really worth while.

Let us begin improvements in the living room; the room that means most to the family; where family traditions grow up with the children and intimate friendships are formed. Let us in this room, by its furnishings, its books and its sentiments, educate the younger members of the household to all that is finest and noblest in the word home.

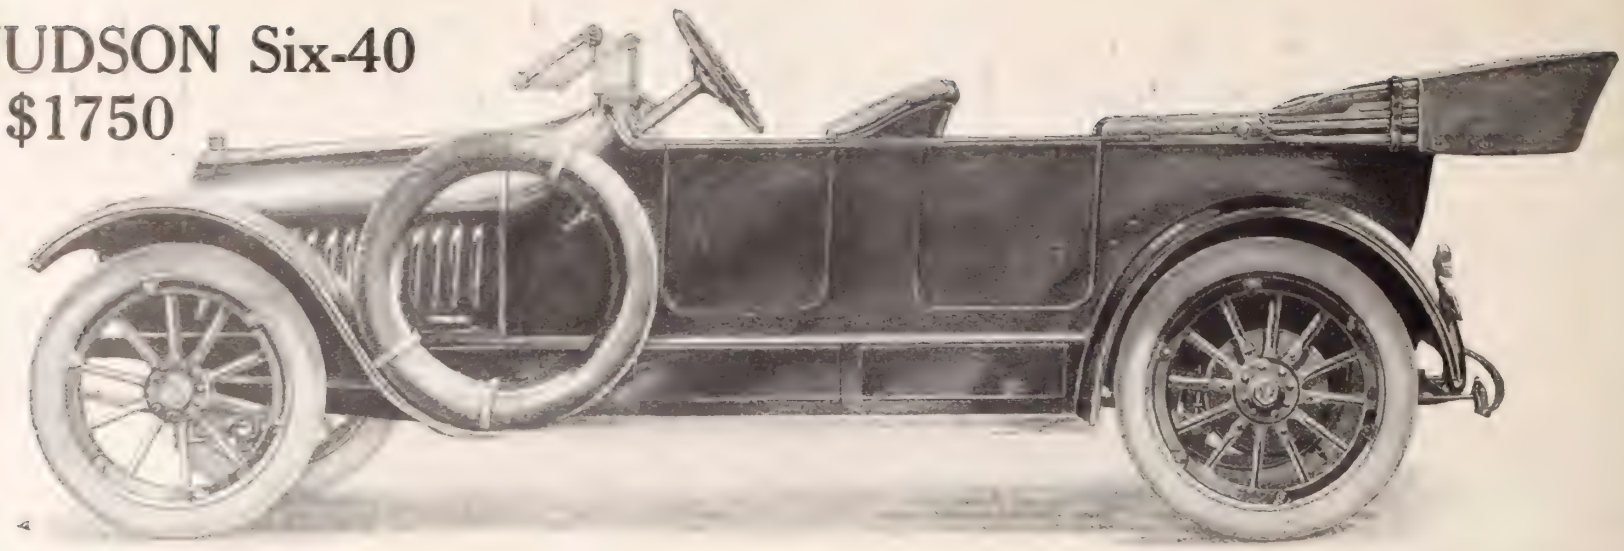
$1750



Rides Like Constant Coasting

Just Drive this Six Ten Miles. No Question then About Sixes!

Go to your local HUDSON dealer. Take a ride, at the wheel, in this new Six-40. Then you will become forever a Six enthusiast. Note this price, this weight, these flowing lines, these superb appointments. Note that Howard E. Coffin builds the HUDSON Six-40. And then you will have the answer to the question of "which Six."

THIS new HUDSON Six-40 can best speak for itself. You know your likes and wishes. See if this car meets them.

It needs no salesmanship. The facts are all apparent. Just get the car's own story and judge it for yourself.

Decide These Things

First, do you want a Six? If any doubt lingers, this ride will dispel it. The smoothness, the flexibility, the lack of vibration will make a resistless appeal. If you like luxury of motion you are coming to a Six.

Then the weight question. The HUDSON Six-40 weighs 2,980 pounds, due to skillful designing and properly chosen materials. Do not wish to carry it in an equal powered car, from 450 to 1,250 extra pounds. It would mean the same in tire cost and fuel, as to carry at all times three to eight extra passengers.

Then about fuel cost. The HUDSON Six-40 has a new type motor—small bore and long stroke—which has made amazing miles-per gallon record. Your HUDSON dealer has many actual comparisons. Figure out what this one feature will save in the years to come.

The Quality Question

THEN let this Six-40, designed by Howard E. Coffin, show you the meaning of a high-grade car. Judge what it means in staunchness, in freedom from trouble, in long life and low upkeep. Now that $1,750 buys all these things, isn't quality worth getting?

THEN see if this car meets your ideals of beauty. Note the streamline body with the lines unbroken and without a hinge in sight. Mark the perfect finish, the deep, rich, hand-buffed upholstery. Will a car so distinguished add to the pleasure of ownership?

SEE the new equipment—the two disappearing tonneau seats, the "One Man" top, the quick adjusting side curtains, the dimming searchlights, the concealed speedometer gear. Note how extra tires are carried—ahead of the front door. Note the gasoline tank with its gauge in the cowl. Note the convenience of every control. All these are this year's improvements.

The Price Question

THEN judge if anything in comparable cars justifies a higher price. What more can any maker offer in a car of like capacity? And what lower price, in any type, offers so much per dollar?

Count depreciation too. Since the Six is the type of the future, and since these lines and equipment are the coming vogue, think how this car will hold its value as compared with other types.

LET the HUDSON Six-40—the car itself—answer these questions for you. Let it make its own appeal. And don't delay. We are at this writing weeks behind on our orders. We have no hope of meeting all the next two months' demand.

Phaeton, with extra tonneau seats—or Roadster, $1750 f.o.b. Detroit. Convertible Roadster, with leather top, lined, windows that drop out of sight into the doors—a car as beautiful and comfortable in rough weather as a limousine, and that can be quickly changed to an open roadster, $1950.

The HUDSON Six-54

The new HUDSON Six-54 is almost identical with the HUDSON Six-40 in design and equipment. But it is larger and more powerful. It is for men who want a more impressive car. Its price is $2,250.

THE IRISH HOME RULE CRISIS

WITH the weight and momentum gathered in a century's agitation, the movement for Home Rule for Ireland has hurled itself against the very foundations of the British throne. Possibly not even history will be able to tell how near—if it really was near—the throne came to toppling. But present-day events in the struggle for Home Rule have in some respects exceeded in gravity any other political crisis in the history of the British Isles. If the empire sees the early settlement of the question without approaching close to disruption, some very well informed observers have incorrectly judged the situation.

The basis for the opposition to Home Rule is ineradicably fixed in religious differences. There are other and important reasons raised by the Protestant portion of the Province of Ulster in support of their stand against partial severance from the empire. But the foremost, the most vehement, the most ancient reason is the belief that an Irish Parliament means a Catholic Parliament, with the subserviency of all Ireland to Rome. Whether the majority of intelligent Ulstermen sincerely fear that result or not, they at any rate are combined to make it impossible.

This religious difference kept Ireland drenched with blood during the long progress of Britain toward supreme rule over the two islands. As all students of history know, Ireland possessed a Parliament for centuries, enjoying, in true Irish fashion, a turbulent career as an independent nation until 1801, when the union of Great Britain and Ireland was accomplished. From that day to this Ireland has never been without a faction unreconciled to the union and plotting and working and at times fiercely fighting for "liberty." In other words, Home Rule has been a political question in Ireland since 1801. Since 1881 it has been a live parliamentary hobgoblin perched where it could keep its glittering eye on each unhappy British premier, ready at all times to lend its influence to whichever great political party has been willing to use "Home Rule" as a means to its own ends. The Irish representation in the British Parliament, though a decided minority, has generally held the balance of power, being able by throwing its vote with this or that party, to decide even the fate of ministries.

We reprint from the London Sphere a summary of the early history of the Protestant question in Ulster:

The Ulster plantation, 511,465 acres of land in the Province of Ulster, became vested in the crown owing to forfeitures, and James I, after removing the Irish, divided the land among such of his English and Scottish Protestant subjects as chose to settle there, 1609-1612. The Honorable Irish Society, a committee of citizens of twelve London companies, invited by King James I to colonize the confiscated lands, including Londonderry and Coleraine, 1609. The committee received a charter, 1613. Ulster Civil War, More and Maguire rebellion; the Catholics said to conspire to expel the English and massacre the Protestant settlers in Ulster, commenced on St. Ignatius's Day (some doubt about the massacre), October 23, 1641. Henry Grattan claims independence for the Irish Parliament in speeches delivered, April 19, 1780, and April 16, 1782. The Irish Parliament declared independent by an act passed in the English Parliament, May, 1782. Confirmed by another act passed, 1795. Orange clubs, etc., formed, 1795. Irish rebellion began, May 4, 1798. Cost 150,000 Irish lives, 20,000 English, gradually suppressed, 1799. Legislative Union of Great Britain and Ireland, January 1, 1801.

RIGHT HON. SIR EDWARD CARSON SPEAKING TO ULSTER CROWDS

The modern movement for Home Rule had no sooner taken organized form under the leadership of Charles Stewart Parnell, than the inevitable opposition of Protestant Ulstermen developed. The important conversion of Gladstone to the cause of Home Rule; his gigantic labor to accomplish it; the drastic measure taken to pacify a furious Irish populace made frenzied by the evils of absentee landlordism and the steady defeat of Home Rule; the tragedy of Phœnix Park, in which two high imperial officials were murdered; the downfall of Parnell; these and many other stirring chapters constitute a history of a people's struggle for self-government that has been going on unremittently since before the century of peace between the two English-speaking nations which is just about to be celebrated with pomp and rejoicing.

With only the latest chapter in that history can we deal here. Room will not permit extended mention of the "Molly Maguires," the Land League, the imprisonment and the exiling of Irish nationalists, the long list of notable figures on both sides of the struggle, the tremendous scenes witnessed in the British Parliament in connection with the great debates. Several Irish Home Rule bills have been introduced, only to suffer defeat. About three years ago the House of Commons passed a measure, but the House of Lords rejected it. Then was enacted an almost revolutionary parliamentary law by which any bill not an appropriation bill, if rejected by the House of Lords, shall become a law if it passes the House of Commons in three successive sessions. The present Home Rule bill was about to be read in Commons for its third successive passage, when the attitude of the now formidable opposition—the Unionists of Ulster—precipitated a crisis that has made the world gasp.

The chief provisions of the present Home Rule bill create an Irish Parliament to control purely Irish affairs, but having no powers in respect to the levying of war, the military or naval force, the foreign relations, currency, or trade outside of Ireland.

The Parliament would consist of an elective House of Commons and a Senate nominated for the first five years by the imperial government and thereafter elected. Ireland is also to send forty-two members to the British Parliament, a provision that has caused hot debate. The revenues are to support the cost of Irish administration, but the imperial government would come to the rescue for a time. The supremacy of the imperial government is explicitly declared in the bill. Ireland's four provinces contain approximately four and a half millions of population. Of these probably one-ninth, or five hundred thousand, are of Protestant denominations, and they mostly belong to the Province of Ulster, in four out of its five counties, Antrim, Armagh, Down and Londonderry, the eastern or seacoast counties—descendants, most of them, from English or Scottish settlers. The half million Protestant Irishmen are not unanimous for union, but nearly enough so to constitute a powerful party with sixteen representatives in Parliament as against seventeen Nationalists, or Home Rulers, from the rest of the Province of Ulster. Ulster's total population is around 1,600,000, or about one-third of the whole island. The other three provinces are represented in Parliament by sixty-eight Home Rulers and two Unionists.

On February 10 last, the present Parliament was opened by King George in an address that reflected the seriousness of the Home Rule situation.

On the 12th, the House of Lords, by a vote of 243 to 55, carried an amendment to the address from the Throne, asking for a general election before the Home Rule bill should be passed; an extraordinary step. Had the amendment also been passed by the Commons, the ministry, following an immemorial British custom, would have resigned. Action by the House awaited the submission of proposals of concessions to the Ulster contingent by Premier Asquith.

The attitude of Ulster Unionists is that they will not submit to Irish Home Rule under any conditions. The country therefore waited the promised offers of compromise with keen interest.

On March 9, the government announced its plan of conciliation. It was in effect that any county of Ireland could vote upon the Home Rule act before its passage, and if the majority favored exclusion from the operations of that act that county should be excluded for an experimental period of six years.

The concessions were coldly received by the Unionists. Sir Edward Carson, the leader of the Ulster Unionists, declared that "Ulster will not have this proposal, which means a sentence of death with a stay of execution." It was manifest that the situation was rapidly becoming acute. In the background of all men's minds stood the ominous picture of an armed constituency in Ulster prepared to fight for what they consider their rights. The prospect of civil strife was admitted by the premier in his address should the bill become a law, and he intimated that the outlook was equally forbidding if the bill were to be postponed.

The Irish Nationalists were not well disposed toward the plan and it was doubted if John Redmond, their leader, could induce his followers to agree to any kind of an exclusion for Ulster in whole or in part. On the London Stock Exchange the government's proposal was well received, and the public generally considered the plan a hopeful way out of the difficulties.

On March 13 the New York Times published a story, said to be from an authentic source, in which it appeared that King George had suggested to Premier Asquith that although the government had received a mandate from the people to give Home Rule to Ireland, "you have not got," he is reported as having said, "for the country has not given you, a mandate to use the forces of the crown to coerce Ulster." And it was stated that this conversation had led directly to the government's offer of concession to Ulster. Later events bear out the story.

On March 19, the press reported growing apprehension of serious disorders in Ulster. Orders were issued from the War Office to double the guards in garrison towns for the protection of arms and ammunition. War vessels were held ready to make a demonstration. It was also said that a plan was on foot by the Lords for amending the army act to forbid the employment of troops in Ulster in connection with the Home Rule bill should it become a law. March 21, great public excitement was reported in consequence of activity in moving troops and particularly because of a rumor of the resignation of army officers serving in Ireland.

The papers flamed with references to alleged war preparations on both sides. Chancellor of the Exchequer David Lloyd-George declared the country to be confronted with the gravest issue in the history of democratic government since the days of the Stuarts. He said: "Representative government in this land is at stake. We mean to confront this defiance with resolute and unwavering determination whatever the hazard may be." The resignations of General Gough, commander of the Third Cavalry Brigade at Curragh, and of many other officers refusing to serve against Ulster, were reported by Lieutenant-General Sir Arthur Paget, commander in Ireland.

In the House of Commons on Monday the 23, following a quiet Sunday, Premier Asquith explained the revolt of army officers against service in Ulster as arising from a misunderstanding as to the duties to which they were to be called. Colonel John Seely, Secretary of State for War, explained the movement of troops as designed solely to protect the government's military stores in Ulster. The government was vigorously denounced for weakness in its dealings from the outset with Ulster. Mr. Andrew Bonar Law, leader of the opposition, declared that it was possible to see in recent events a deliberate attempt on the part of the government to make political capital by provoking Ulster. Some news stories went so far as to depict the King as in a state of intense anxiety bordering on panic. This widely circulated rumor, while merely deduced from the fact of many conferences between the King and his ministers, reflected one phase of public opinion which has continued to see in the whole situation a real menace to parliamentary government in the British Empire. One press story stated that General Paget had said to the officers who resigned that if they refused to go "there might be a mutiny in the army, which would mean a revolution in England, and in six months there would be no king and no army."

On March 24 the reinstatement of the officers who resigned was announced, under ministerial guarantee against service in Ulster. It was also stated that at least seventy per cent. of the army could not be relied upon to make war upon Ulster. The Unionists were in a state of extreme elation. Home Rule was declared to be dead. The paramount question now was the course of the government in relation to the mutinous action within the army. On the 25th an extraordinary demonstration was made in the House against the Throne. John Ward, a labor member, asked whether the Parliament elected by the people "should absolutely, without interference from the King or the army, make the laws of the realm." His dramatic utterance was greeted by prolonged cheers from fully half the House.

The whole subject moved into the domain of investigation and debate, and the public was left to form its opinions from such news as the press could give, often of a contradictory character. Resignations of high officials were rumored. The government was reported as being firm in its intention to pass the Home Rule bill at any cost.

As THE CHRISTIAN HERALD goes to press the one question before the British public is the stability of the government. The republican trend in Great Britain has received tremendous impetus in the opinion of many qualified to judge. The spectacle of the entire course of government being suspended by the action of a handful of army officers has almost overwhelmed the nation. The early rise of a new political party is prophesied in responsible quarters. No one attempts to say positively what to-morrow will bring forth. Whatever of "politics" there has been in the conflict of parties over the Home Rule question, for the moment all men are demanding an open treatment of the crisis which has arisen in the history of Great Britain.

* BRITISH LEAGUE FOR THE SUPPORT OF ULSTER AND THE UNION.

I, THE UNDERSIGNED, hereby enrol myself as a Volunteer in the Force now being raised to assist Ulster in the struggle she is making to maintain the Union between Great Britain and Ireland. And in the event of the Government of Ireland Bill being passed into law without the sanction of the people of the United Kingdom being expressed at a General Election, I solemnly swear to hold myself in readiness to act anywhere and in any manner that may serve to this end. Further, I promise to stand by this agreement until such time as I notify my resignation to my superior officer. God Save the King.

VILLA KNOCKS AT TORREON'S DOOR

THE long-expected battle of Torreon, concerning which a large part of the public had begun to feel skeptical, was opened by the rebels on March 23, and ended disastrously, at least for the present, on March 26, when Villa and 7,000 of his men were routed with heavy losses.

It has been thought by many that a decisive victory at Torreon for either side would determine the issue in Mexico. The inactivity of General Huerta has been explained as due to the Federals' wish to get Villa out of the fastnesses of Northern Mexico before striking an aggressive blow. The rebels had been gathering about Torreon for months. Torreon is a place of no great size but important strategically. It is on the south bank of the Nazas River, near the border of the States of Durango and Coahuila, and at the conjunction of the country's railroad lines. To command this spot is to hold the key to both northern and southern Mexico.

Torreon is nearly three hundred miles from Chihuahua and approximately seven hundred from Mexico City. The rebel forces therefore have been obliged to transport their equipment through mountain passes and across desert stretches several hundred miles; and if they were to take Torreon they would have to travel another three hundred miles to reach the next important place, Zacatecas, and after that over four hundred to get within range of Mexico City.

A few miles north of Torreon, across the river, is the town of Gomez Palacio, the northernmost outpost of the Federals. Their entire force in and about Torreon was said to be about 7,000 men, or half that of their foes. On March 23, Villa in person led the assault upon Gomez Palacio, supported by Generals Ortega and Benavides. Small but fiercely contested engagements had taken place on preceding days as the rebel lines were drawn tighter. The Federals already had lost several hundred of their men and been forced back into the town. Other suburban places were occupied by much smaller divisions of the Federal army; the brunt of the attack was received by Velasco at Gomez Palacio.

The fighting at that place, the first general advance in the battle of Torreon, was heavy. Rebel artillery upon the surrounding hills was in constant action. The conflict lasted all day and into the night. The rebels succeeded in dislodging the defenders of the place and in occupying the town, and on March 24 assaulted Torreon itself.

Reports did not come through in such shape as to give a complete account of the main battle. It was known that the fighting was desperate on both sides, often hand to hand. The success of the rebels was confidently expected and announcements had gone out that the next point of attack would be Monterey.

However, the Federals were unexpectedly reinforced by a command of 4,000 men from Saltillo and were able to inflict a decided repulse to the rebels. After a desperate battle in which it is said that over a thousand of his soldiers were slain, Villa fell back ten miles from Torreon to El Vergel, from which place he wired to Juarez for ammunition. Although Villa himself suffered serious reverses, General Benavides held the ground he had taken on the outskirts of Torreon and compelled the Federals facing his position to take refuge in the town. Late reports were to the effect that Villa was thought to have been cut off from a retreat and caught in a trap.

Other news from this troubled country consisted in reports of renewal of interviews between Huerta's government and Mr. John Lind, with rumors of important developments which might include the resignation of General Huerta. Huerta has obtained an immediate loan of $16,000,000, from which interest payments on Mexico's foreign debt will be resumed April 1, it is stated. The bulk of the news consisted largely of unsupported and often contradictory rumors, everything seeming to be in a state of semi-suspense pending the outcome at Torreon, nor can any predictions based on the outcome be safely made at present.

THE EASTER THEME IN ART

BY D. H. STEFFENS

THE Christian artist, about the fourth century, when he made his first hesitating attempts to treat the subject of Easter, carefully refrained from showing the risen Lord at the moment of his resuscitation. With a proper reverence for the Scriptures, he refused to show what they did not reveal. He depicted an empty tomb, watched by the Roman guard, or visited by the holy women. A sarcophagus in the Lateran Museum simply shows a labarum, or Roman standard, under which the keepers are fast asleep. Even the tomb is only suggested. The Louvre has a bas-relief in silver-gilt which formerly belonged to the Abbey of St. Denis, where we see an angel showing the Saviour's empty tomb to the two Marys. A more realistic representation is Thomas touching the Saviour's wounds, which may be seen upon an early sarcophagus, preserved in the church of St. Celso at Milan.

This chaste reserve, which was content to depict only what was described by the Gospel narrative, was maintained by Christian art until the thirteenth century, when, under the influence of the Renaissance, men began to paint the actual resurrection itself, with a conscious striving for dramatic effect. There is an early representation which shows the upper half of the Saviour's body appearing above the grave, and also a representation of his appearance to Mary Magdalene, by Duccio of Siena (1255-1319), who, with Giotto of Florence, first attempted to find a new artistic formula in the observation of life. It is to Giotto that we owe our first representation of the resurrection. In a small picture, which formed one of a series of panel decorations upon a press for sacred vessels, in the sacristy of St. Croce, Florence, now in the Florence Academy, he shows us the risen Christ, lightly standing with the cross and banner of victory in his right hand, upon the heavy slab which covers the still closed tomb. The angel does not appear, but the Roman guards are sleeping beside the tomb. The Saviour's feet barely touch the tomb and the whole impression is that of an ethereal body, no longer subject to the physical laws which attach us to this earth. This now becomes the characteristic feature of all resurrection pictures. Taddeo Gaddi adheres to this in his magnificent fresco, and so does Perugino.

Among the many disciples of Giotto, there was but one great artist, the painter-monk, Fra Angelico of Fiesole. There is an indescribable sweetness in his virgins and angels, enhanced by his exquisite drawing and delicate, luminous color, but his very sweetness often palls upon our modern taste. As Reinach says: "We long for a few wolves in this impeccable sheepfold." Fra Angelico treated the resurrection subject several times. In one of his pictures he still has the pre-renaissance reserve. He shows us the wondering women and the angels at the sepulcher. In another he combines the old version with the new. In a third picture he shows the actual resurrection scene.

Fra Bartolomeo, the teacher of Andrea del Sarto, although not a master of the first rank, treated this subject with great success in his picture, which is now in the Pitti Palace, Florence. Rafael also painted it. In his picture the keepers are not sleeping, but they are witnesses of the resurrection. Annibale Carraci goes a step further. He was not satisfied to prove by a witness that Christ really arose from the dead. He sets out to show that he arose in a miraculous manner. He not only paints a closed tomb, which is Scripturally correct, for the Gospels describe the great earthquake and the rolling away of the stone as taking place after the act of resurrection, but Carraci places a sleeping guard, lying full length across the top of the altar-like tomb. There can thus be no doubt that the Saviour who soars above must have miraculously passed this double barrier.

It is a relief to turn from the contemplation of such ridiculous puerilities to the strength of Martin Schöngauer's engraving. Albrecht Dürer's resurrection in his Smaller Passion series of wood-cuts is rather empty; his Larger Passion shows us a much more worthy and noble composition. Rembrandt also treated this subject. As usual with him the great problem was the treatment of light. He does not show the Saviour, but he selects the moment of the great earthquake and the appearance of the angel as the subject for a most wonderful etching, wherein he again, as Couture says, "with black and white makes color."

Whenever the risen Lord is shown in these resurrection pictures, he appears as the victorious conqueror of death and the grave. This conception has also passed into hymnology, for the Lutheran hymn writer, Paul Gerhard, sings:

They in the grave did sink Him,
The foe held jubilee;
Before he can bethink him,
Lo, Christ again is free.

And "Victory!" he cries,
And waveth toward the skies
His banner, for the field
Is by the Hero held.

Perhaps the most natural and, therefore, the most common representation of the resurrection is the picture of the women at the empty sepulcher. Like the kings who came to adore the infant Savior, their number is always three. We find them in the very earliest resurrection pictures and carvings, as well as in the richly illuminated Gospels of the tenth and eleventh centuries. Duccio's treatment of this subject is fine, especially the expression of awe in the women, and the action of the angel, who points to the empty tomb. In Taddeo Gaddi's magnificent mural the three women are

THE RISEN CHRIST

*A SERMON BY REV. CHARLES A. EATON, D.D.

TEXT: "If Christ be not raised, your faith is vain." I Cor. 15: 17

IN THESE words and in the noble argument of which they form a part the apostle Paul rests the credibility and validity of the Christian religion upon the resurrection of Jesus Christ. He takes pains to make his point clear. Everything hinges on the fact of Christ's empty tomb. If Christ be not risen preaching and faith are alike vain. Paul and the other apostles are false witnesses. All who have believed are yet in their sins. Those who have died, trusting in Christ, have perished miserably in the black abyss of falsehood and futility. Yea, believers are of all men most miserable; for, having counted the gains of life but loss for Christ that they might win with him and in him life eternal, they have exchanged the illusions of sense for the still greater illusions of the Spirit. They have lost a world which gives some semblance of reality and some sensuous satisfaction for an imaginary world which not only has no real existence but is a positive lie. They have lived and died in a fool's paradise.

The apostle has pondered well this central fact. He has reached an invincible conviction that Christ lived and died and rose again. He believed that this was all foretold by the sacred Scriptures. He has met and examined credible witnesses and is certain that they have told him the truth. And, last of all, the risen Christ appeared unto Paul himself "as one born out of due time." Then, through a long life of amazing intellectual activity, the apostle worked out the argument until he was able to reconcile the laws of nature and the supernatural, and build upon this reconcilement the glorious prophecy of a day when this corruptible shall have put on incorruption and this mortal shall have put on immortality. Oh glorious day! when death is swallowed up in victory; a victory which God hath given us through Jesus Christ.

There is a timid and trifling rationalism much in fashion to-day which tells us in the accent of compromise that after all it makes no difference whether Christ was the Son of God or the son of Joseph; whether he did miracles or not; whether, indeed, he rose from the dead or was conceived as risen by the passion of his followers. The chief thing is his "spiritual value." If we follow his teachings, we need raise no awkward questions as to his deity, his pre-existence in the form of God, his incarnation as the world's divine Redeemer, or his resurrection from the grave and glorious return to the heavens whence he came.

If Christ Be Dead

But there is no trace of such frigid and futile reasoning in the New Testament history. Christ does not command us merely to follow his teaching. His word is "follow me." The only Christ we have is the Christ of the virgin birth, sealed by the Spirit of God at his baptism; tempted of the devil and of men; crucified by the hands of hate at the time and in the place which he himself foretold. We cannot follow him to the tomb and leave him there. He is not there. He is risen. If we follow him at all we must go with the others and hear his great commission and behold him caught up into the heavens as we gaze. He is more than teacher. He is Saviour and Lord. He is alive now in every believing heart.

In the thought of Paul the resurrection of Christ is not a theological proposition, nor a phenomenon in natural history, nor an incident in the unfolding drama of human life. It is a cosmic fact. It relates itself to the Old Testament. It is the "one far-off divine event to which the whole creation moves." It is the center of the world. It involves the whole meaning of life and unveils the destiny of man. It is God's greatest act and man's only hope. As in Adam all die so in Christ shall all be made alive. If Christ is dead God is dead. Eternal life is the gift of God. But if the Lord Jesus, who brought life and immortality to light through the Gospel, died and was buried as all men die and are buried, where can we find contact with eternity?

> Our little systems have their day,
> They have their day and cease to be,

and we cease with them if Christ be not risen.

If God has suffered his Holy One to see corruption and left his soul in Sheol our faith is vain. Christ has promised to be with us even unto the end of the age. But how, if he is dead? He has gone to prepare a place for us; but how, if he is dead? The history of man is summed up in two words, Life and Death. With these two supreme all-inclusive realities Jesus Christ has come to deal. Other teachers describe life. Christ imparts it. Others have life. Christ is life. He takes the "spark which animates our clod" and casts it like a garden seed into the soil of human nature, and lo! it springs up with life eternal. It is sown in corruption. It is raised in incorruption. It is sown a natural body. In Christ it is raised a spiritual body.

There have been many great men in the world. And they have exhibited many forms of greatness. Moses the lawgiver; Confucius the moralist; Buddha the dreamer; Socrates the teacher; Alexander the warrior; Isaiah the seer; Cæsar the builder of empires; Lincoln the liberator—heroic men—each "treading his narrow world like a colossus." But they are all dead. Sunk into ignominious dust they remain but a memory.

> Imperial Cæsar, dead and turned to clay,
> Might stop a hole to keep the wind away

These and the glorious company to which they belong have told us much about life. But death has vanquished them. They differ from other and lesser men only in degree. The fruits of their labors have been garnered into the common wealth of the race, but they themselves sleep in the dust among the millions whose very names are perished.

How different is Christ! We have his words more precious than jewels. His teachings have been woven into the fabric of society everywhere. The spell of his genius has fallen upon the world's literature, art and politics. His character is still the ideal, ever haunting the minds of men and calling them to nobler things. But he is something more than teacher and example. He is the Giver of life and, therefore, the Destroyer of death. To-day a thousand men, broken by the battle, will lie down to die. And there will come stealing over the gray shadow of the spirit's anguish a golden light. These men have been beaten by life but not by death. Death is swallowed up in victory. They are resting in Christ. In him they have life eternal. And upon their quiet faces when silence comes the watchers will behold a smile of heavenly peace and joy—a look of startled wonder as though at last they had seen "face to face" their Saviour. "I am the resurrection and the life," saith the Lord. "He that liveth and believeth shall never die."

"If Christ be not raised your faith is vain." Let us face the truth. If you take Christ as yours, you must take him first of all as a Saviour. And he saves completely. Not only does he save from sin, its curse, its power and its guilt, but he saves from life in all its hectic pain and failure; and from death, the last enemy, in the pathway of every man. Christ saves from sin by taking the sinner who believes into his sinless soul and imparting, as a response to faith, his own life. He saves from life by catching up the incomplete and unsatisfying life of men into the complete and satisfying life of God. Christ met sin and mastered it. He lived a human life and remained in unbroken union and communion with the Father. And now, can he save from death? Not unless he has died and risen again. If he is dead, he cannot save from either sin or life or death. We may delude our minds by beautiful thoughts, but we do not change the fact. Sin is the shadow of life, the substance of death. A dead Saviour is simply a dead man. A living Saviour is the Lord of life, and the Slayer of death. Faith in a Saviour who has been broken by death is vain.

If Christ be dead, there is no other world but this. All your fine words about Heaven and rest and eternal life are without meaning. This is a world of reason: let the rationalist enjoy it; a world of sense: give then the senses their fill of delights; a world of selfishness: shall we not therefore make self-preservation the first law of nature? But in this world without a risen Redeemer, there is no room and no need for faith, that faculty which reaches beyond reason and sense and lays hold upon spiritual realities. If Christ is dead, there are no spiritual realities. For, in spite of all his wonderful precepts, his penetration of insight, his elevation of character, his genius for leadership, his sublimity of love, he was simply one of the race of men, flaming for a moment among the nebulous mass of his lesser fellows and now cold and silent, like them, in the dust. "If Christ be not risen your faith is vain."

But If Christ Be Risen?

Yes, Paul was right. The resurrection of Christ is the supreme uncompromising fact of all the ages. If science cannot accept the resurrection for scientific reasons, then science is under most solemn obligation to turn the whole battery of its investigating wisdom upon this question until we shall know what became of the body of Jesus. Let science tell us how and why Paul and hundreds of other eye-witnesses believed that Christ rose from the dead. It would plunge the race into eclipse if science could prove that the countless millions who have believed in Christ as a present, living, personal Saviour, the giver of life eternal, were deluded. But the blackest midnight of truth is better than the fairest noontime of delusion. If, impelled by the hunger for life, for holiness, for sight of loved ones snatched away by death, the world has madly followed a mirage, a mere subjective dream, science can become our savior by helping us to see that there is, after all, nothing but the desert, and we shall, at least, be able to take our place in the dust without unreasonable excitement. If the frozen horror of such a glacial age of reason be the truth, let us have it.

But if not? If Christ be risen, according to the Scripture? If he has put death under his pierced feet and lifted men to God? If the apostle did achieve the power of His resurrection? If, in a word, the last two thousand years of the world's best progress have sprung from and been nourished by the truth, rather than by a lie, what shall our answer be? Oh, shall we not turn with swift and willing feet to run the race that is set before us, looking unto Jesus, the author and finisher of our faith, who, for the joy that was set before him, endured the cross, despising the shame, and is now set down at the right hand of God? Shall we not face our common tasks with deep and holy joy, walking patiently the way which leadeth home? Steadfast in loyalty, immovable in our faith, always abounding in the work of the Lord, forasmuch as we know that our labor is not in vain in the Lord. Christ the Lord is risen to-day. Hallelujah! Because he lives we shall live also. We have been redeemed. He hath put death under his feet. The gift of God is eternal life. This world belongs to God, and men do live forever with the Lord. For this corruptible must put on incorruption and this mortal must put on immortality. So when this corruptible shall have put on incorruption, and this mortal shall have put on immortality, then shall be brought to pass the saying that is written: Death is swallowed up in victory. O Death, where is thy sting! O grave, where is thy victory? The sting of death is sin; and the strength of sin is the law. But thanks be to God, which giveth us the victory through our Lord Jesus Christ. Amen.

DAILY MEDITATION

FOR EVERY DAY IN THE YEAR, BASED ON THE WORDS OF JESUS

BY PROFESSOR W. H. T. DAU

SUNDAY, April 12. Mark 2: 14. "Follow me." Let us note that the summons to discipleship which came to Levi, or Matthew, was couched in the same terms as that issued to the earlier disciples, and that it has the same effect. In this instance a rich man and one belonging to a notorious class of men was brought into the company of Jesus. Should not Jesus have varied his method on this occasion? If he had been a time-serving hireling, he either might have shown the deference which is frequently shown to the wealthy, or he might have permitted himself to be swayed by public opinion, which could be expected to condemn his choice of such a disciple. With indifference to every human consideration in this matter, Jesus extends his grace to this wealthy publican. Before him, every social and moral distinction is brought to the common level of helplessness. No man is too great and good not to need the mercy of the Saviour, no man too low to be denied it. Let the proud sniff at the idea that they must be made sinners like the rest; let the Pharisees sneer at the wards Jesus receives into his fold. He will go on undismayed, issuing the quickening call: "Follow me!" Whatever your station in life, whatever your past record, Jesus wants you. Come to him as Levi did—just as you are.

MONDAY, April 13. Luke 5: 31, 32. "They that are whole need not a physician, but they that are sick. I came not to call the righteous, but sinners to repentance." The offense taken by the critics of Jesus, who ate and drank with publicans and sinners, is here shown to be unjust. The Lord's answer to them turns out a fearful arraignment of spiritual conceit. "They that are whole" are such as think they are. While this notion possesses them, they have no use for Jesus. They may think well, even highly, of him because of his virtuous conduct and his mysterious greatness. They would like the holy Jesus to associate with them exclusively. His union with them would add luster to their self-righteous society, and they may think Jesus himself would appear nobler if he had only to do with such saintly people as they are. Jesus declines their company. He tells them they have neither share nor portion in his merciful ministry while they foster the conceit that they are better than other men in the sight of God and of his Son who came to take away the sins of the world. He came to call sinners to repentance, and this is the call he issues to them: "If ye repent not of your fictitious goodness and assumed superiority, ye will die in your sins, though the Physician who wanted to cure you came to you also." But what a comfort does this answer contain to the sin-sick! Jesus declares he is theirs—belongs to them exclusively. No sooner do they begin to sorrow for their sin, than the Physician is before them and says: "I am the Lord that healeth thee."

TUESDAY, April 14. Matthew 9: 13. "But go ye and learn what that meaneth, I will have mercy, and not sacrifice." When Jesus declared his mission to be to sinners and not to the righteous, he reiterated a principle that God had laid down for man's dealing with man, and of which he had informed his worshipers long ago. This principle he had adopted for his own dealing with men. Jesus, the great Messenger of our salvation, was doing nothing that should have startled the Jews, had they read their Old Testament aright. They had been told time and again by their prophets that the proper attitude of the worshiper before Jehovah must be that of a humble and contrite person, and the attitude which Jehovah would assume to him would be that of the Pardoner. Neither the quantity nor the quality of their sacrifices could merit any favor for them from the Judge, and if they rested their confidence that they were righteous in the sight of God on their penances and sacrifices, they were building their faith on sinking sand. Mercy, mercy to sinners is the keynote of every saving message of God to sinners. No other declaration that he has made, no other injunction he has laid on men for their direction and training, can supersede the message of mercy. It is only when we begin to understand the merciful God that we begin to comprehend God at all.

WEDNESDAY, April 15. Luke 5: 34, 35. "Can ye make the children of the bridechamber fast, while the bridegroom is with them? But the days will come, when the bridegroom shall be taken away from them, and then shall they fast in those days." The fault-finding with the conduct of Jesus started with strictures concerning his condescension; now it is the disrespect he has shown to the religious sentiments and the sanctimonious doings of leading church-people that has given the critics umbrage. Frugal living certainly was the order in Jesus' company. That he inculcated fasting is also a fact, and likewise, that he was a man of prayer and taught his followers to pray. But he did not cultivate that morose type of religion which considers the sour face an exemplary mark of saintliness, and measures men's progress in sanctification by the amount of self-affliction they impose on themselves. Jesus desires cheerful followers. He wants believers to rejoice because they have him. They must not pine in anguish and moan and smite their breasts and don sackcloth and ashes while they live in the company of Jesus, who came to turn all their woe into happiness by ridding them of their guilt and the terrible consequences of sin. To go mourning in his presence is just as great an insult as when a bride appears depressed as she stands by the side of the bridegroom. The true child of God is a joyful creature of divine grace, who worships God with a face radiant with happiness.

THURSDAY, April 16. Luke 5: 36-39. "No man putteth a piece of a new garment upon an old; if otherwise, then both the new maketh a rent, and the piece that was taken out of the new agreeth not with the old. And no man putteth new wine into old bottles; else the new wine will burst the bottles, and be spilled, and the bottles shall perish. But new wine must be put into new bottles; and both are preserved. No man also having drunk old wine straightway desireth new; for he saith, The old is better." The spirit of the religion which Christ taught is incompatible with the temper of man-made righteousness, such as that invented by the self-righteous Pharisees. True believers are indeed no iconoclasts. They readily accommodate themselves to established forms of worship and pious practices, as long as by so doing they are not sacrificing any principle of evangelical truth and grace. When these things are regarded as free expressions of devotion, and no merit is attached to them, the believers in Christ are willing to forego personal preferences to please the brethren, especially the weaker brethren. But as soon as these practices are demanded of them in the name of God and as necessary to salvation, they revolt. "Stand fast in the liberty wherewith Christ has made you free," cries Paul to the Galatians, who were about to be placed under the old yoke of legalistic bondage. Then the new cloth of grace, the new wine of faith in the grace of God tears the old garment, bursts the old bottles of ceremonialism and self-righteousness. What the Jewish synagogue experienced in the days of Christ and the apostles, the Roman Church had to experience in the days of the Reformation. And the same happens in any individual who is converted from the righteousness of his own works to the righteousness which is by faith in Christ.

FRIDAY, April 17. Mark 5:30 and Luke 8:46. "Somebody hath touched me; for I perceive that virtue is gone out of me." Peter, with slight chagrin, expresses surprise at the Lord's question. The crowd following and possibly jostling them, it was natural that some one should touch Jesus. But this shows that not every one who may have come in physical contact with Jesus experienced the startling effects of the touch like this afflicted woman. Many touched him, Judas kissed him, without any physical consequences. The virtue that went out of him on this occasion was in response to the mute appeal of the timid sufferer, and he willed that it should go out. However feeble and impure the faith of this woman in him still might be, he determined that she should not be deceived in the main point: that he was indeed the One who could and would heal her, even after she had spent her substance to enlist human help. The Lord's question is intended to reveal the miracle he has just performed, to take all false timidity out of his client, to make her a public confessor of the kindness she has received. Many a one has thus come up to Christ with the throng, with a grief and sorrow in his heart that was consuming his life—though no one was aware of his condition—and has put forth the hand of faith to lay hold of some promise of relief in the Gospel which brought him in touch with Christ. Pastors are often made to learn how an insignificant remark or circumstance in sermon or conversation has been eagerly taken up, and has brought comfort and strength to a despairing heart.

SATURDAY, April 18. Mark 5: 34. "Daughter, thy faith hath made thee whole; go in peace, and be whole of thy plague." Where men are inclined to see only superstition, Jesus sees faith. And as a person's faith acknowledges him Lord and Saviour, so he in turn acknowledges the possessor of faith a son or daughter of God. He knoweth them that are his, even though they are hidden in a crowd of people who have been attracted to him by mere curiosity. But while faith is indeed a personal and private affair of the individual, and while the believing heart has dealings with the Lord which often cannot, in the nature of the case, be published, the relation which faith establishes between the believer and his Lord cannot remain concealed. Believing and professing are companion acts of the child of God. Nicodemus may at first come to Jesus by night, but Nicodemus must also publicly take the Lord's side later. So Jesus draws out this believing woman from among the crowd, gives her the strength to overcome her natural modesty and timidity, acknowledges that she is now become kin to the great family of God on earth, the true believers, and sends her away with the benediction of that peace in her heart which he alone gives and which no man taketh away. If there are any among us pining in hidden sickness and sorrow, whom no physician has been able to cure, and whom no man has been able to comfort effectually, let them come boldly to this Physician.

These Daily Meditations by Professor Dau will appear in each issue during 1914.

THE MESSAGE OF SPRING

DRESSING through the loosening sod,
Wee green leaves begin to show;
Little flower-stems bend and nod
When the first warm breezes blow.
Tarry faces, shy and sweet,
Mid the ferns and grasses hide
Where the light and shadows meet
And the brook's clear waters glide.

Overhead the maple flings
Its red banners to the day,
And the robin sways and sings
Singing on the topmost spray.
Through the forest glad wings whir,
Songs of joy glad voices trill,
Opening leaves, and sound, and stir
Happy springtime stories tell.

Everywhere life springs anew,
Over death triumphant still,
Proving all God's promise true—
At his holy, blessed will Earth, so desolate, once more
In her glory doth rejoice;
Clothed with bloom and light again,
Rings with praise her happy voice.

"There's no death," they seem to say,
"All its sting has passed away;
Just beyond its portal dread
Wakes immortal life instead;
All our dead shall rise again,
With the King of kings to reign."

Philippi, W. Va. IDA L. REED.

THE HARBOR OF PEACE*
A SERENE dream possessed my soul,
And I began to picture a heaven of love—
A sanctuary rich, a temple fair;
A love witness, a city of prayer.
What more grand than to witness
One perfect universal spiritual prayer,
Each with his "Thy Kingdom come"
A rippling wonder above the sea,
A paradise on earth and air,
A name for adoration Pure and True,
That for us I name each season—
Beauty and grace, my mother's name.
Each morning's sunrise, crest with gold,
The glory of heaven, the living world,
A mirror rich, the lake below,
The God of life's great overflow
Of love and light for all the world,
In joy that spiritual unity birth,
Comes joyously soon with thrilling call
Of unseen. In the purple mist
The trilling notes of feather play
Till dead black eyes and souls of grey;
So smooth the green-clad soft lawn's sheen,
As restless Nature's pastels o'er.
And here the lake mind smiles the Perfect whole of Nature's rite,
And evening fireworks glint the lake
In clapping waves and leaping wake;
With fish and yellow shooting past,
Fan rainbow fingers streaming fast,
In temple vaults each curving line
Glows in the sunset's shade and shine,
And drowning hills accompanying deep
In voice and murmur to water sleep.
The hills that thanks of purple chime,
Come echoing plain, laden gold and green.
And in the stream, an azure shine
In heart-thoughts winging up to God,
In silver waterwalk pathways made
Where Christ might walk across the lake.
The old, old assurance shining down
Love over and whisper, "I'm God, rest,"
O temple old! O mountains dear!
With their everlasting hopes full!
I'd see still whose past moment's rest,
Your hopeful days flow love me
The same evening hush on day—
The gift of Nature from above.
Ah, Mother Earth, come near and close
And wrestle with every complex
Who hate, that in your Heart I find
To sing, Oh make Us Easter Day.

* Poem by F. [illegible] [illegible], read during the ministration, in the Bethel service [illegible] Mission, last Thursday. The first in the series is a full report of the [illegible] Mission, to be telegraphed, by Associated Press to Fanny Crosby.

"VIOLET DAY" AT THE BOWERY MISSION

THERE was an unusual demand for tickets in New York on Tuesday, March 14. It was something of a surprise to the Bethel to note that the modest little hymn had suddenly become so unusually popular. Only then the spirit blessed as inspirational, and would unfold the deepest treasures of faith to joy or sorrow.

The reason for the most fond demonstration was that the day was the eighty-fourth birthday of Fanny Crosby, our nation's best-beloved hymn-writer, who, though old and blind, is very dear to the hearts of the American people, who every year observe "Violet Day" in her honor. The King's Daughters of Connecticut were the first ones started a movement to make the anniversary a world-wide one, and what Christian people everywhere do to honor Fanny's favorite flower on that occasion.

Everyone was the birthday of the aged poet observed with many enthusiasm that at the Bowery Mission. A large audience assembled in the auditorium [illegible] at 2:30 on Tuesday, a number of Fanny Crosby's most beautiful hymns were sung with great enthusiasm, and holiday spirit was noticed by all [illegible] appreciated.

The editor of The Christian Herald, who [illegible] of the poet's long-time acquaintance with the Bowery Mission, [illegible] number of her hymns under the inspiration, the famous hymn "Rescue the Perishing" was written by her after an evening visit to the Bowery Mission, where, according to her own account, she met [illegible] a poor woman, the "rescued" one, and had with her of "Jesus, the Night to Save." Many years afterward she had visited the old mission and had spoken to the inmates of the Bowery, both in prose and song, whereupon [illegible] had been [illegible] the entire audience. She has [illegible] and testimonies presented her [illegible] of the day from Bridgeport, for she had so loved the men of the Bowery that she wanted to [illegible] with them in spirit. The following [illegible] telegram [illegible] by the meeting as a surprise from the Bowery Mission to be telegraphed to Alexander Hunt at Fanny Crosby:

"The men of the Bowery Mission unite in a hearty and loving message of congratulation to America's best-loved hymn-writer, Fanny Crosby, on her 84th birthday. May the years to come be filled with [illegible] and blessing to her, as those [illegible] have been, bring joy and blessing to her."

FANNY CROSBY

In response to [illegible] telegram, Miss Crosby sent the following message:

"Tell the men of the Bowery Mission that I am very grateful for their kind remembrance of me, and that I love them all. Tell them that I am trusting in the Lord Jesus Christ for my salvation, and that I am happy in Him."

In his address, the chairman briefly reviewed the remarkable career of the poet and the development of that talent which had become such a blessing to the Christian world. Characteristic was the keynote of Fanny's character. At six years of age she expressed this in her first attempt at poetry, in which she wrote:

[illegible]

The first popular hymn was "The Bright Forever," which followed in rapid succession, and many of these are in use of the [illegible] to-day. W. F. Myer, the composer of sacred music and author of some 1,000 tunes and harmonies, has given to hundreds of Fanny Crosby's hymns a musical setting. He wrote the first tune for her forty-nine years ago. She has published seven books of poems, the first appearing in 1844.

Rev. Ferdinand C. Ig[illegible], who was Fanny Crosby's pastor in New York City, made an eloquent address in which he described the [illegible] of Power of her work. He told of his first meeting with Fanny Crosby and how he had been impressed by her wonderful spirituality.

Dr. Arthur J. Smith, head of the Evangelistic Committee of Greater New York, told the [illegible] and told of his impressions of the gifted poet, whose genius had been so greatly used for the spread of Gospel truth. "Saved by Grace" he considers a type of transcendent power; a worthy theme for any person. He was listened to with the closest attention by the large audience.

Rev. Myron Cooley, of the Baptist Church of Seattle, proved a most interesting speaker having also had the privilege of an acquaintance with the poet many years ago. His talk was rich in reminiscence and was greatly enjoyed.

A NEW LAND OF PROMISE

THE Conquest of Alaska is one of those victories of Peace which are no less renowned than War's. That vast land was wrested from Russia in 1867 by the power of the pen; now, by another stroke of the presidential pen, the whole territory lies open to the onward march of civilization: to the permanent occupation, so to speak, by the armies of peace—agriculture, mining, industrialism. This was made possible when, on March 12, President Wilson, using two gold pens for the purpose, signed the bill passed by Congress authorizing the expenditure of $35,000,000 in the construction of railroads to connect the great interior districts with seaports upon the territory's twenty-six thousand mile coast line.

STREET SCENE IN WRANGELL, A TYPICAL ALASKA TOWN

Alaska is still a pioneer's country. The fortunes which have been brought out of that land have been won at the common everyday risk of life. The facilities for living, for working, and for transportation which have been laboriously introduced are prohibited luxuries there to any but the fortunate.

Condensed milk is seventy-five cents a can, and a ton shipment pays from $200 to $500, and more freight for each one hundred miles it is carried into the interior. These examples will indicate the still unsettled conditions in that biggest of all our colonial possessions.

It behooves every American to get better acquainted with this important territory. Take your atlas and study Alaska. You will get again your schoolboy thrill to note that the United States reaches up into the Arctic Circle, almost touches Asia, and stretches westward in the North Pacific by way of the Aleutian Islands a distance from San Francisco as great as from San Francisco to New York. The mighty Yukon, flowing 1,800 miles to the sea (the Hudson is 210 miles long), a mile wide for six hundred miles from its mouth, will hold you in awed surprise once more. Lakes, rivers, limitless plains, mountain ranges proclaim this a country by itself, needing no annexation to another to give it dignity and worth. And yet it was bought by the United States for $7,200,000, and for nearly a half century has been the free stamping ground of fortune-hunters who have dared its cold forbidding mountain passes and rushing streams to seek for gold. A half billion has been their reward.

And now suddenly that upper left-hand corner of the map of the Western Hemisphere has become a land of promise, holding out a beckoning hand to farmers and artisans and homesteaders and merchants, and, of course, more miners.

There are less than 40,000 white people settled in Alaska to-day. Yet it is said that there are 50,000,000 acres of tillable land in Alaska capable of yielding rich abundance of hardy cereals, fruits and vegetables, and of sustaining great herds of cattle. The coal and oil and copper and iron and gold resources are said to exceed those of any other section of our country. Alaska is approximately one-fifth the size of the rest of the United States.

What has the United States Government done to advance the development of this wonderland of untouched wealth? It has imported reindeer experimentally for the benefit of the Eskimos living on the shores of the Arctic Ocean. It has also permitted private enterprise to almost secure a monopolistic hold upon the mineral and agricultural resources. And now it has prevented the catastrophe just mentioned and taken the needful step for national development of the territory by providing for the construction of government-owned railroads on an adequate scale.

Less than 1,000 miles of wagon road have been made at private and municipal cost in Alaska. Here and there can be found short stretches of railroad, chiefly owned and used by mining concerns. The aggregate private ownership of Alaskan territory is said to be only one per cent. of the whole. What marvelous change may be expected when public-owned railroads shall pierce to every accessible part of this great country where men may come to settle and build towns and cities! It is claimed that the climatic conditions are delightful: cold but dry and still in winter; equable in summer. A land of new opportunity for thousands of Americans, for thousands and thousands from other lands who may have the will and the courage to do what other thousands did when California and all our Western States composed a nameless unexplored wilderness bearing an even more terrorizing reputation.

The present population of Alaska will be greatly benefited by the building of railroads. Comforts will increase, cost of living will decrease. A new market for American products will be created. Towns and cities will expand and increase. Things that make for better educational work—for there is quite a school system in Alaska—and for wider religious activities, will find their way to the scattered communities, and the next generation of Alaskans may in all reasonable possibility be on a par with the rest of us in respect to these matters.

Perhaps this is too optimistic. Alaska, despite the progress already made toward settling the country, and the big things that must accompany the building of the railroads, still has its peculiar problems of development and government to work out, and the duration of one generation may not suffice in which to see this territory take its place as a modern State. But ways and means for stimulating migration and aiding in the rapid settlement of the country by desirable classes are having the consideration of the administration at Washington. Secretary of the Interior Franklin K. Lane is a thorough student of Alaskan questions, and he is advocating a special Board of Directors to have in charge the work of bringing Alaska into the fullest possible enjoyment of her wonderful possibilities. It is expected that a land-leasing bill will be passed by Congress as a corollary to the railroad bill, which will considerably hasten in opening up the country. Operations under the railroad act will begin as soon as a chief engineer and his working force can be selected.

The policy of Secretary Lane is to develop Alaska along lines that will conserve its tremendous resources as a national asset for the people, and prevent their exploitation by speculators and monopolies. The extensive business now done by the fisheries and by fur dealers and mining concerns does not produce a revenue to the Territory in any sense sufficient for its development. The purpose of the administration is to provide laws and regulations which will, in a reasonable course of time, enable Alaska not only to reimburse the Federal Government for its expenditures, but to become self-supporting and fitted for statehood.

The big problem will be to bring the Territory into a condition of political unity. It has been said that Alaska "is not one country, but many, thoroughly diverse from one another." Serious obstacles by no means confined to topography confront the friends of that too long neglected portion of the United States. Squatters' rights on a huge scale may oppose progress. Christian influences will have a large opportunity in the task—have, in fact, already done much. But the very bigness and complexity of the Alaskan problem is what makes it the interesting and important thing it is to-day.

"Into Galilee"

"THERE shall ye see Him," said the angel to the women at the sepulcher, announcing that the risen Jesus would meet his disciples in Galilee. We are apt to wish that some such clear message would come to us, telling us where we might go, to-day, to meet the risen Saviour and talk with him. Can you imagine how the trains would be crowded to any locality, whether it were some suburb of a city, some great city itself, or some out-of-the-way, quiet place like Galilee, if an authoritative message had gone forth that Jesus would meet in visible presence all his friends who would gather there?

But such a message has gone forth. What is the name of your town? What is the name of the city or village to which you must go to-day to your daily task? What is the name of your township, where you will abide to-day, in the same tasks you were busy with yesterday? Wherever it is, the risen Saviour has a definite appointment to meet you there to-day. "Lo, I am with you alway," he said plainly. The call to "follow" him must be a call to be near him. Paul declared that Christ would be in us, the hope of glory, and boasted that the Saviour really lived in his own heart.

Countless are the ways and places where we may see him. In prayer, in Christian worship, in reading his Word, in our daily work we may be with him. It is the testimony of lives like this, lived in the Master's presence, that the world has greatest need of now. It is the power of such lives that will arouse the world from its indifference, destroying its doubt, and leading its people to the risen Saviour. Will you find him in your work to-day, and live, the whole day through, in the consciousness of his presence?

The Struggle Over Ulster

GREAT BRITAIN is passing through the severest crisis of a century—a struggle which has shaken Parliament, the army, the cabinet and even the throne itself. In the long battle for Irish Home Rule, which has been waging through successive ministries, the point had been reached where the passage of a bill was in sight. It was halted by the resolute opposition of Ulster, the one strong Protestant province of the island, which, rather than leave the Union and recognize the authority of a Home Rule Parliament, decided if need be to fight to save its political and religious liberties.

Then things began to happen. Warships were sent unheralded to Ulster ports and the battle squadron was ordered to the Irish coast. Simultaneously, troops were detailed for service in the rebellious province. But here the program, which had all the semblance of coercion, suddenly halted. Army resignations poured in upon the War Office, and it soon became evident that the whole military establishment was permeated with pro-Ulster sympathies. The army, which the schemers had planned to use, and from which no opposition was anticipated, had spoiled the program. When plain John Ward, Laborite, rose in the House of Commons and claimed that the king was responsible for the blunders of his government, he voiced the general feeling. Pinned to a corner, the government disclaimed any intention of taking war measures against Ulster; the proposed movements of troops and ships were purely precautionary. But the army itself evidently held otherwise and its officers charged that the government had broken faith, as a pledge had been made to the military leaders that no force would be used in Ulster. It was this feeling of having been betrayed into a false attitude that led to the resignations. Mr. Asquith vigorously protested that there was no plot to coerce Ulster; "such a thing would never happen." Finally, the climax to this stream of denials and explanations and apologies was reached when the war secretary, Colonel Seely, voluntarily took all the blame of the blunder on his own shoulders and tendered his resignation. Mr. Asquith promptly refused to accept the sacrifice, which Bonar Law, the aggressive leader of the opposition, characterized as "throwing Seely to the wolves, who, however, had agreed not to eat him."

This was the situation on March 27. How it will work out ultimately cannot be confidently predicted. It may be that Ulster, after all, will accept Mr. Asquith's peace-offering of six years' exclusion for the province from Home Rule, after that period its status to be determined by a general election. Or it may be—and it is far more probable—that Ulster alone of all the Irish provinces will remain in the Union indefinitely; this is all that Ulster wants. But the influence of the present remarkable situation may go much further. While it expresses the mind of the British people on the right of the men of Ulster to preserve their loyalty and freedom of religion, it also marks the end of aristocratic domination in the affairs of the government in army or navy or any other of its branches. King, cabinet and Commons have evidently interpreted the sign. "On which side is the king?" may be the question of the immediate future.

Presidential Solitude

IN HIS offhand address before the National Press Club in Washington a few days ago, President Wilson indulged in a heart-to-heart talk which was both vivacious and instructive. Seldom has an executive so thoroughly and entertainingly unbosomed himself. His speech was half serious, half humorous, and there was in it a note of lamentation over the fact that he was obliged to sustain a double rôle, which was sometimes rather difficult. He found that he had two distinct personalities: the first congenial, with a vivid appreciation of all that goes to make life agreeable, and disposed to be sympathetic and even emotional at times; the other reserved, formal, dignified, with the outward semblance of coldness, which, however, he assured his hearers was merely an effort of severe self-repression. This latter development he attributed to the atmosphere of the presidential office. That office he had found to be the loneliest and most isolated imaginable. It was hedged about by conventionalities which he resented and threw off when opportunity afforded. It was decreed by precedent that, in certain gatherings, the President must be the first to leave the room, "but," Mr. Wilson added jocosely, "when I get guests in my own house and the public is shut out, I adjourn being President and take leave to be a gentleman." But there were still other unspeakable conditions. He found himself in the same category as the National Museum, the Monument and the Smithsonian Institute—a thing of fixed precedent, to be gazed at and respected at a distance, but not to be approached or mingled with on terms of familiarity. He could hardly go on the streets without being pointed out and gazed at with awe-struck wonder. With increasing dramatic force he told how he was "personally conducted to beat the band," and how curators, "and every other kind of official," as well as private detectives, dogged and shadowed his steps in a way that he found most distressing. Wherever he went he was guided and guarded and surrounded, and he had no liberty of action except when in the bosom of his own household.

President Wilson's protest against formalism has struck a responsive chord. We are all more or less hero-worshipers and idealists, but not until now has it been made so clear that such homage may become a burden to its object by being overdone. Yet there is a dignity and apartness that are inseparable from the presidential office. Lincoln felt this and sought in his moments of relaxation to find relief from it. Other Presidents have tried to get away at times from the bondage of official dignities but they usually had to leave the capital to do it. Cleveland went hunting ducks or fishing; Roosevelt took long walks or rides; Taft found relief in the golf field; Arthur, in drives and strolls, shook off the incubus. But it always came back.

President Wilson is a literary man and doubtless knows the story of the adventurous calif who discarded his robes of state and went among his people incognito and found great enjoyment and profit in his escapades. This seems to be the only way now open to our precedent-ridden Presidents to get back to nature and sane living; yet we seriously doubt whether Mr. Wilson, for all his lamentation, would care to attempt the rôle of Calif Haroun. Indeed, he has done far better, for his little good-natured talk may be the means of opening a door to presidential emancipation, for which his official successors will remember him with gratitude.

The New Serial Next Week

MAKE sure that your friends do not miss the opening chapters of "A Little Angel of the Mountains," Dr. Cyrus Townsend Brady's new serial story, which begins in next week's issue of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD. You will be charmed with the story at the very beginning. The simplicity and beauty of the opening chapter pass quickly to thrilling adventure and to tragedy. When you have once met the rough, whimsical, erring citizens of Cañon Creek, you will follow their fortunes eagerly through to the end. The "Angel" is a brave, lovable little fellow, who wins your heart from the first. Tell your friends about his story and help them to get acquainted with him.

A Pertinent Suggestion

THE saving sense of humor which relieves an awkward situation was recently illustrated in the House of Representatives. Congressman Gray of Indiana, referring to the fact that a certain class of men seemed to be "chafing for a fight," said he might be willing to vote for war with Mexico upon certain conditions. These were that the war advocates themselves should compose the first company to lead the invasion, their sons the second, and the jingo editors and correspondents the third. This arrangement, he admitted, might somewhat dampen their martial ardor and dissipate their enthusiasm. He might very well have added that Mexico has already thrown away some 15,000 to 20,000 lives in the present rebellion. In the Balkan War, lately concluded, Servia lost 71,000 men, Greece 48,000, Montenegro 11,200, Bulgaria 156,000; out of the total of 1,300,000 combatants, 286,000 killed and wounded, being over 22 per cent. of the male population. We imagine that if the advocates of war were calmly to weigh these statistics, which cover a period of a few months, and add the orphans, the widows, the destitute dependents, and all the suffering that goes with them—to say nothing about the material cost—they would hesitate about lifting their voices in favor of any policy that would lead to such results.

Light on the Days of Daniel

NOT long ago, the very existence of such a person as Daniel the prophet was seriously questioned by a certain class of skeptics and others. Now remarkable things have come to light. Bibleland exploration is more and more confirming the Bible and confounding the unbelievers. Among the hundreds of tablets excavated by American archeologists in Babylonia, some are of the time of Daniel, belonging to the reigns of Nebuchadnezzar and of Nabonidus (the last Semitic king of Babylonia). THE CHRISTIAN HERALD has fortunately been able to procure a number of tablets of this period. They are priceless relics. You can learn, by reading the article on the subject in our March 25 issue, how to obtain one of these tablets.

Snow the Farmer's Friend

THERE has been considerable complaint of the heavy snows, especially those late in the season: farmers had to dig themselves out to the road, city streets were obstructed, and walking was bad. The Department of Agriculture at Washington has just declared what every intelligent farmer knew before: that the snows, and especially the last general deep snow, have been of untold benefit to the soil, and that on account of them we have the best start for bumper crops that we have had for years. When snow has long lain upon the ground and there has been extensive opportunity for it to creep down into the earth, carrying its moisture from one to two feet, the soil is prepared to develop sturdy roots for the cereal crops. The plants therefore stand a better chance against possible deficiencies in the matter of rainfall during the period of their growth. Snow furnishes the underground moisture storage of the year, a very good insurance against drought. There is a law of compensation. God sends just enough rain and snow and sun each year. He made the earth for his children, and he knows how to take care of them. He causes the snow even to help make for us our daily bread.

For he saith to the snow, Be thou on the earth. (Job 37: 6.)

Ants as Pets

MRS. CHAS. W. MORSE'S pet ants cannot be admitted to the United States. No stretch of the immigration laws will permit these undesirable alien insects to enter. They will be sent to Washington and put to death with appropriate official ceremonies. The case has been before the Bureau of Entomology of the United States Department of Agriculture, of which Dr. Leland O. Howard is the chief entomologist. "The description of the Morse ant colony, brown meadow ants, is new to me," said Dr. Howard. "Doubtless they are some ordinary and common European variety of the ant family. Of course it is not a question of Mrs. Morse's ants being pets, for the law is absolute. They are insects, and under the law no foreign insects may be imported into the United States." We have no doubt given to other countries plants and creatures of destruction. Other nations have sent to us similar pests, among them the Canada thistle and the English sparrow. The insects after causing murderous damage to our fruit trees are now threatening the destruction of our forests. The nation is wise in shutting out foreign insects. Mrs. Morse believed she had a right to make the colony of ants her pets. They are the symbols of intelligence and industry, and are thus commended for imitation:

Go to the ant, thou sluggard; consider her ways, and be wise. (Prov. 6: 6.)

Sold Sparrows for Canaries

ON a recent Saturday night a pedler went to Hastings-on-Hudson, N. Y., with a cart-load of birds which he sold as canaries. A hundred birds, each in a single little cage, were furnished to the villagers at a dollar each. The bird merchant told the purchasers that the birds would not sing after sundown, but that the next morning they would be at their joyful task, making the homes ring with their melody. The next morning, which was Sunday, they discovered that the golden hues had faded from the feathers, and before long they found that the birds were only common gray English sparrows, which had been painted yellow. When they looked for the pedler they found he had left town, but had not left his address. The community was badly imposed upon, but the lesson was worth a dollar a head. This making of song birds out of sparrows with a daub of yellow paint is a part of the deceit that we find so often practiced in trade. A thousand mis-representations of one form or other are putting the coat of yellow paint on the sparrow and selling it for a canary. Of such society may justly offer this prayer:

O deliver me from the deceitful and unjust man. (Ps. 43: 1.)

African Diamonds Thrown Away

IT is learned with surprise that a considerable proportion of the precious stones which are dug up in the South African diamond fields are thrown away. A mining expert makes report to a certain company in which he declares that nearly 50 per cent. of the ground passes through the washing pans without releasing its contents of garnet, ilmenite and diamonds. A new and improved type of machinery will soon be installed in many diamond mining districts in South Africa. How many precious diamonds are thrown away, jewels of thought, of faculty, of opportunity. The utilization of the waste forces is practiced in all departments of industry, and should be employed in the moral and spiritual realm. Christ taught this necessity when he said:

Gather up the fragments that remain, that nothing be lost. (John 6: 12.)

HON. THEODORE ROOSEVELT

COLONEL ROOSEVELT'S EXPLORATIONS

A DISQUIETING rumor came by cable from Brazil a few days ago. It was signed by Anthony Fiala, one of Colonel Roosevelt's associate explorers in his journeyings through the jungles of the upper Amazon. The cablegram, which had been relayed en route, said: "We have lost everything in the rapids. Telephone my wife of my safety." The first impression was that the colonel's entire party were involved in this unfortunate accident, but a telegram, received two days later from Mr. Roosevelt, relieved the public mind by stating that he had not been with the Fiala group, but was safe at another point and was now on his way with his whole party to Manaos, the great center of the rubber industry of the upper Amazon. The loss even of the colonel's collection of specimens would have been a serious one, to say nothing of the possibility of disaster to himself personally. Letters received from members of the party tell of the colonel's intrepidity in conducting the exploration of jungles where no white traveler had ever penetrated. Their expedition is now finished and all are on their way home. Amid every kind of danger Colonel Roosevelt seems to have a charmed life under the sheltering care of Providence. "There shall not an hair of your head perish." (Luke 21: 18.)

Music as a Medicine

BEFORE the assembled patients of the Phipps psychiatric clinic of the Johns Hopkins Hospital in Baltimore recently a string trio rendered a program of music as part of the treatment to cure mental disorders. The doctors have found that this is an effective means of taking the patient's mind from his illness. There are many pianolas, music boxes and phonographs in the building that aid materially in the cure of mental diseases. Music is an expression of the heart of God, which is infinite melody. It delights, comforts, and inspires the soul. Its quality advances with civilization and Christianity. The lash and the lock are giving way to the humaner and diviner methods of treatment for the mentally diseased. Music has been an efficient instrument in the hand of the church in curing moral and spiritual maladies. It is well nigh necessary in soul-saving campaigns. The effect of music upon the soul is thus described:

And it came to pass, when the minstrel played, that the hand of the Lord came upon him. (II Kings 3: 15.)

Invalid Boy Visits President

HARRY WINTHROP DAVIS, nine years old, of Sewickley, Pa., was taken to the White House at Washington in an ambulance the other day, and was carried on a cot into the Blue Room, where he was received by President and Mrs. Wilson. Mr. Wilson took the boy's hand affectionately and spoke kind words to him. The boy gave the President a bunch of forget-me-nots, which he promised to keep. The boy is a confirmed invalid from heart disease. He had read of Washington and the White House and the President, and expressed to his mother constantly a desire to see them. She wrote to Mrs. Wilson, who took a deep interest in the boy and arranged the interview. After the visit the little invalid, proud and happy, was taken to Atlantic City. President Wilson is strong in dominating his party, facing Senates and enforcing his will, but not stronger than when he bends down to take the hand of an invalid boy, and speaks tenderly to him, and promises to keep the little bunch of flowers as a memorial of the visit. The Ruler of the universe is great in creating worlds, but not greater than when he stoops to the cross, and to a sin-sick soul. "Thy gentleness hath made me great," can be said of the earthly as well as the heavenly Ruler. President Wilson could comfort and cheer the boy but could not restore him to health. Christ, the greater Ruler, cured the invalid brought to him on the bed.

Earthly Pride Brought Low

A MAN who had once been widely known as a distinguished scholar and professor in a leading university, with an ample income, passed away a few days ago in a cheap boarding house in a Connecticut city. Less than three years ago he had been enjoying an enviable literary and social prestige, and his whole life and surroundings seemed ideal. He belonged to many societies and clubs and was singularly popular in them all. Then there came a cloud of troubles, both of a domestic and business character. All that the man had held dear began to slip away from him—wife, professorship, income, literary connections. The magazines no longer invited his articles and paid high prices for them. Publishers looked askance, social friends turned their backs upon their former favorite. Then there came a day when, confronted by poverty and despair and deserted by all, he ended his life with a pistol shot. This was one of the most pitiful tragedies in the history of American literature. What a swift fall from the position of one of the ablest and most popular literary men and educators in the nation to that of the pauper and failure and suicide! Something besides towering genius, broad education, indomitable industry, generous income and widespread popularity is essential to success. The moral element is necessary to even earthly prosperity. The time has gone by when genius, however brilliant, or public service, however beneficent, can excuse a person from obedience to social laws so necessary to the order and happiness of mankind. What a pity this man did not go to Christ when his plans and ambitions were shattered, and there find sympathy, love, salvation. Maybe the awful humiliation that overtook him unbalanced his reason and left him irresponsible for his terrible deed. The wise man makes this mention of the humiliation of earthly pride:

Pride goeth before destruction, and a haughty spirit before a fall. (Prov. 16: 18.)

SOWING SEED IN CHINA

WILL you look carefully at the picture upon this page? We have a special reason for asking you to do so. We want you to scan each face, asking yourself as you do it, "Is the little soul behind this face worth a dollar?" You might, with a pencil, cross off each child whose life you think is not worth a dollar. In doing this you will have in mind, of course, that these are Chinese orphans, a few of the thousand and five who are dependent, humanly speaking, upon the Christian Herald Family for their daily bread, their clothing and care, their education and their instruction in Christianity. Had we not taken them up, confident of your support, they would long since, in many cases, have endured an unthinkable fate. None could have hoped in the ordinary course of their lives to amount to anything, and certainly none would have been likely to hear the Gospel of Jesus Christ. They were outcasts, undesirable children, motherless or fatherless and homeless.

The history of each little life from the time Christian pity opened a door of refuge is packed with proofs of the wisdom of caring for such children, and giving them a fair start in life. Such sensitive hearts as theirs, such bright and winsome personalities, such aptitude for improvement were never designed by the Creator to be extinguished at the very outset. There is a divine purpose for these lives, with which the efforts of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD truly seem to be in accord. The opportunity that we (the Christian Herald Family) have to bring this numerous company of heathen-born children into knowledge of our Saviour is one into which many readers have entered with great satisfaction. But it requires the co-operation of a large number of givers of small gifts to provide the twenty dollars per annum which it costs right there in China for each child. We should have the quick and cordial help of every reader who goes over the picture on this page and finds even one face that seems to be worth a dollar. For your dollar may keep one child until the next dollar comes; and if you send two dollars, why, there is just twice the time secured from anxiety. If you send twenty dollars, one of these children has a full year's care with all that he requires provided for.

The generous response that has already been made to our appeals in behalf of these children has had its great part in the work. Some give again and again. Some can give only once. Each week we need to record many new names upon the roll of those who wish to have a part in the salvation of these children from heathenism to strengthen the forces of Christianity on Chinese soil.

News has recently appeared of alarming outrages by brigands in Central China. A noted outlaw, White Wolf, with his followers is going from place to place ravaging whole communities. In one town three hundred people who resisted them were massacred. The local troops are said to be unable or unwilling to protect the people. It is amidst such conditions that the Christian missionaries must uphold their work. And often the missions are the main points of attack by these lawless roving bands.

It seems a wonderful provision of Providence that a whole company of unspoiled childish hearts have been brought within the constant influence of Christian missionaries, to be taught the Gospel of Christ—not alone to be protected from the hardships that attend an orphan's lot in China, but to become living units of Christian influence wherever, in later years, their lots may be cast.

With your eyes upon this little group, typical of the whole company of orphans in our care, will you not make a special offering of Easter gratitude to help lift these precious lives out of darkness into the Light, out of death into Life? Let the amount be according to your ability, and God will bless it according to his. Address Chinese Orphan Fund, THE CHRISTIAN HERALD, Bible House, New York.

THE EASTER THEME IN ART

approaching the sepulcher with the vessels of sweet spices for the anointing. They are finely grouped and beautifully drawn. Plockhorst, the German painter of Biblical scenes, also has the empty tomb, the three women and the angel. The action of his figures is somewhat dramatic. The same thing may be said of Bougereau's treatment of this subject. Spurgenberg's "Three Marys at the Tomb" is finely conceived. His women, typical German matrons despite the Oriental garb of the one figure, are standing at the entrance of a rocky cave, which is filled with a blaze of light. The finest conception, to my mind, is that of the Norwegian, Alex. Enders, who painted the "Holy Women at the Tomb" as an altar piece. The simple reverent wonder of the women, who have just entered the tomb, the white angel figure against the darkness of the hewn rock, Easter dawn shining in through the mouth of the cave and lighting up the dazzling whiteness of the angel's raiment; the triple rich color—deep red, golden yellow and dark green—of the robes worn by the women, make an Easter picture which far surpasses all the attempts of the later Renaissance. I am told that the German emperor, who is so fond of cruising along the Norway coast, never misses an opportunity to spend a quiet hour in the little church which contains this beautiful altarpiece.

Next to the three Marys at the sepulcher, Christ's appearance to Mary Magdalene and the disciples of Emmaus are favorite subjects. In modern art the latter theme has been very successfully treated by Hofman, who, for his picture, selects that moment which suggested the familiar hymn, "Abide with me: fast falls the eventide." Rembrandt's famous picture in the Louvre is exquisite in its tender feeling. The compassionate Son of man, with two weary pilgrims, sits at a bare table. He breaks the bread, their eyes are opened, one starts up astonished; the other worships with folded hands. In front of the Saviour there is light—Rembrandt's light, which transfigures the commonest scenes and objects. In one of his etchings—for he treated this subject again and again—he goes a step farther and represents a moment which none but himself could have conceived. Here the astonishment of the disciples, the sense of something supernatural, extends to the spectator—for the Lord is gone! The bread he broke, the chair he occupied, betoken his presence, though he is no longer apparent to our holden eyes. This subject, the unseen Christ a guest at some humble meal, has been treated often in modern art, especially by the Dutch and German painters. Perhaps the most famous picture of this kind in America is Dagnan-Bouveret's painting in Carnegie Institute, Pittsburg.

Other incidents connected with the resurrection story, such as the unbelief of Thomas, the appearance at the Lake of Galilee and the charge to Peter, have all been treated by the artists of the later Renaissance, but they do not especially appeal to the modern painter. One picture, however, must not be overlooked: Peter and John running toward the sepulcher after Mary Magdalene had told them, "They have taken away the Lord out of the sepulcher, and we know not where they have laid him." The artist Durand has wonderfully expressed eager, anxious love in the face of John, and fearful amazement in the face of him whose furrowed brow speaks of the sorrow which followed the shameful denial of his Master. To him who knows the resurrection story, it is a true Easter picture, suggesting the great truth that joy is born of sorrow, even as life is born of death. It also shows us that modern art, in its representations of the resurrection, has come back to the simple, reverent treatment which obtained in the primitive church, where men were content to leave the inexplicable unexplained, and suggest what they could not depict.

THE CROSS THAT DISAPPEARED

BY ARTHUR H. HOWLAND

ALAN BLISS had come down from the village to Smith's Woods. Yesterday the sights and fragrances about him would have filled body and mind and soul with keenest delight. The trees had taken on the gray-green, delicate draperies made of their myriad little leaves, which had last week been buds of brown and pink. Enough of the pink remained to shade the light green mists with a faint rose flush. Here and there a yellow branch, or a cluster of yellow young leaves, touched green and pink with soft hints of gold. Along the path at his feet violets sparkled and brave groups of anemone raised their laughing faces. Birds shot everywhere, with shrill sweet tones of gladness. But he neither saw nor heard. With head bent down, he loitered, seeing only the narrow strip of grassless earth that made the path upon which he walked.

Sorrow had overwhelmed him in one short, sleepless night. He had gone out after supper the evening before to conduct the Good Friday service in the village church of which he was pastor. On the way he had stopped as usual at the home of the radiant young friend who had promised, some months ago, to become his wife. They had walked, somewhat gravely, to the church, and had come out into the night again, with hearts moved to earnest and holy thoughts.

In her home once more the matter had arisen for discussion which had brought down in chaos upon him all the joy and hope of life. Ruth had refused to go with him to the foreign field, to which he knew he had been called. She had understood, when giving her promise, that he was a "student volunteer," only accepting his country pastorate till the final arrangements could be made for the appointment to his work in China.

But matters had changed since then. Her father had failed in business and in health. She was the oldest child and must help with the home burdens. Her mother's health was delicate, and the thought of leaving them both to go to the most distant spot on earth was altogether intolerable. She could not go. The old proverb "Duties never conflict" must be true. Her duty was at home. If Alan could reconsider his pledge she would marry him and remain in America, in some nearby city or town, where she could see her parents frequently and help, by money and labor as well as by sympathy, with the home burdens. But if he must go to China he must go alone.

"I will not go alone," Alan had cried. "Ruth, you must go with me. You are forgetting—everything."

"I am not forgetting, Alan. I am trying to remember. I am remembering how our dying Master cared for his mother. I am remembering what father and mother have done for me. I am remembering that present duties must be done before future duties are taken up. It breaks my heart—but that is no matter. Good Friday is the right time to make a decision like that. You will stand it, I know, because you are brave and strong.

"Of course," she went on, "if there is any possibility of your being mistaken about the call to China, that would make everything all right. But I would not have you give it up unless you are sure. We must both be true to the Master who died for us and has called us to follow him."

The blow upon mind and heart was so swift and heavy that Alan could not speak. Nor could he think. He felt himself choking, and rose to his feet. The only thing that could steady his reeling head was the picture of the Cross, about which he had been speaking at the church. With tearless eyes and white cheeks he bade her good-night and went out.

They had not parted in anger. Ruth knew what he must do, what he would do. He would solve his problem and win his victory upon his knees, under the shadow of that cross.

But the sun had risen before victory came to the heart of Alan Bliss. Yet it was a joyless victory. He had, in his thought, followed the Saviour from the cross to the tomb. The sharp agony of the cross had ended, but the darkness of the grave engulfed his spirit. He could not realize that to-morrow was Easter day. What sort of gladness could it bring, he wondered, to a man with a broken heart?

Of course he would go to China. He could not do otherwise. Of course Ruth would stay home. How he could live without her, how he could think and work without her he could not understand. Only one thing, in all the dark perplexity, was clear. He must be true to the Saviour who had died for him and called him to be his disciple and his herald.

"Though he slay me, yet will I trust him," he groaned.

Then he lifted his head and saw that the sun was shining. He must go to see Ruth as soon as possible, but before doing so he would take a breath of the April morning.

He took a dip in his cold tub, dressed again, and made his way through the village to the woods. Now the sweet sights and sounds of the waking day and the waking earth were all about him, but he walked on, blind and deaf. In some vague fashion he believed that peace would come to him again, but joy, never. That had been left forever at that cross, where he had laid life's richest treasure aside, that he might truly follow the crucified Christ.

Then—he saw Ruth, standing before him in the path. Her eyes, too, were strained and grief-stricken; dark rings beneath them told him that her night, like his, had been sleepless; the color had fled from her cheeks. Her brown hair was in disorder. Yet a shaft of golden light from the sun, resting upon her haggard face, revealed and intensified its fine beauty. She stretched out her hands toward him.

"Alan, what have I done?"

He took her in his arms.

"Never mind, little girl," he answered. "It will come out all right. I don't know how, but it is bound to. I mustn't complain. Other men have had to do what I must do. And, as you said last night, this is a good time to be making sacrifices. But—"

He held her out at arm's length and looked down into her brave, pitiful eyes.

"You are very tired, Alan. I know you didn't sleep, and I know you haven't had any breakfast. Come home with me, and let me make you eat something."

"You little rogue," he smiled down at her. "As if you could keep me from knowing that you didn't sleep, either, and that you have had no breakfast. But shall we not stay here and talk awhile, Ruth? There is much to say, much to be settled."

Then the woman in her rose, and began to set them both on the right way. She reached up and stroked his forehead.

"No," she insisted. "Let's go home. We can't talk without thinking, and I know you are too tired to think. You must have some breakfast. Then you shall sleep two hours in the hammock on our porch. And then we shall see what we shall see."

Already the bird songs were beginning to be audible to the deadened brain of Alan Bliss. Already he was beginning to be conscious of fragrance in the air. Already he had begun to see the lacy lattices of gray-green branches, touched with pinks and yellows. He lifted his head. After all, the sun had not gone out. Yet the ending he could not see. He knew she would not yield; he knew he must not.

He let her lead him along the forest path to her home, nestling under the budding trees of the village street. Her mother met them at the door.

"So that's why you ran away without breakfast, was it, Ruth? You wanted a playmate to eat it with. And, Alan, I must have known you were coming, for we have waffles and honey. Hurry in now, both of you."

What restfulness, what beauty, what joy and love were here! China seemed very far away, and its people, for a moment, very unlovely. The gray look came back to his lips, the look of pain to his eyes. He raised his hand with a bewildered gesture toward his forehead. But Ruth caught his hand and led him, almost running, into the dining-room. "I tell you you are to do no more thinking, Alan, till after breakfast."

In the dining-room the cheer and comfort were still more pronounced. Ruth's father and her brothers and sisters greeted them gleefully. "You two are losing precious time," her father said. Both bowed their heads for a silent grace. Upon Alan's mind there flashed the picture of a lake beach in early morning, upon which stood the figure of a Man, preparing breakfast for some friends of his who toiled off shore. They came in to him, one by one, greeting him gladly. He asked them to eat what he had prepared, and afterward, of one of them kneeling on the ground beside him, he asked an eager question:

"Lovest thou me more than these?"

And when the answer had been given he urged: "Feed my sheep."

Alan was amazed to find that his trouble was passing. He could not figure out where it had gone. He had no notion how his problem was to be solved. He only knew that joy and hope were stealing back to his heart.

Ruth and her mother set away the dishes, then came back to join the men sitting still in the sunny dining-room. The children had stolen away.

"Now, Alan," the mother began, "Ruth hasn't said a word, but I know what has happened. At least I know what has caused all the trouble. And if you'll let me I'll solve the riddle for you. Shall I?"

Alan flung out his hand to her. "Oh, mother to be, if you only would!" He glanced at Ruth. Hope was shining in her face, too, but there was a strange look of apprehension there as well. She feared she knew what her mother was going to say. Should she let her say it?

"In the first place," that mother was beginning in her wonderful voice, "there is one thing we must all agree about. We are going to follow Jesus absolutely, aren't we? No matter how much it costs nor where the path leads."

They all nodded, Ruth most tardily, for she thought she knew already where the heaviest sacrifice was to fall.

"Alan must be willing to give up China," mother's soft voice was saying, "if he finds he was mistaken about his duty there, or he must give up Ruth and go alone, if he was mistaken in thinking she would go with him."

His heart grew heavy again, but there was a strange strength stealing into him and holding him up. He saw himself, sailing alone for that unknown land to do its unknown people good, and though hot tears started he bowed his head in assent. A Saviour who had died but risen again would go with him.

"And Ruth," her mother went on, "if she has made a mistake in choosing Alan, must give him up if he cannot stay here and she must. Or she must give up father and me, and go with him there, if that is what Christ wants."

There was a long silence then. Ruth's hands were covering her eyes and tears slipped down between her fingers.

"But what are father and I to give up?" the mother asked radiantly. "Can't we have any part in these brave sacrifices for Jesus' sake?"

Her husband looked up brightly, and nodded emphatically, though he could not trust himself to speak.

"And anyway, Ruth, you have underestimated papa's strength." She looked at him proudly, while he straightened his shoulders and gazed confidently back at her. "The doctor told me last night, while you were at church, that he is really getting better. And let's see, father: how many years is it before we are sixty? Nine more years. Think of that, Ruth. Why, father and I are young.

"Besides, I think you were forgetting that Jamie writes he is having his salary raised again and can help us more next year. And Fred is coming on, and is pretty largely helping himself through school. And I am strong, though it seems hard to convince you of that, Ruth. But, best of all, father is getting well.

"And yet—and yet"—she leaned toward them—"do you know, Ruth and Alan, that if father were not getting well, and if I were not strong, and if Jamie could not help us, and Fred could not help himself, do you know what I should say? And father agrees with me. We were talking it all over last night when we knew our little Ruth could not sleep for the hurt in her heart. This is what we would say, not for Ruth's sake chiefly, but for Jesus' sake: 'Go to China, and help that new nation to find its way to him.'

"That would be hard, perhaps. But this is not really hard. It is not hard because we are both so sure it is right. God is leading us all. And he does not make mistakes. He wants you in China, Alan. He wants you there alongside of Alan, Ruth. And he wants father and me, alongside each other here, with the children. Isn't that all true, father?"

There was youth and power in the man's face as he answered warmly: "Yes."

Through its maze of joy Alan's mind flew back to his study desk, where lay the pages of his almost finished Easter sermon. What glorious work it would be to finish it now!

The cross? Yes, the Cross of Calvary stood unchanged, with all its heart-breaking significance. But the cross he was to have borne—that had disappeared—lifted from his obedient heart by the kind hands of the risen Christ.

A WEEK IN THE WORLD'S NEWS

English Sermons in Synagogues

THE substitution of English for Yiddish sermons in all Jewish synagogues was advocated by Professor Solomon Schechter, president of the Jewish Theological Seminary, at the annual convention of the United Synagogues, March 22. Hebrew would be retained as the language of prayer. It was explained that the proposal was in the direction of a drawing together of conservative and orthodox congregations. The establishment of Jewish religious schools with the Hebrew language and literature a chief study was also urged. Dr. Schechter declined re-election on the score of age, and Dr. Cyrus Adler, president of Dropsie (Hebrew) College, Philadelphia, was elected in his place.

Fight Begins on Toll Repeal

FILIBUSTERING on the part of opponents marked the opening of the debate on the Panama Canal repeal resolution in the House, March 26. The preliminary battle concerned the proposed rule to limit the debate. Visitors' galleries were packed and the floor of the House crowded. The passage of the bill is confidently expected, but only after a strenuous fight by its enemies. A resolution was introduced in the Senate offering a compromise to avoid relinquishing the right to discriminate in fixing tolls.

Racial Differences in Senate

THE Senate Committee on Judiciary have at last ordered a favorable report on the reappointment nomination of Robert H. Terrel, a negro, as judge of the Municipal Court for the District of Columbia. The nomination has been hotly opposed by Senators Vardaman of Mississippi and Hoke Smith of Georgia, who still are hostile to it, although it has the endorsement of the full committee.

Politics Trouble Japan

JAPAN is having parliamentary trouble. The development of a serious navy scandal and consequent failure of the navy budget caused the cabinet to resign March 24. The radical element is seeking to turn the situation to the advantage of constitutional government as opposed to bureaucracy. The emperor summoned the elder statesmen to a conference before designating who should form the new cabinet.

Progress on the Canal

SECRETARY of the Navy Daniels has proposed a line of naval cruisers for passenger, freight and mail service to South American ports by way of the Panama Canal, and to be discontinued should private capital enter the field. In the news concerning the Canal appears an account of the lighting system which will make the waterway as navigable its entire length at night as by day. This includes markings of the channel as well as the illumination of entrances and locks.

Battleship "Oklahoma" Launched

THE new superdreadnought of the United States Navy, and, until the Pennsylvania shall be completed, the greatest, was launched at Camden, N. J., on March 23, and christened Oklahoma by Miss Lorana Jane Cruce, the 19-year-old daughter of the governor of that State. Many Oklahomans were in the crowd that witnessed the ceremony. Secretary Daniels of the Navy was led to speak of the launching as a "typification of the national Christian spirit," by the circumstance of an invocation being offered before the ship was named, at the source of which Bishop E. E. Hess of Oklahoma dedicated the battleship to the "errands of peace and Christianity." Miss Cruce was surrounded by fifteen other charming girls carrying quantities of American Beauty roses, the State flower. Although Oklahoma is a prohibitionist State and the governor received an avalanche of letters asking that mineral water be used in christening the ship, the customary champagne was used out of deference to the superstition of sailors. The new warship's length is 583 feet, her displacement will be 27,000 tons, which is 500 tons above that of the largest American battleship now afloat, and in other respects the Oklahoma will be ahead of all others. She will carry 10 fourteen-inch guns, 21 five-inch guns, and many smaller guns. She will use oil for fuel. The State of Oklahoma presented a beautiful silver service to her namesake.

Revival of Blood Ritual Charges

ACCOUNTS of alleged Jewish ritual crimes are again appearing in Russian newspapers, according to the press, as the Jewish Passover season approaches. From the province of Kiev—of unsavory Beiliss memories—comes the story that Jews caused a Christian boy named Zamorev to sniff in a bakery making unleavened bread, in return for food, so that blood from the wounds would be mixed with the bread. Other stories from other points also indicate an attempt to establish the fact of the use of Christian blood by Jews in their religious rites.

New State Department Counselor

THE successor of John Bassett Moore as counselor of the State Department is to be Robert Lansing of Watertown, N. Y., nominated by President Wilson March 20, and favorably reported on by the Senate Committee on Foreign Relations March 25. Mr. Lansing has not been prominent in politics and is regarded as a Republican. He stands high in his profession, is versed in international law and has several times rendered valuable service for the government. He is at present on the commission occupied with unsettled claims between the United States and Great Britain, mentioned in THE CHRISTIAN HERALD of last week. Mr. Lansing is under fifty years old, is a son-in-law of John W. Foster, who was Secretary of State in President Harrison's cabinet, and is an intimate friend of the former counselor, Mr. Moore.

Fire Drills Commemorate Tragedy

TO mark the third anniversary, March 25, of the Triangle factory fire in which 147 lives were lost, fire drills were held throughout New York City in schools and factories by request of Fire Commissioner Adamson. Mayor Mitchel and other officials witnessed some of these drills. Although no punishment was ever inflicted in connection with this horror, and no adequate indemnity secured by the families who suffered, the lesson taught by the locked doors in the burned building is kept fresh from year to year as the fatal day comes round.

New Haven's Affairs Arranged

TO THE great relief of New England business interests and homes the New York, New Haven and Hartford Railroad and the Federal Government have reached an agreement by which subsidiary lines composing the New Haven's huge system will become independent units. The plan had previously been approved by President Wilson and Attorney-General McReynolds. The railroad holdings in these various transportation lines are to be sold by 1919, and it is felt that New England will at once feel the benefit of the amicable straightening out of this serious situation.

No National Control of Radium Lands

IT is stated in the press of March 23 that the government project initiated by Secretary Lane of the Interior Department to control radium-bearing ore lands is likely to be abandoned because practically all such lands have been taken up by prospectors during the delay by Congress in acting on the Administration Radium Bill introduced on February 7, and reported out of committee with amendment on March 16. The value of radium in the treatment of cancer is still a matter to be determined. It is said that the American hospitals are unable to purchase in Europe radium even at $150,000 per gram.

Troops Quell Strikers

STATE troops to the number of 1,200 are on strike duty at Depew, a village twelve miles from Buffalo, in New York State. Fatal riots preceded the calling out of the troops when a train bearing 800 workmen to the Gould Coupler Company plant to take the place of strikers was attacked by a mob. The foreign strikers were arming, according to reports, and militiamen patrolled the streets with bayonets fixed. Seventeen saloons near the plant were ordered closed and it is feared that the disorder may become more serious.

Garfield Bank Uninjured

THE great hole dug in the Twenty-third Street and Fifth Avenue crossing in New York by explosion on March 8 has been an object of curious attention to thousands during the course of repairs. The unusual character of this accident led reporters to magnify the damage done. The Garfield National Bank near by was said to have had its safety vaults flooded. The utmost damage sustained by the bank was the breaking of one or two windows. The flooding of its vaults is practically an impossibility.

WHAT IT MEANS TO FOLLOW JESUS*

SUNDAY SCHOOL LESSON BY DR. AND MRS. WILBUR F. CRAFTS

IT WAS generally a hungry crowd that followed Jesus; sometimes hungry for food, but usually hungry for benefits of some sort. They all recognized something unusual in his presence, and some of those who were Jews had great heart hopes that he might indeed be the promised Messiah. We read that many who followed Jesus in the crowd, or sat by the wayside as he passed, were blessed by him. The woman who had been sick for twelve years; the two blind men, when he was on his way to the house of Jairus; Bartimeus and another blind man who stopped Jesus on his way from Jericho.

Hating Father and Mother (Luke 14: 26)

What! Must one have his heart full of hate in order to be a follower of the Lord Jesus? Surely Jesus could not have meant "hate" as we know it, which is a malignant feeling that may bring about murder. Wise men who have pondered well this passage tell us that Matt. 10: 37 expresses the true meaning of Jesus' words: "Loveth father or mother more than me." And they advise us that "our Saviour's meaning is to be extended no further than to a readiness and willingness, whenever God shall call us to it, to quit all our temporal interests and enjoyments, and even life itself, the dearest of all other things to us, and to submit to any temporal inconvenience and suffering for his sake." The apostle Paul, when he was warned that bonds and afflictions awaited him in Jerusalem, did not hesitate to press on, but said: "None of these things move me, neither count I my life dear unto myself." (Acts 20: 24.) We find many instances like this, as we hear or read the stories of missionaries who have gone forth into the dark places of the earth to testify to the Gospel of the grace of God. They do not "hate," but they just let go.

Bearing the Cross (Luke 14: 27)

Take two sticks, one a little shorter than the other. You cannot make a cross out of them, unless you lay one over against the other. Neither can you make a cross in your life unless you set up your will against God's will. When we have learned to love the things which God loves, and to hate the things which he hates, there can be no cross in our lives. But Jesus knew full well that it is in human hearts to do their own pleasure, have their own way, and it is not until we are born again that we would rather do God's way than our way. So self-willed are we that in all probability at least the shadow of the cross will appear in our lives until the end. Blessed shall we be if it is only the shadow and not the bitter cross of disappointment and defeated aspirations. Tissot, the great painter, won his fame in painting the portraits of noble and beautiful women, principally in France, but through the love of God shed abroad in his heart, there was developed in him a determination to paint the life of the Lord Jesus so that all the world might learn to know him and love him. So Tissot left his beautiful and elegant home and surroundings and gay scenes in Paris, and went to Palestine, rocky and barren, inhabited mostly by Arabs and degenerates, and he lived there many years, riding about on horseback, sketching the places where Jesus walked and taught and suffered, by the Sea of Galilee, on Mount Olivet, on Hattin, Gethsemane, Golgotha, and into these sketches he put the figure of Christ, sometimes alone, and sometimes with his apostles and others of his followers. Tissot followed his Christ to Palestine, but he found joy in the isolation that would otherwise have been a great cross to him. "He that loseth his life for my sake shall find it." (Matt. 10: 39.) It may be realized in every life whether the affairs in that life are large or small. In fact, it is the only way to keep sweet in the environment where we find ourselves, either in private or in public life. Let us aim, then, to make our life Christ-centered.

Counting the Cost (Luke 14: 28)

"Making over lost souls for $2.60 apiece. A wonderful work begun by four hobos." This is the heading we saw in The World's Work, more than a year ago. It was the story of four men who had floated about the country for years, knowing no home, no friends. Each one bore the unmistakable mark of the "hobo," and each had come to the city in the hobos' common carrier, the freight train, or had ridden "blind baggage" between the mail cars of the "limited." One was a college man and had been raised in a Christian home, the second belonged to an old and proud Virginia family, the third had been a civil engineer, and had fallen through drink, the fourth had been born and brought up in the vicious district of a great city. From time to time these men drifted into a little mission. They called what they heard there "the new cure." They became converted and then set about doing something for their friends of the underworld. They formed what they called the "Inasmuch Association," the platform of which they drew up as follows:

> We, with all humility, being four men who have been to the very gates of hell, and who only through the gracious love and saving power of our Lord and Master Jesus Christ, have been redeemed, herewith, this 1st day of February, 1911, consecrate our lives to him and his work. Our object and endeavor shall be, by the love, grace and power of God, through his Son Jesus Christ, to redeem the fallen, giving aid, help, comfort, strength and sympathy, both material and spiritual, to the needy, and to do his blessed will, as he reveals it to us at all times and at all places, to hasten the coming of his kingdom.

And what has been the outcome? On March 24, 1913, the Inasmuch Mission celebrated its second birthday. Conversions were reported, believed to be sincere, to the number of 1,453. Dividing the amount of expenditures, $3,871.63, it was computed that the average cost to set a man on the road to better things is exactly $2.66. In the first year 28,040 men and women attended the nightly services; 11,173 lodgings and 32,162 meals were furnished and 84 children were enrolled in the Sunday school. Through a gradual change in the sentiment of the neighborhood, and with the hearty co-operation of the city administration of Philadelphia, forty-five disorderly houses were closed.

The "platform" is recommended to all "respectable sinners" as well. Quite another estimate may have to be made of what it costs to save a lost soul. It may not be computed in dollars and cents, but in so-called "privileges and pleasures." Can I give up these harmful or questionable things for the sake of the Lord Jesus? Many young persons and older ones, too, have sat down with this question, and deliberately answered "No." What a small measure they took to calculate life with! Set beside it the measure which Christ gives, the hundredfold of blessing which shall be received even in this world, to say nothing of the world beyond. (Mark 10: 29.) Believe it, Jesus Christ is the only source of happiness, and youth is the time in which to learn this lesson. In older age it can only be learned with bitterness mixed with regret.

Salt Without Savor (Luke 14: 34)

In our land we are not accustomed to see salt spoil, but it was different in Palestine when Jesus spoke these words. Dr. Thompson in The Land and the Book, Vol. 2, pages 43, 44, says:

> I have often seen just such salt, and the identical disposition made of it that our Lord has mentioned. A merchant of Sidon, having farmed of the government the revenue from the importation of salt, brought over an immense quantity from the swamps of Cyprus, enough in fact to supply the whole province for at least twenty years. Sixty-five houses in June—Lady Stanhope's village—were rented and filled with salt. These houses have merely earthen floors, and the salt next to the ground, in a few years, entirely spoiled. I saw large quantities of it literally thrown into the street to be trodden under foot of men and beasts. (Matt. 5: 13.)

A good person gone wrong—this is the salt without savor. What a calamity for men and women to lose the savor of Christianity out of their lives, a calamity for themselves and for the whole world looking on! Can they never get it back again? The commentators tell us, "The question is not if a man lose his grace, how shall that grace be restored to him, but since Christianity is the salt of the earth, if men lose that, what else can supply its place? As to individuals, God says: "I will heal their backsliding. I will love them freely." (Hosea 14: 4.) The history of the Israelites in their wanderings and in captivity is filled with evidence that God can and does heal backsliders. Let us hold out this hope to those who have fallen under the leash of Satan. Let us do all we can to help them.

* THE INTERNATIONAL SUNDAY SCHOOL LESSON for Sunday, April 19, 1914. The Cost of Discipleship. Luke 14: 25-35. GOLDEN TEXT: "Whosoever would save his life shall lose it; and whosoever shall lose his life for my sake shall find it." Matt. 16: 25, R. V.

ON EASTER MORNING

BY EBEN E. REXFORD

WHAT tidings of reverent gladness are voiced by the bells that ring
A summons to men to gather to-day in the courts of the King!
"He is risen!" O glorious message! "He lives, who once was dead!"
And hearts that were heavy with sorrow hear and are comforted.

We come to our dear Lord's altar. What brightness greets us there!
The gloom of the winter has vanished, and beauty is everywhere.
From the censer-cups of the lilies rise scents of myrrh and balm,
And the soul, like a lark, soars upward winged with the Easter psalm.

O beautiful, beautiful lilies, what truths you typify!
You seemed to die in the autumn, and yet you did not die.
And on this Easter morning while joyful voices sing
You repeat to all the lesson of the miracle of spring.

"Alleluia," the choir is chanting with joyous, jubilant voice.
"The Lord is risen, is risen! Rejoice, rejoice, rejoice!"
From the tomb in which men laid him the stone is rolled away,
And lo! the Christ they sing of is here in our midst to-day.

No-Rim-Cut Tire
With All-Weather Tread

Costly Tires

With Four Exclusive Features
They Cost You Less Than Most Others

During 1913, the prices on Goodyear No-Rim-Cut tires dropped 28 per cent. Now numerous tires sell higher, and the question comes: Are they better tires?

The Facts

In several ways No-Rim-Cut tires are the costliest tires that are built. So costly that, in days of smaller output, their price was one-fifth higher than other standard tires.

They are the only tires which are final-cured on air bags, to save the countless blow-outs due to wrinkled fabric. This one extra process—used by no one else—adds to our tire cost $1,500 daily.

They are the only tires in which hundreds of large rubber rivets are formed to combat tread separation.

They are the only satisfactory tires made so they can't be rim-cut. They are the only tires which carry our double-thick All-Weather tread.

GOODYEAR
AKRON, OHIO

Mileage Limit

No-Rim-Cut tires, on the average, give the limit of possible mileage. We say this after years of research and experiment, which have cost us $100,000 per year.

We say it because Goodyear tires have come to outsell any other. And they did it when most cars came equipped with odometers, on which men compared tire mileage.

No; there are no better tires. It is easy to build tires worth less than Goodyears, but none can build tires worth more.

We save by mammoth output, by efficiency and by modest profits. Our profit last year averaged 6½ per cent. Those are the reasons for present Goodyear prices.

Questions and Answers

Mrs. L. W., Quarryville, S. C.; Mrs. D. G., Holyoke, Colo., and Mrs. M. G., Pasadena, Cal., have written to the Prayer League to commend prayer for relief from spiritual darkness. The spirit of the Associated Prayer Leagues is in unison with these views and we commend your thought to the attention of our readers. We have had occasion in the Mail-Bag that [illegible] to pray [illegible] in Christ. Spiritual darkness arises because [illegible] in some way or other we are shutting Him. We are often surprised to find that something else is necessary to be done before we begin to trust Him, some question to be made, some duty to perform, some pursuit to be given up. But these things come after faith, not before it. Of course if your sin has been committed this wrong must be righted before we can believe that Christ fully forgives us. But where no such specific wrong has been done and no clear duty is revealed, the only requirement is to trust in Christ. You will be tempted to faithlessness from the advice because you have heard it so often; but any other answer would be false. Christ died for the ungodly. Here is our only place of peace and joy. Were you sure that he died for you, that he died to make possible the forgiveness of your sins and the cleansing of your heart, when you believe that because he died your sins are forgiven and your heart is cleansed, you will have peace and you will find the Saviour near you, with the light and comfort and power. After all, it is no wonder that we feel sad when we are doubting Him. You would feel sad if you were doubting your friend, your brother, your parent. And remember that he, too, is saddened by your doubt. Read again some of the rich promises of God's Word, and refuse any longer to doubt that they were written to you as well as to any other of his children: Isa. 55: 1; Ezek. 36: 25-27; Matt. 5: 8, 16; Matt. 7: 7-11; Luke 9: 48, 50; John 8: 36; Acts 13: 39-41; 26: 18; Rom. 6; Rom. 8; II Cor. 5: 17; Gal. 2: 20; Eph. 2: 13-22; Col. 2; I Thess. 4: 3; Heb. 4: 9-11; 10: 19-22; 11: 1-6; 12: 1, 2; Rev. 21: 1-4; 22: 17; I John 1: 7; 2: 1; 3: 1-10, 22; I John 5: 1-4; John 20: 31.

THE YOUNG PEOPLE'S MEETINGS

NOTES ON THE CHRISTIAN ENDEAVOR, EPWORTH LEAGUE AND BAPTIST YOUNG PEOPLE'S UNION TOPICS

Our Minutes for God*

WE often hear people, young and old, complaining that they are not rich. We ourselves have probably all ıdulged, now and then, in this comlaint. We like to dream of the ıings we would do if we had lots of ıoney.

But there is something we all have lenty of. And if we used it rightly nd wisely, we might gain riches, or lmost anything else we chose to seek. : is something without which money r talent or any great possession is alueless. So, in a sense, it is more aluable than any of these things. 'et we waste it, and throw it away, s if it were the least important, inead of the most important of our ossessions. It is, of course—Time.

Now, just as God has something to ay about how we spend our money, 'e has, of course, something to say bout how we spend our time. In the ld dispensation he asserted his right) a man's property by demanding one enth of his possessions and increase) be used in worship. And he has sserted his right to our time by the reat law of the Sabbath, that one ay out of every seven should be, in a eculiar sense, his. All our time, as ell as all our money, belongs to him. low shall we spend it? Our lesson as this twofold significance: a study f the Sabbath, and a study of the hole problem of our use of time.

As to the Sabbath, the most wonderıl bit of Bible teaching on that subect is found in the first part of the ourth chapter of Hebrews. The Sabath is there described as that heart est into which Jesus leads his eople. (The name "Jesus" in verse should of course be Joshua, as it is ı the Revised Version.) Joshua led ne Israelites into the rest of Canaan; esus leads his people into the rest f complete obedience to God and perect trust in him. God worked six ays, and rested. The work being finished from the foundation of the 'orld," we are to "enter into his est." And while we are to go on rying to serve and labor, we are to do) in the restful strength of God, not ı the painful struggles of our own lanning and effort. Our hearts are) rest in the assurance of his love, is protection, his help.

Since this is to be the atmosphere f all our days, how much more may be the atmosphere of the special ay set apart for the worship of ehovah and for the forwarding of is spiritual kingdom! It is not only spiritual law, but a physical and ıental, that one day out of seven be iven to rest, or a wholesome change f occupation. Machinery cannot be un constantly without rest; animals annot be used every day without a hance to recuperate. So man's body nd brain need a break, a change, that vill give them a chance to be revitalzed before the week's routine is taken p again.

The songs, the prayers, the serıons, the Bible study, the Gospel hought and labor of Sunday, should est and strengthen soul and mind nd body for the tasks of the week. n the quiet and relaxation of Sunday ve are enabled to be more definitely onscious of God's presence and his lessing, and this experience will nake it easier to realize his nearness luring the rush and storm of the vork-days ahead.

But all our seven days of the week, ll our waking hours of every day, hould be given whole-heartedly to God. Every moment is a golden gift rom his hand. History is full of illustrations of the amazing things that have been done by people who formed the habit of using their time carefully. A half hour a day to the study of some language or other subject; a half hour to the mastering of some craft—we can do almost anything if we take care of the minutes and use them where they will accomplish most.

We waste time in gossip, in meeting social obligations that are not worth meeting, in seeking things that are not worth seeking, in pleasures that deplete and destroy our strength instead of building it up, that influence others to ways of folly and sin instead of wisdom and goodness. We do not learn to guard our minutes as we guard our dollars, making them tell for our best development, our best usefulness, our richest gain. There must be time, of course, for laughter and play, for song and recreation, but in the Christian life no time can be given to anything upon which there cannot rest the smile of God.

Use the minutes as followers of Christ are under obligation to use them. God gives them to us, laden with love and blessing and opportunities. Let us give them back to him laden with love and praise and gladness and service. A life so lived will be truly rich, and will lead to an eternity of gladness, of reward, and of opportunities for further service and further gain.

Brave Work at Soul-Winning*

SURELY if circumstances could be an excuse for despondency, Paul and Silas might have been excused. Their backs were sore with "many stripes;" their feet were fast in the stocks; they were in the "inner prison." Yet even there, away from home and friends, in failure, disgrace and pain, in the midnight darkness of that inner prison, they sang praises to God.

Their message to the Philippian jailer, when he came running in, was the simple, quick, all-including message: "Believe on the Lord Jesus Christ and thou shalt be saved." There was no time for any long, deep explanations of religious facts and mysteries. The jailer needed immediate help, and he found it in this brief message. The prayers and praises of the moment before put the apostles' minds into the right condition for giving their instant and efficient help. So prayer and praise will make us ready to help those we meet. Christians of little praise, as well as Christians of little prayer, are worth little as soul-winners.

The last references give us pictures of Paul as a prisoner at Rome. He was chained to a Roman soldier, even during the two years he spent in a private dwelling. This guard was changed at intervals, so in the course of the two years Paul had a chance to speak to many Roman soldiers about Christ. It is probable that two soldiers guarded him by night. We may be sure that to all these soldiers Paul spoke about Christ and his great salvation. Tradition says that the Gospel was first preached in Great Britain by Roman soldiers, and it is not unlikely that they had been among those won to Christ by Paul's faithful work as a soul-winner. Notice how he thanks God, in Phil. 1: 12-14, for the opportunities his imprisonment gave him to preach Christ.

A SPRINGTIME FANCY

BY MARGARET E. SANGSTER, JR.

EASTER time lay over the land—a time of radiance and music, of birds and flowers. Hearts beat happily in tune to the joy of an awakening spring, and the golden lily-hearts were reflected in every smile.

It was Easter time, the time of youth and brightness and resurrection—hardly the time for Weariness to visit the girl; but with head bent toward her he was leaning over her chair, talking softly, persuasively in her ear.

"You're tired," he told her as his old feet (for Weariness is as old as the world itself) beat a tattoo on the worn floor. "You're bored, you want something new."

"I'm tired," murmured the girl gazing dreamily into space—for she did not see Weariness standing before her—"I'm bored. I want something different from this work-a-day world."

Weariness sat down in the chair and prepared for a comfortable chat. He had made a good beginning and he meant to improve his time.

"You dislike everybody, even the strangers on the street," he prompted with a thin-lipped, disagreeable smile.

"I dislike everybody that I know," said the girl with a defiant stamp of her foot. "I dislike everybody with not one exception."

"You're doing well," he commented with a chuckle. "I'm proud of you, girl! You're tired—you're bored. You dislike everybody with no exception. Perhaps nobody likes you."

"Nobody loves me," echoed the girl; "not a soul. If I were starving nobody would help me! If I were freezing nobody would help me."

"Unpopular girl," said Weariness happily, looking across the room at the bright hair and pretty features of his companion. "To look at you no one would imagine it. Your eyes are blue and your hair isn't gray—it's young hair. Isn't it sad that your life should be so tragic?"

"It is sad." Again the girl stamped her foot. "It's more than sad; it's terrible. I guess you'd think so too, if you were me." And she started to cry, head on folded arms, shoulders shaking convulsively. "I'm tired," she sobbed.

Outside the sun glowed over a world of flowers and springtime. Inside, the same sun, grown dusty, fell on the crying girl and the cynical, world-old figure seated before her.

The door opened softly and a breath of air—cool, bracing air—stole in. The girl, head in arm, did not notice it. But Weariness raised his eyes to the opening door and sniffed at the freshness of the breeze. And as he gazed a figure came in with brisk, quick step—the figure of a young man, lithe, and handsome, and smiling. A white fillet bound his crisp black hair to his head, and a pair of white-winged sandals clung to his feet.

Weariness raised himself from his chair and gazed at the newcomer. Then he turned his eyes away and yawned.

"You're not wanted here," he said, "young man. She's discouraged, and tired, and bored. She doesn't want you."

"She does want me," said the boyish one, "but she doesn't realize it. I am the Spirit of Happiness and Sunshine and Love. Every young person needs me, whether they know it or not. Of course she wants me."

Weariness yawned again and brushed his hand carelessly over his eyes.

"Who are you?" he asked crossly.

The young man drew himself up proudly, and stood before the bent form with the radiance of sunlight shining out of his eyes.

An intensely interesting serial story dealing with frontier life in America will begin in The Christian Herald on April 15. It is called "A Little Angel of the Mountains," and is by Cyrus Townsend Brady.

$1500.00 In One Month By This Man

That's what Mr. Eakins made—paid his last $10 for rent of a store window—at the end of 30 days had $1,500 in the bank—today he is independent. A Crispette machine and Crispettes did it.

Mr. Perrin, Cal., took in $380 in one day—every nickel brought him almost 4 cents profit. What are you going to do in the future? Just barely earn a living—keep wishing for "something to turn up?" Don't do it.

LISTEN! Take that money you have saved up against the day of opportunity—invest it in a Long Popcorn Crispette Machine, and make fortune smile on you—build up a big paying business. Think of the fortunes made of 5-cent pieces—street cars, moving picture shows, 5 and 10c stores. Everyone will spend a nickel—everyone likes Crispettes—children, parents, old folks. You don't need any experience—you can start anywhere—in a store window, a small store room where rent is cheap, or the kitchen of your home. The Crispette Machine and Long's secret formula, to the man of limited means, is a gold mine—a sure way to independence and fortune—to make money from the start.

Almost 400% Profit

Every 20 cents invested returns $1.00 cash—not theory, not guesswork, not imagination, but the actual bona fide proven record of profits from Crispette Machines, from Coney Island to Oregon, from Canada to the Argentine Republic.

STOP! You have followed the rut too long—received only what others cared to give. Get on the other side—take only what you want.

F. C. Thompson, Ore., took in $575 in 27 days. E. H. H., Pa., sold over 12,000 rolls in two weeks—just records from letters from Crispette merchants in all parts of the country.

The money barons began with much less advantage than I offer you today. Write NOW for my handsomely illustrated 48-page FREE booklet, "How to Make Money in the Crispette Business," or

Come to See Me at My Expense

It's unnecessary to write that you are coming—just drop in any time. I will pay your traveling expenses within a 300-mile radius if you buy a machine. I will give you reference after reference from responsible merchants, bankers, citizens. Satisfy yourself and then go over the Crispette business with me.

Go Into This Business NOW!

A SPRINGTIME FANCY

"I," he said, "am Youth!" And he turned swiftly and went over to the crying girl and touched her on the shoulder.

"Friend," he told her, "my friend, I am here with you."

The girl raised her face and looked with tear-stained swollen eyes past the radiant figure. (She did not see him but she heard his voice.)

"Who are you?" she whispered. "I did not know that I had a friend."

"You haven't," Weariness snapped from his stand by the chair. "Nobody loves you—you hate everybody."

"I am Youth," answered the young man pleasantly, ignoring the interruption. "And I am not your only friend. The whole world loves you."

The girl was staring past Youth to Weariness—staring with a hopelessness in her eyes.

"He's right," she whispered. "I hate—everybody."

Youth started forward impetuously and laid his hand on her arm.

"You don't—you can't," he protested. "Think of your school chums, think of your church. Do you hate the little laughing babies that play in the sunlight of the park? Do you hate the little lame newsboy with his smile and his crutches? Think of your family—your mother."

The girl wiped her eyes with a fluffy bit of lace handkerchief, and looked down sheepishly. "I forgot them," she murmured. But Youth was talking again.

"You say that nobody loves you?" he asked her. "You dare to say that? How about your Sunday school class, and your pastor, and all of the people that you love? Don't you think that they return your affection?"

The girl was smiling now. A watery, nearly-happy little smile.

"I didn't think," she cried softly. Then her face clouded. "But I'm tired to death. I'm bored," she added.

"Oh," said Youth tenderly, "you're wrong, little girl. Why, you're hardly more than a child yet. Your life has just begun. You aren't tired. I can see a pathway standing before you, clear-cut against the horizon line. I see milestones against that pathway, white, shining milestones. And they and marked 'Happiness' and 'Duty' and 'Achievement' and 'Love.'" Yet you say that you are tired and bored."

The girl started up from her seat, and spoke impulsively, all her tiredness swept away.

"Forgive me," she begged, "for talking so. I didn't mean a word of it. I won't talk that way again. I'm going on—smiling—down my pathway."

Then the Young Man sprang forward and taking her face between his hands he kissed her softly.

"Go," he said, "my friend. Life lies before you, and you have the kiss of Youth on your brow."

Then Weariness slunk away.

Outside the sun threw dancing shadows across the awakening earth. It was Easter time.

The Olive Groves of Spain, the source of Olive Oil, the chief ingredient of Palmolive Soap.

Natural Beauty

OVER two million women use Palmolive Soap in preference to any other.

Because in Palmolive they find two famous natural aids to a fine complexion—Palm and Olive Oils, which as early as thirty centuries ago were used by the world's most beautiful women.

Tenderest skins are kept soft, white and smooth by Palmolive. It soothes as it cleanses—imparting a firmness and texture peculiar alone to Palmolive.

Lathers richly and readily in any water—hot or cold, hard or soft. The delicate green color is due alone to Palm and Olive Oils so scientifically blended in this world-famed soap. The exquisite fragrance is a "breath from the Orient."

Extra milling gives it a hardness that makes it lasting and economical. And it costs but fifteen cents a cake.

Palmolive

Palmolive Shampoo—the Olive Oil Shampoo—makes the hair lustrous and healthy, and is excellent for the scalp. It rinses out easily and leaves the hair soft and tractable. Price 50 cents.

N. B.—If you cannot get Palmolive Cream or Shampoo of your local dealer, a full-size package of either will be mailed prepaid on receipt of price.

Palmolive Cream cleanses the pores of the skin and adds a delightful touch after the use of Palmolive Soap. Price 50 cents.

ANSWERED PRAYERS

LETTERS from Miss L. W., Mrs. D. G. and Mrs. M. G. are answered this week in Our Mail-Bag. Mrs. C. McG. and L. E. T. will find that this answer applies also to their letters.

Acknowledgments

E. S. O. of Sea Cliff, N. Y., writes: "Our Father answered prayer in a special manner on January 30, a few days after a request had been mailed to THE CHRISTIAN HERALD for healing." K. B. McK. writes from Marietta, O.: "I want to thank you and the Bowery Mission for the prayers offered for our church and Bible class. Tell the men their prayers are being answered."

Mrs. J. S. M., Buffalo, N. Y., writes: "I wish to add my testimony to the list of answered prayers. Just two years ago to-day God touched my body with his healing power and graciously brought me back from the brink of the grave after an operation and treatment of various kinds had failed and the maximum limit of my life had been placed at five or six months by physicians and surgeons. Truly what is impossible with man is possible with God." Mrs. S. S. writes from Wichita, Kan.: "I want to acknowledge answer to prayers which at the time seemed almost impossible. The answers have given me a new and trusting faith in God's goodness and understanding."

Requests

Mrs. M. R. D., Calif., requests prayers for her grandson, a young man, 23 years of age, who is threatened with blindness, that his sight be fully restored. A peculiarly touching letter comes from Mrs. M. A. McD., of Chicago. After stating that she is already deaf, she adds: "Now I am threatened with blindness. Pray that I may be saved from it, for life would be so dreary for me with both sight and hearing gone."

Mrs. J. A. B. requests prayers that a revival may take place in Zellville, Ark. Mrs. E. K. of Shelby, Mich., asks prayers for revival services now being held in that place; M. E. and M. M. G., for an outpouring of the Spirit upon revival meetings at Amherst, Va.

THE ROMAN CHURCH IN POLITICS

(Protestant Observer, London, March, 1914.)

THE Church of Rome, we are sometimes solemnly informed, does not meddle in politics; she confines herself exclusively to the spiritual welfare of her children. But those who have made a special study of the Papacy know very well that the Roman Church is the most stupendous political machine the world has ever seen. At present, one of her greatest desires is to regain her temporal power, and as a step in that direction she has recently made elaborate plans in Italy in order to ensure the return of a strong body of men to the Chamber of Deputies, secretly pledged to carry out her commands.

The inner history of this subterranean Vatican plot is exposed by a correspondent in Rome, who reproduces the actual wording of a circular letter sent out from the bishop's palace at Viterbo ordering all Papists, whether they wished or otherwise, to vote for the Vatican's candidate. The document, which is signed by the bishop's vicar-general, Mgr. Giuseppe Farrocchi, says:

Circulars Sent to Priests, Curates and Heads of Electoral Associations

From the Bishop's Palace, Viterbo.

From the letter of Count Gentiloni, president of the Catholic Italian Elec. Union, a copy of which you will find on the opposite page, you will see that the parliamentary candidate to be supported by Catholics in the town of Viterbo, in the absence of a Catholic candidate, is the ex-member of Parliament, Alfriedo Canevari. It is not necessary to tell you that the will of the superior is not to be called in question. To be precise, the duty of all Catholics is to set aside all private interests and sentiments, and to vote en bloc for Canevari. It cannot in any way be tolerated that a Catholic should support any other candidate, nor display even in private any leaning to another. To hold an opinion contrary to the one imposed by the Superior Authorities would be contrary to the spirit of discipline. Parish priests, curates and all heads of Catholic Associations are warned to be vigilant, and to refer to the Superior Ecclesiastical Authority any cases of insubordination.

Vicar General,
(Signed) GIUSEPPE FARROCCHI.
August 7, 1914.

Here we have a typical example of civil liberty as interpreted by the Church of Rome.

Light on Vital Principles

ALLOW me to express to you my own delight, which I know is shared by many of your readers, at finding in this week's number such an able and strong "Protest against Romanism." A generation has grown up around us positively ignorant concerning the un-Biblical teachings of the Roman Catholic Church and even our religious papers are, as a rule, silent on these vital subjects—vital, as you say, to the very life of our republic, founded as it is on the very principles of the great Reformation.

J. V. B.

SECRETARY TAYLOR, of the M. E. Board of Foreign Missions, recently visited Panama. He writes:

"You will be interested to know that a Roman Catholic priest was converted a few months ago in our Panama Mission. Another priest came to my room to have a talk with me. The latter is said to be the leading light, intellectually, of the Romanist clergy on the Isthmus. He is a doctor of theology, and for nineteen years has been professor in the university. He seems to be in a state of great mental unrest, very much dissatisfied with conditions in his church."

Abraham and His Contemporaries

THERE were five Babylonian kings of Ur in Abraham's time, all with two exceptions having brief reigns. Their temple records, written on clay tablets, have come to light, and are regarded as among the greatest "finds" in Bibleland exploration. Every Sunday school teacher, every pastor and Bible student who desires to become the possessor of one of these tablets will find full instructions how to do so by reading the article on the subject in the March 25 CHRISTIAN HERALD.

ECONOMIES IN THE MODEST HOME

BY VIRGINIA EARLE

THIS is not a fable but fact. A certain real estate man built for rental in a popular suburb a half dozen houses, each with its little plot of ground on four sides and each identical in size and style with the others. Within, the rooms were as small as he dared to make them, but the final details of wall coverings and interior finish were left to the taste of the first tenants.

A friendly call upon two of the new occupants three weeks ago afforded such a striking object lesson in the difference between the inexpensive and cheap that it seems not out of place to tell the story here.

In both cases economy had of necessity governed the selection of furnishings for the house, but in the one instance "economy" had meant extreme simplicity and in the other a matter of low price. Let me describe first the house of the latter:

To begin with, a different color scheme in every room gave a sense of confusion; the little green parlor opening directly into the blue dining-room, and one small rose-color bedroom facing a smaller yellow one, produced an unrestful "mixture of ideas" which only served to emphasize the cramped dimensions of the house plan. The obviously cheap quality of wall papers, over-conspicuous in design, made matters still worse.

As all of the "carpet money" had gone into four 9 by 12 rugs of Oriental pattern but strictly American coloring, several bedrooms had to be finished with cheap matting floors. There are, of course, many beautiful domestic reproductions of Persian rugs, with softly blended colors, but only in the better qualities are these to be found. When the price of the best is too high, then the plainer the floor coverings the better. The home-maker of whom we are speaking, having a rag carpet income wherewith to satisfy a Persian rug taste, made the mistake of preferring a cheap imitation of the latter to "honest rags."

As to her furniture, practically every piece represented a "bargain"—for does not a bargain spell Economy? That depends; once in a long while it does. This woman had a fondness for "Special Sales" and, as a consequence, seven different kinds of furniture on the lower floor seemed justified by the fact that each table and chair had been either bought at an auction or reduced to something and ninety-eight cents from a price several dollars more. Her method of reasoning ran like this: If a chair with a carved back and a green plush cushion can be had at a marked-down price, why look twice at a plainer one sold the year round at the same price? Such, alas, is the common reasoning of the bargain-hunting housewife who, too often, forgets that the standard article that is really good, the only kind worth buying at all, is good three hundred and sixty-five days in the year and consequently does not have to be "marked down" to a reduced price—and seldom is.

Now let us see how the neighboring house belonging to a young bride was treated. Entering this immediately after coming from the other was like stepping into a little heaven of rest, so beautifully simple was the entire scheme of its furnishing and decoration. In the first place, there was practically but one color scheme; a pretty harmony of browns and yellows, yet every room was individualized by the color notes introduced in hangings, upholsteries and rugs.

In lieu of cheap wall papers the wise homemaker had tinted her walls throughout—a plan so widely approved by the best decorators to-day, not alone for its sanitary advantage but also for its artistic effect. A neutral "putty-color" was chosen for the parlor and halls and a deeper shade, more of a buff tone, for the dining room—an admirable background for her display of blue and white china, with blue hangings at the windows and woodwork painted a deep cream white. In the bedrooms, rich cream-colored walls, and some a soft yellow, gave a restful, pleasing harmony on all sides. It had all cost surprisingly little, and much of the work she had done with her own hands, but there was nothing cheap looking in the result.

Following the same principle that a plain article that is good is far better than a weak imitation of something costly, this woman gave her floors a hard finish—again doing much of the work herself—and over them laid inexpensive rag rugs, except in the parlor and dining room, for which two fine Axminsters were bought direct from the mills. Incidentally, finding out how to buy what you want at the lowest possible price is vastly different from "bargain hunting." As the furniture had to cost little, it, too, was bought as plain and unpretentious as could be found; mostly willow ware with cretonne upholstery, and oak of durable craftsman style, much of the latter having also been purchased direct from the manufacturer, at a saving in price.

Instead of lavishing her limited house money on ornaments and elaborate decoration, our little friend wisely relied upon the simplest of window curtains, using for side draperies only unbleached muslin or plain linens decorated with a neat stenciled border. Every spare dollar had gone into that supreme "ornament" without which no home can be properly called complete—a piano. "But," I questioned, "surely you could not have saved enough on other things to pay for this?"

"No," she admitted, "but I simply had to have my piano, so I saved in other ways, in wages, for instance. My little vacuum washer, that looks more like a big toy, and my self-heating iron, make it unnecessary for me to have a washwoman more than half a day a week to do the heavy pieces. Some day I shall have a vacuum cleaner, too, but in the meantime I manage very nicely with just an up-to-date carpet sweeper. And then my "fireless"! Well, sometimes I think I would part with any other single thing I own before that!"

"How in the world did you, who have never before done a scrap of housekeeping in your life, learn about all these things in your first year?" "My dear," she gravely replied to my question, "I have been theoretically housekeeping every minute since Will and I were first engaged. You would laugh at my Home Scrap Book in which I used to make notes and paste up everything that I ever heard or read about, or saw advertised, that it seemed to me we might some day need. Of course, I've made mistakes, even if they don't all show on the surface, but personally I am very glad that we do not live in 'the good old days.' I much prefer to spend at my music many an hour that mother would have spent over the kitchen range—and I assure you we are just as well fed."

After all, if we learn to economize in labor and time as well as in price, and also learn the difference between "inexpensive" and "cheap," we may have very beautiful homes even though we may have to stop to count the cost at every step.

Abraham's Idolatrous Neighbors

IN ABRAHAM'S day, the people of Ur, where he dwelt, were largely idolaters. They worshiped moon-gods, sun-gods and planetary gods, and among their popular deities were En-Lil, Shamash, Marduk, Nannar and Bel. The kings of the Ur dynasty were great temple-builders, and American archeologists have unearthed hundreds of the tablets pertaining to the worship or the official business of the temples. If you have a desire to own one of these tablets, which are 4,000 years old, read the article in THE CHRISTIAN HERALD for March 25, which will inform you how you can procure it.

An Astronomer's Story

THE late Sir David Gill, the famou astronomer, loved to relate how valuable meteorite once fell on a farm The landlord claimed it as "mineral o the land," but the tenant vowed i wasn't on the farm when the lease wa drawn up. Then the owner pointe out that it was "flying game"; but th tenant, observing that it had neithe wings nor feathers, argued that, a "ground game," it was his. Accord ing to Sir David, the dispute was set tled by the arrival of a customs officer who took possession of the meteorit as "an article introduced into th country without payment of duty."

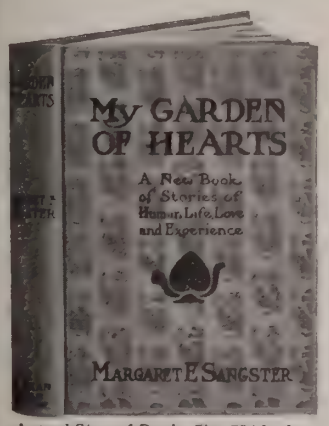
SIXTY-FIVE COMPLETE STORIES



Actual Size of Book, 5⅛x7¾ Inches

THIS Delightful Book is now in its second edition. It is a book of real Life and real People, full of human interest, which holds the reader from the first line to the last.

My Garden of Hearts contains over sixty complete stories and charming sketches. In these tales the author has dealt in her own delightful way with the romance and sentiment of life in city and country, among the rich and the poor, the cultured and the simple, and through it all she has woven the golden thread of love, and lighted it with the sunshine of a cheerful and optimistic philosophy. My Garden of Hearts is fragrant with kind deeds, noble sacrifices, and tender sentiment.

The reader seems to move in an atmosphere of old-fashioned gardens, blossoming orchards, ripening hayfields and fragrant woodlands. All her stories, whether the action be indoors or in the open, are "near to nature," and her characters are for the most part men and women loyal and lovable, with a purpose in life that makes it worth while. These are capital stories that will fill many a leisure hour with pleasure and profit.

A Life of Lincoln

By NORMAN HAPGOOD

THIS is an opportunity for our readers to secure a wonderful Life of Lincoln, written by the well-known editor and author Norman Hapgood. This biography is not a history of the Civil War; it is not an argument for emancipation or reconstruction. It is solely and simply a personal history of Lincoln as it appears to one of his countrymen, who is capable of seeing the great and simple soul of a man of the people. The narrative is vivid, full of anecdote and incident, and told with simple unaffected truthfulness that does not apologize, minimize, or magnify. The final chapter, which Mr. Hapgood calls a Last Word, is a most eloquent oration.

We do not know where one will find a more lifelike, interesting, and satisfactory biography of the great American. It is nicely bound in cloth and contains 433 pages.

This Full-size Dollar Bottle of Petro Quinine is Yours Absolutely Free of Charge

PETRO QUININE is a hair saver—it is not a perfume. It is about ninety-six per cent. pure petroleum—some quinine is added.

It is not necessary to talk of the beneficial effect of petroleum on the hair—you know it, and any physician will confirm your knowledge. The objections to its odor, its greasiness and general uncleanly appearance are the only things that have prevented the very general use of petroleum as a hair tonic.

PETRO QUININE eliminates all the undesirable qualities of petroleum—PETRO QUININE is crude petroleum refined to a degree that eliminates the objectionable odor—eliminates the greasiness—eliminates the uncleanly appearance, but retains all the qualities that are beneficial to the hair. PETRO QUININE is a clear, clean liquid that will not stain or leave a grease spot.

PETRO QUININE is a real hair tonic—it is made exclusively for those who really need a hair treatment and not for those who desire a perfume. Because it is a real tonic it is smaller than the dollar size of ordinary so-called hair remedies; because it is a real tonic it will go further than perfumes—only a few drops should be used at each application, and but three or four applications weekly are needed. Because it is a real tonic, only those who really want something that will benefit the hair—prevent it from falling out, remove dandruff, improve scalp conditions—should avail themselves of this liberal offer.

Why We Give You This Dollar Bottle of Petro Quinine

We know we have a product that you absolutely need; we know that it will prove itself upon trial, but we don't ask you to invest your money on our statement alone. This offer was made to Christian Herald readers before, and thousands have written us testimonial letters.

We want your druggist to know PETRO QUININE, so that he can tell those of his customers who do not see this advertisement that PETRO QUININE is made to help them, and in return for our making you a present of this bottle we expect you to help us tell your druggist.

That is why we send you a Certificate and not the bottle direct. Your druggist may not have PETRO QUININE, but he can get it for you, and we pay him liberally for taking care of you. We give him One Dollar for the Certificate he redeems for you, and we sell him the goods at the wholesale price. He owes it to you as a customer of his to see that you get your bottle of PETRO QUININE.

Here's How You Get the $1.00 Bottle of Petro Quinine Absolutely Free

Write us to send you a Certificate—that's all—it'll be sent by return mail. No red tape, no strings—it comes right to you. You take it to your druggist—it authorizes delivery to you of a $1.00 bottle of PETRO QUININE Free of charge. He may not have it, but we pay him for his trouble in getting it by selling him PETRO QUININE at wholesale price, and paying him the full retail price of One Dollar for your Certificate. Tell him of this Offer—show him this advertisement—we must know he has Petro Quinine before we can redeem your Certificate from him. We're rated in Dun's and Bradstreet's, so he'll know we're reliable.

WHERE PAUL WENT TO COLLEGE

THIRD ARTICLE IN THE NEW TRAVEL SERIES

BY REV. FRANCIS E. CLARK, D.D., LL.D.

Founder and President of the Christian Endeavor Society

JERUSALEM, the dearest city on earth to the imagination of the devout Christian, has been onnected with scenes so uch more important ven than the education St. Paul, that his residence there is thrown into the historic shadow. We ink of Jerusalem as the scene of much of the life-work of the great apostle's reater Master. We think of it as the scene of the Last Supper, of the agony the Garden, of the betrayal and crucifixion and ascension of our Lord; and all her events connected with its varied and momentous history pale into nsignificance. Nevertheless, were it not for ese greater events, the city would be famous all the history of the Christian Church as e chief scene of St. Paul's education, and as e city which, through its traditions, and rough its great men and eminent teachers, t its seal forever upon the life of the apostle. ome time in his early boyhood, between the ges of ten and thirteen, Paul doubtless began is first journey to the city which was and ill is the Mecca of every faithful Jew.

It is a momentous time in the life of every oy when he first goes away from home, either school or to begin a business career. Many f my readers doubtless remember the heart-che and the homesickness which was theirs hen first they turned their backs upon the ld home, to seek an education or a fortune in me distant city. But to the boy Paul it must ave been of still more thrilling importance an to most, for he was going to be educated the one city of all the world which could rike the deepest chord in the heart of the ewish boy, and which could thrill his soul ith thoughts unutterable. Doubtless his omesickness and sorrow at leaving the home f his father and mother at that tender age ere somewhat assuaged at the thought of the lorious city to which he was traveling.

Whether he went by land, around the east-n shore of the Mediterranean, or sailed irectly from Tarsus to Cæsarea and thence verland to Jerusalem we do not know. Doubt-ss, however, he took the latter route, accom-anied by his father or some older friend. ut whether he went by land, or much of the ay by sea, he would have some weary days plodding, on foot or horseback, across the ountains and plains which separate the sea-ore from Jerusalem. It is easy to imagine e details of this journey, for in many parts Palestine and Asia Minor the means of loco-motion are no faster or more commodious to-day than in the days of St. Paul. Indeed, in many places the roads are far worse, for the Romans were great road-builders, and bridge-builders as well, and many a Roman emperor deserved, better than the popes who have assumed the title, the name Pontifex Maximus, the greatest bridge-builder.

At night, the young Paul would assist his older companions in unstrapping the tent and its equipment from the back of the patient donkey, and would doubtless take a boy's delight in pitching the canvas, driving the pegs securely into the ground, and helping to prepare the evening meal in true gipsy, picnic fashion. At most the little caravan would make about thirty miles a day, and often at night the travelers would perhaps find a khan in which to sleep, a great building supported by arches, under which the horses and asses munched their hay, while sometimes above them would be a gallery with rooms opening out, within which the traveler might lodge. But whether they found a resting-place in a khan or pitched their tent under the open skies, they would have to bring their own provisions, and cook them for themselves, a process which doubtless delighted the heart of the young Paul, for there are few boys that do not like such adventures. Many a night in the near East, after a hard day of traveling, have I found refuge in such a khan, and helped to prepare the evening meal, and have considered myself fortunate to find a khan instead of a stuffy village guest-room filled with dirt and creeping things innumerable, which was often our only refuge.

DAVID'S STREET, JUST INSIDE THE JAFFA GATE

If the boy Paul took the long overland journey to Jerusalem by way of Damascus he would have had many days of such experience; and even if he took the short sea route several nights would be spent under such circumstances between Cæsarea and Jerusalem.

At the time of St. Paul's advent in Jerusalem Palestine was thoroughly and completely under the control of the Romans. The cruel Herod was dead, but the supremacy of Rome, for which he had worked during his lifetime, had at last been realized. The governor resided in the town of Cæsarea, we are told. "Soldiers were quartered there and at Jerusalem, and throughout Judea, wherever the turbulence of the people made garrisons necessary. Centurions were in the country towns, soldiers on the banks of the Jordan. Roman money was current in the markets; Roman words were incorporated in the popular language; Roman buildings were conspicuous in all the towns."

In spite of the political despotism of Rome learning flourished in Jerusalem. There were two great rival schools when Paul entered the city; one followed the teachings of Hillel, the other those of Shammai. "The former," we are told, "upheld the honor of tradition to be superior to the law, the latter despised the traditionists when they clashed with Moses." The school of Hillel was by far the most influential, and at this time the greatest teacher by far in this school was Gamaliel, the grandson of Hillel. He was one of the seven wise men who had been honored by the Jews as their greatest teachers. The Talmud says: "Since Rabbin Gamaliel died the glory of the law has ceased."

The method of teaching in those days was founded entirely upon the Scriptures. The chair of Gamaliel might be called Old Testament Exegesis in these days; some passage of the existing Bible of the prophets or the historical works was taken as a text, was commented on and interpreted, while the students listened to their teachers, or freely asked questions if they desired. The method of teaching was not so very different from that of the great philosophers of Athens, and consisted in free public discussions, which greatly promoted the intellectual activities of the people, even those who were not directly connected with the schools.

On the Passover evening Paul brought his own little lamb, which at the moment between sunset and dark, when the silver trumpet sounded, was killed with thousands of others that, like his, had been brought to the altar of sacrifice. In later days he learned that it was not the blood of the lambs which the priests caught in their silver bowls and poured out at the foot of the great altar, but the blood of the Son of God that cleanseth from all sin. But doubtless these Passover scenes fired his imagination, and inspired the imagery of later days.

There was an almost incredible number of priests and Levites in Jerusalem at this time. Some say not less than forty thousand. Doubtless the morning sacrifice in which some of these priests officiated at the dawn of every day must often have been witnessed by St. Paul. Every night, when the day's worship and sacrifice were over, the keys to the inner doors of the temple were hidden under a marble slab on which a priest slept, kissing it before he lay down. Robert Bird vividly describes the scene, which must have made a deep impression on the young student of whom we write.

"Each morning, just before the dawn, the captain and priests took the keys and with torches examined every door, to see that nothing had been touched. While they were doing this, other priests were bathing, dressing and drawing lots to decide who was to be the chief priest of the day, for that was the only way to prevent their quarreling over it. Three trumpet blasts gave the signal for the singers, musicians, and priests to go to their places, while the watchers on the walls looked to the east, and the chief priest went up the sloping pavement to the great whitewashed altar with the bright red line around it, to stir up the smoldering fire which was never allowed to go out. Not far from him was the sea of brass, that had been filled by machinery.

"A voice came down from the dusk of one of the towers:

"'The morning already shines.'

"'Is the sky lit up as far as Hebron?' was the question from the court below.

"'The whole sky is lit up as far as Hebron,' was the reply.

"A lamb was led out and tied to a gold ring of the altar, and the order was given to open the outside gates, and three blasts from the trumpeters were heard over in the city. Then the inner gates were opened, the lamb killed, its blood sprinkled on the sides of the white altar, and its body burned on the top and people could enter the temple."

We can understand from this teaching and this environment something of the reason for Paul's intense love for the law, the ceremonial scrupulousness of his younger life, his rabid hatred of heretics and all their doings, which led him to pursue them to the death until that memorable day on the road to Damascus when his eyes were opened to see the Son of man as an ever-living Saviour and his ears were unstopped to hear the unutterable things which throughout all the remainder of his life he strove so hard to declare throughout the world.

Probably no modern city is more disappointing to the expectant traveler than is Jerusalem. We think of it in its ancient glory; we picture to our imagination the magnificent temple with its golden roof and the other great buildings of the hill of Zion. We read of its being the rendezvous in Passover times of a million pilgrims, and we naturally think of it as an enormous city, comparable to London or New York of the present day. We think of it in its Oriental setting of two thousand years ago, but as we approach in a modern railway train, and climb the steep ascent which leads to the city behind an American engine, our illusion disappears.

At last the guard calls out "Jerusalem!" and we disembark a mile from the city, get into a rickety modern hack, which has evidently done duty in some more civilized community, and are bounced over the rough roads and the intolerable cobblestones within the gates, until, at last, we are landed at our modern hotel, so different from the khan of ancient times. And here our disillusion has only begun. The city of which we read as accommodating a million guests on the feast days could hardly to-day entertain a thousand strangers within its walls, and, since a multitude of pilgrims come every yea from Russia and Italy and France and Germany these nations have erected great hostels outside th walls for the accommodation of pilgrims. Bu these, fine and even magnificent as they are, tak us not back to the Jerusalem of two thousand year ago, but tell us only of the modern city where hal a dozen great nations are building these hostels an hospitals in order to gain political and commercia advantage, and patiently awaiting the time whe they can oust from his possession the Turk who ha so long held sway within the sacred city.

Within the walls the streets are narrow and ofter especially after a rain, unspeakably dirty. Offa and human filth frequently line the roadways, an one must pick his way carefully lest he become be fouled. Along the principal street, set into littl alcoves, are scores of merchantmen with their tin stock of wares, urging you to buy their boots an shoes, their oranges, their brilliant cloths, or thei green vegetables, as the case may be.

When we go to the hill where the glorious templ once stood, we find, not a Christian church, but Mohammedan mosque; a wonderfully beautifu mosque, it is true, with a resplendent dome covere with splendid tiles, but alas! how different fron the temple where the one true God was worshipe without the intermediary of Mohammed the fals prophet!

Perhaps the spot which best expresses the feel ings of the modern traveler is the great stone wal known as the "wailing place of the Jews," where th devout Jews, every day, but especially on Friday gather to recall the glories of the past and to mour over the decadence of the present; where the leade cries out: "For the palace that lies desolate," an the people respond: "We sit in solitude and mourn." Again the leader cries in this strange antiphona service: "For the walls that are overthrown," an the people respond: "We sit in solitude and mourn." Once more comes the mournful refrain and the response: "For our great men who lie dead, we si in solitude and mourn."

But before the end of the service the though rises from the minor key to a more joyous strain, an with the thought of the past glory of this wonderfu city and the brighter thought of the new Jerusalem of which it is the antitype we may well close ou account of the university city of St. Paul, as w listen to these more joyous words of leader an people at the Jews' Wailing Place:

LEADER: "Haste, haste, Redeemer of Zion."
RESPONSE: "Speak to the heart of Jerusalem."
LEADER: "May the kingdom soon return to Zion."
RESPONSE: "Comfort those who mourn over Je rusalem."
LEADER: "May peace and joy abide with Zion."
RESPONSE: "And the branch of Jesse spring up a Jerusalem."

CARPETING THE MISSISSIPPI

THE bottom of the Mississippi River, or rather portions of it near Memphis, Tenn., is being supplied with a carpet in the shape of gigantic mats woven of willow trees, which are being constructed in sections on the surface of the river and then sunk into place. The river for several years has been cutting a new channel that threatens to leave Memphis high and dry a mile away. The turbulent river already has to its credit, or discredit, a score of towns deserted in this manner, with consequences serious enough. In the case of Memphis, however, these consequences would be disastrous almost beyond description; her costly harbor facilities would be utterly ruined and the city left with a huge mud-bank between its fine levee and the stream.

The threatened danger was first noted by government engineers about a year ago, and preparations immediately started to avert it. While the insatiable river has for several years been eating railroads, houses and farms in the vicinity of Memphis, sucking them into its muddy maw, and carrying them down to the Gulf of Mexico, it seemed that the hungry stream had at last met something that would check its appetite when a sheer wall of solid rock appeared at Hopefield Point, opposite Memphis. But the rock was soon being undermined

The willow mats now being placed in the river at that point are expected to put a stop to the erosion. Some of these mats are a mile long and 200 feet wide. As fast as a section is completed it is weighted with rocks to sink it into place and then pinned to the bottom with piles. The Mississippi is the only river in the world that enjoys the distinction of having its bottom carpeted.

SINKING THE MAT TO THE BOTTOM OF THE RIVER

MAKING YOUR TOWN BEAUTIFUL

BY F. A. COLLINS

WHAT is the best plan for organizing a city or town mprovement campaign? The question has been nswered in many differ- nt ways throughout the ountry. No beginning s too modest. The his- ory of many trans- ormed towns often dates rom resolutions passed t some club meeting or inner party. There is n immense amount of terature dealing with his movement which ffers guidance and en- ouragement for the be- inner. The writers in- ist on the importance of definite idea as to what to be done and abun- ant energy in carrying n the work. In every ommunity, however mall, will be found lenty of material to ork with, and men and omen of special talents or carrying on each articular phase of the ork.

The next step is usual- to arrange some per- anent headquarters here this literature ay be consulted, and ter some secretary is lected to organize and ush the work. The irit of such reforms is ntagious. Public in- rest and enthusiasm is quickly aroused, the local wspapers are enlisted in the work and soon the mpaign is in full swing. One of the first reforms usually a general "clean up" day.

A great step has been taken toward the building more beautiful towns by eliminating the con- ntional blocks or checker-board system of street signing. Advantage is taken of the natural con- ur of the land in laying out the street to gain riety. The city designer, after looking over the ound first, prepares a contour map so that the pearance of the city may be seen at a glance. ne grades are often an advantage in such plan- ng and add both to the convenience and beauty of e section. It is recognized again that most towns e likely to grow and the plans look well into the ture.

A very interesting experiment in the construction a small garden city is offered by e industrial community of Tor- nce, Calif. It has been the aim Torrance to avoid everything hich is ugly in plans, buildings or ring conditions. Incidentally no loon is permitted. The houses are tremely modest, being designed r workingmen, and yet throughout artistic effect has been obtained. ne town has been planned, taking to consideration the prevailing inds, the contour of the land and e most direct route from home to ctory. A broad avenue separates e residential from the industrial strict. Every kind of business is assified and located accordingly. It s been found an excellent idea to y all sewer, water and gas pipes alleys and the lighting conduits ck of the curb line, so that the reets need never be torn up. The urches, educational and civic insti- tions are grouped about a civic nter. The streets are planned with a alth of foliage. In the entire com- unity there is not a single eyesore.

Women's clubs are an important factor in the rk of making America beautiful. An interest- g instance is afforded in Van Wert, Ohio. The n Wert Civic Club comprises fifty public-spirited men and about half as many men. The work reform was started with a series of seven nthly meetings to arouse public interest. A entific agriculturist discussed civic beauty, a dscape gardener was heard on street designing, woman physician on cleanliness, a clergyman on ic morals. An example of the simplicity and directness of the work is afforded by the "clean up" day inaugurated by the club. Every house- holder is charged 25 cents for every load of ashes hauled away from his premises and the club pays the charge for those who are unable to meet it. The work of beautifying other towns is shown by moving pictures. Prizes are offered for the best work in making ugly details of the city attractive. New lines of work are opened every year.

Another excellent illustration among many is afforded by the Women's League in Macon, Ga. The work was started with an empty cash box and a transformation has been accomplished with the expenditure of very little money. The women have offered prizes for the improvement of lawns and the planting and developing of vines and flowers about cottages. As an encouragement to residence owners photographs are taken of the most attractive yards, homes and porches, and these are publicly displayed in the rest rooms. When an effort is observed to beautify a home, however modest it may be, an encouraging letter is sent by the league to the owner.

It has been shown over and over again that the beautifying of a town may be accomplished with very little actual outlay. Many communities which could not afford the services of landscape gardeners have accomplished wonders in beautifying parks and waste spaces by planting wild flowers. The Park and Boulevard Association at Grand Rapids, Mich., has set up a number of neat white signs in one of the parks inscribed: "Build up. Plant your favorite wild flower or shrub in these woods." Every day throughout the summer enthusiastic botanists may be seen planting or caring for these flowers. As a result one of the most beautiful pieces of natural woodland in the country has been produced without expense.

A public park, however simple, offers many opportunities for educating the public taste. In planning parks nowadays a liberal amount of space is set aside for playgrounds and recreation centers. Conventional lawns and flower beds are replaced by trees, shrubs and flowers native to the region. Each season has a beauty of its own and the planting is arranged so that the parks are attractive throughout the year. An interesting work is being carried out in Newark, N. J., where weekly reports of the foliage and flowers of the parks are prepared and published in the local papers and the public is educated to appreciate it.

No more enthusiastic workers for civic betterment may be found than the junior clubs which are to be found throughout the country. In Belle Fourche, S. D., the advertising of the city is managed entirely by a junior club. The ages of the members range from fourteen to twenty-one, the club at present having a membership of seventy-five. Under the Junior Club's direction thousands of feet of motion picture films have been taken of the city and surrounding country and exhibited in nearby cities. There is a committee to induce conventions to meet at Belle Fourche and another for entertaining visitors. No visiting automobile leaves the city without a Belle Fourche pennant. Strangers are met at the railroad station or on their arrival at the hotels and presented with club-room visiting cards. The spirited publicity campaign is an important factor in the city's growth.

Within a few years, largely as the result of awakened public sentiment, there has been marked improvement in the architecture of local railroad stations and the upkeep of the parks which surround them. In many cities the civic improvement organizations have influenced the railroads to improve their properties. Many of the large railroads to-day employ skilful landscape gardeners to design the station gardens, and the color schemes of the buildings are carefully censored. One of the newest ideas in station planning is to replace the conventional lawns and geranium beds with screens of the wild flowers native to the region.

No single factor is perhaps so important in street improvement as the selection and planting of trees. Naturally the trees have received a great deal of attention and a wealth of literature is available on the subject. There are many organizations, some of a national scope, which stand ready to lend every possible assistance. Any committee or individual interested in the subject can readily have the advantage of expert advice as to the best trees and method of planting free of cost. In many towns where money is not available for public planting on a large scale excellent work has been accomplished by inaugurating tree-planting competitions. Prizes are offered, rivalry aroused between neighborhoods.

THE INEXPUGNABLE THINGS

*A SERMON BY REV. DR. NEWELL DWIGHT HILLIS

TEXT: "And Herod said, This is John the Baptist; he is risen from the dead." Matt. 14: 2

THIS incident makes up a fascinating page in the history of the human soul. King Herod was a Sadducee. He believed that death ended all, and that there was no ground for the immortal hope. He held that men die as leaves fall, perish as brutes perish, and that when the clod falls on the coffin that trifling little episode named life is quite ended. A most comfortable philosophy this, for Herod, with his past full of blackness and guilt. Read his biography, and his every week was as full of evil deeds as an Indian's quiver is full of poisoned arrows. We must liken his soul to the Pontine marshes, their breath miasm and their atmosphere death. Other villains have been content with committing one crime—Achan with being a thief, Judas with betrayal, Alcibiades and Arnold with treason, Macbeth with murder, but Herod gathers all claims into his arms. Like Napoleon, for ambition's sake, he thrust aside the woman that he loved; like Iago, Herod planned a thousand villainies against his friend; like Othello, this king strangled his own beloved.

Afterward, in defiance of public sentiment, the king rode boldly through the streets, trying to overawe the multitudes who muttered their indignation at a man who had sinned against God and their own homes. In that hour, the moral indignation of the people found a voice in the words of John the Baptist. With flaming speech, John descended on the guilty man like an earthquake and like a fire. Furious with anger, Herod put John the Baptist to death. No sooner did his disciples carry his body away for burial, than Herod returned to his place, counting the incident ended.

But memory keeps a double set of books. Conscience, offended, goes forth like an avenging angel. Months passed. One night, at the banquet, as the conversation went round, a guest spoke of a young Rabbi who had appeared in Galilee. Something in the story of the great Teacher's word startled the memory of Herod. No teacher was ever gentler or kinder than Jesus, and yet the story of Christ's work reminded Herod of that John whom he had slain. Conscience made a coward of him. So frightened was he that for a moment reason trembled on its throne. Like Macbeth, when Banquo's ghost appeared, Herod rose from his seat, and cried out in his alarm, "It is John the Baptist, whom I have beheaded. He is risen from the dead!" Gone now all his doubts about immortality! Gone forever his hope that death ended all! Nothing was so certain now as that there was another life. What would Herod not have given for "some antidote to purge his bosom of much perilous stuff"? But there were no waters of Lethe in which he could bathe, and in his garden of memory there were no poppies that bring forgetfulness. Until the end of time, this king's transition from doubt to faith will stand as the everlasting example of certain inexpugnable things in the fiber of man's soul.

Conscience is Inexpugnable

In a broad sense, certain fundamental principles are spread out before us in this incident in the biography of Herod. One is that conscience is inexpugnable. Enemies may sack the city of the soul, destroy the intellect that keeps the gates, prudence that guards the wall, Greatheart that plays the hero, but Conscience is a strong man, who stands forth, unhurt and victorious midst the universal ruin. The hidings of conscience seem to be so deep as to be beyond the reach of human weapons. The moral sentiment is like a color that is fast, staining through the very substance and fiber of the soul. Neglect may sear conscience, sin may dull the cutting edge, but the sword wielded by the hand of God cannot be broken. Universal its power. The old Greek calls it the whisper of God sounding down the aisles of man's soul. Our poets speak of conscience as the avenging angel standing in the shadow and keeping watch over memory's books. The great scientist tells us that what the magnetic pole does for the needle, conscience does for the thoughts and deeds of men. Every day we behold its workings in our personal experience; indeed, the press will not allow us to forget that conscience has a grip on every living soul. Consider the conscience fund in Washington, and the regularity of these confessions.

Once conscience has laid hands upon the wrongdoer, its grip is iron, its hold tenacious, and the only escape is in surrender. Witness the English judge, whose story is told by Professor Park. One day, sitting in the midst of his fellow judges, and fully conscious of his wealth, office and honors, the aged judge passed upon the case of a young servant who had slain his master, hidden the body and with a bag of gold fled to the city. After the sentence had been passed upon the youth, the distinguished jurist arose, put off his robes, laid aside the wig that represented the dignity of the law and passed into the prisoner's box. Standing beside the boy, the old man made a confession that in his youth he had slain his master, spoiled his treasure box, used the gold for travel and study, and at length climbed to office, seeking ever to make expiation for his crime. Success was his, but not peace. Sin had made his soul a solitude, but that was not quietness. Every day conscience scourged him, every night conscience renewed the ball and chain. The only escape from conscience was to flee to the God of conscience. No pilgrim ever hungered for bread as this old judge hungered for blows. No heart ever thirsted for the water brook as this jurist thirsted for punishment. The deep thing in him, his conscience, cried out for the deep things of eternal justice. It was so with Judas, it was so of Peter, and of David. It was the experience of Augustine.

Memory an Inexpugnable Thing

Conscience doth make cowards of us all. So long as man is man, the moral faculty is supreme. From its decree there is no escape. So long as God is God, right will be right, wrong will be wrong, and Herod will tremble at every face that appears at the window, will crouch in terror at every footfall coming down the corridor of the palace. When you can expel light from the sunbeam and leave it still sunshine, then, and not till then, can you exterminate conscience from the soul, without changing man's spiritual nature. You can take away man's sight, his hearing, his limbs, his arms, but one thing you touch at your peril—God's angel that keeps the gate of man's soul, named Conscience.

Inexpugnable, also, is memory, and the life record. By busying himself with many things Herod expected to forget forever the murder of John. He thought to leave the memory behind. But Herod made one mistake in his calculations. The guilty king never traveled straight forward. Herod is like a bewildered traveler, lost in a blizzard, who travels in a circle, and who constantly returns to the spot from whence he started. It could not be otherwise. Nothing is forgotten. Memory is the cord that binds the round years together, giving individuality. But for memory of past deeds of heroism performed, the patriot would not understand the reward that God gives him; but for memory of John's murder, Herod would not have comprehended the penalty visited upon him. Our thoughts pass as leaves fall, but leaves leave a woody deposit, and thoughts leave their monument, named character. The rich emotions of the soul pass into the very structure of one's being, like the artist's blue and crimson, that strike in, lending color to the canvas. In moving through the lower St. Lawrence, we see a thousand islands. Now, drain the waters off, and so all the islands are united in one great framework of the continent. Recalling the past, what we instantly remember are the island peaks named great events; but these outstanding memories are all joined with the underlying fabric of memory and soul, and nothing is lost.

Things that we call forgotten need only the appropriate event to recall them to mind. You remember the conversation at the dinner table of Coleridge. One man spoke of a farthing, and instantly the man at the other end of the table asked Coleridge how much Judas made by betraying Jesus. At first blush the question seemed irrelevant. But analyzed, it was the only question the man could ask. The English farthing was their smallest coin; that small coin suggested the smallest one among the Romans—the denarius; the denarius carried the memory to the widow's mite; the widow's mite suggested Judas's thirty pieces of silver, and the lin from an English farthing to how much money Juda cleared by betraying his Master was as straight a the movement of an arrow to the bullseye. For th law of memory is the law of association. That fa away deed of treachery and ingratitude needs onl the proper event to bring it all back, just as hea brings out the invisible writing on the palimpses These unknown contributors to the conscience fun in Washington, tell us that every transgressor mus make restitution for his wrong. These backwar cast the eye, and forward; though they cannot se they guess and fear.

Inexpugnable, also, the sense of responsibility From the very hour that Herod killed John, hi spiritual arrest, trial, conviction and punishmen were inevitable. It is a blessed thought for th good man that he is made in the image of God; fo a bad man to have a nature that is patterned afte God's is the most terrible thing conceivable. I means that Herod carried forward with him all th machinery of retribution. The court of justice i set up in the city of man's soul. Every night, Judg ment climbs her throne; every night, Memory call her witness; every night, Conscience prosecutes th transgressor. Daily the wrongdoer is condemne and sent to the left. So long as man is man, thi retributive process goes on.

When the human heart or foot approaches th confines of sin the whole horizon should grow black Retribution and the justice of nature are not fron a devil of hate, but proceed from an angel of mercy What! John cut off at the beginning of his grea career? The reformer's wrongs never to be righted In a moment, his great enterprise and movement t regenerate his country, which was gaining depth and power daily, was terminated by his untimel death. Are the martyrs, the heroes and the exile slain by tyrants never to have justice at the hand of those who have destroyed them? In a moral uni verse, it is unthinkable that Herod must not suffe for his sins. For Herod to be let off scot free, fo John to be unjustly slain for a good deed, and n notice taken of it, would be for the universe itsel to shrivel up like a snake's skin, and be blown away Herod's fearful looking forward to a fiery indigna tion, therefore, was logical—natural, inevitable Not until the sun throws off icicles and rays o blackness could Herod's soul, with reason, memory judgment and conscience, formed in God's image do other than scourge him to the bar of justice, an hand him over to the penalties of his own outrage nature, an injured universe and a just God.

Sin's Record in Personality Inexpugnable

Inexpugnable, also, sin's record in the personality of the soul. The story is told how a beautiful an gifted youth formed a friendship with an artist This member of the Royal Academy painted th young man's portrait. One day, when men were admiring the canvas in the gallery, a friend sai laughingly: "The canvas will stay young, and you will grow old and ugly. Ah, if you could only stay young, and the canvas grow old and wrinkled, an be cursed by the record of your life!" That sentence was seed sown in fruitful soil. The youth fixe his mind upon the thought, and found that the pic ture began to record his secret history. At first, h was glad, for while his friends grew old and died eighteen summers and winters came and went again, and he had changed not one whit. But long ago he has hidden the canvas under lock and key in a secret room in his house; he has barred th windows and barred the door, while men think tha his jewels are within. From time to time also h opens the door; slowly the canvas changes without as his soul is degraded within. The very fact that his face does not betray his sins, leads him t greater and more terrible excesses. He withholds himself from no pleasure and no vice, by night o day.

So, when twenty years have passed, the canvas is a wreck and ruin, the eyes bleared, the chin weak the nose pendulous, the lips soft and spongy, the hair faded and in strings, a furtive serpent look in the eyes, the shoulders hollow and bent forward like a sea shell, suggesting a walk that moves forward

FOR EVERY DAY IN THE YEAR, BASED ON THE WORDS OF JESUS

BY PROFESSOR W. H. T. DAU

SUNDAY, April 19. Mark 5: 36. "Be not afraid, only believe." This word was spoken to arrest the sinking faith of Jairus. He had a strange series of ups and downs in his faith. He had readily secured the service of the Master to help his dying child. They start out. The crowd thronging the Master retards their progress. The agitated father would fly on eagle's wings to his daughter's bedside, and now he must crawl at snail pace. Then comes the delay caused by the woman who touched the Master's garment. Jairus is agonized with fear that this delay may cost him his child's life. They start once more, only to meet the messengers who report that all is over. Jairus's faith was now on the verge of a collapse. It is at this point that Jesus turns and, in effect, says: "Conquer your anxiety. The odds against you are not greater now than they were an hour ago. You came believing when you stated your request; remain a believer till I am through with this case." And Jairus rallies under these reassuring words. The delays of God are blessings in disguise. Cold reason may denounce them as unnecessary and cruel trials. Faith extols them in the end as a most salutary discipline, purging our faith of the rationalistic dross that is usually mixed up with it, and causing it to strike deeper roots in the promises of the Lord, while it bends before repeated blasts of unfavorable circumstances. Faith is thus taught to believe not only that the Lord helps but also that his help is always timely.

MONDAY, April 20. Mark 5: 39. "Why make ye this ado, and weep? the damsel is not dead, but sleepeth." These words are not meant as a denial that the physical life had really flown from Jairus's daughter. Our Lord has spoken of Lazarus, who was certainly dead and buried, as sleeping. In the present instance he wishes to rebuke the wild expressions of grief that he beheld in the house. These people were taking the carnal view of death which is common among unbelievers. Death spells to them loss, destruction, decay, despair. They either know of no waking from death or cannot connect any cheerful meaning with the idea of resurrection. They do not know Christ and the meaning of Easter with its open tomb and our risen Proxy. Mourning such as these people perform—for it is a performance, and they expect to be paid for it, too—is a disgrace among God's children. With holy indignation the Lord bids this noisy rabble begone. But there is a greater reason why these professional mourners should stop their sad theatricals. Here is the Prince of Life entering the chamber of death. Their howls and shrieks are virtual denials of his power and love. They laugh him to scorn, and he is forced to drive them from the premises as a nuisance. To Jairus, however, the Lord's words and action must have been very comforting. Unbelievers, worldly people often interfere when the Lord is about to manifest his glory, and cause us to tremble where we have every reason to be calm and composed. On such occasions let us bid everybody begone, in order that Jesus may do his work for us.

TUESDAY, April 21. Mark 5:41. "Talitha cumi. Damsel, I say unto thee, arise." This touch of Aramaic which has been recorded in the Gospels proves that our Lord spoke the language of the people among whom he lived. As if anybody had expected anything else! Is it not a pity that this beautiful record does not seem to prove anything else to some Bible scholars? Why are we informed that the Lord said "Talitha cumi" to Jairus's daughter? Is it not rather the touch of tenderness in the brief address to the dead child to which our attention is to be called? He had said: "The damsel sleepeth." Now he speaks to her as a mother does when arousing her child in the morning. The little girl hears from the Almighty God, not a terrific, rock-rending voice of thunder hurling defiance at the prince of terrors, but a sweet call such as she had often heard from her mother. The chains of death are loosed as easily as the bands of sleep. She awakes and looks into kind faces. All has come about quite naturally, without unnecessary shocks. The girl might have believed herself that she had only dropped off in a brief doze of a few moments. But the parents and the three disciples who witnessed this scene must have long remembered every little circumstance connected with it. This account of the raising of Jairus's daughter is especially rich in detail. The little girl, too, her soul coming back out of the other world, must have realized that the sleep from which she awoke this time was different from her usual sleep, and the awaking also. We gather from this story that our own rising will be a pleasant awaking as from a sound sleep. The Lord will temper the terrors of the day of doom for his rising children.

WEDNESDAY, April 22. Matthew 9: 28, 29. "Believe ye that I am able to do this? According to your faith be it unto you." When our Lord insists on faith, or trust, in those who come to ask some temporal gift of him, we are then to learn this, that his concern for the souls of his beneficiaries is always far greater than his concern for their physical well-being. His miracles are never performed merely to display his power, or to gratify men's whims, but to seal the confidence which men have reposed in him. Hence the Lord's careful inquiry into the state of his petitioners' heart. The blind men in this text are, moreover, a lesson in the spiritual uses of delays in the divine help. They had cried long and loud, and Jesus had kept silent. Then they groped their way into his presence and reiterated their request. Still he is not ready, it seems, to grant it. They might have interpreted his question as doubt of their sincerity. But promptly upon their confession he touches them, to signal to them that the hour of their deliverance had now arrived. The healing word goes forth, and the Lord at the same time acknowledges their allegiance to him, though that was still very imperfect, as their subsequent actions showed. When we bring our petitions before the Lord, let us also be mindful of our faith in the Lord. And if he delays his answer, let us interpret his silence, not as a repulse, but as an invitation to persistency.

THURSDAY, April 23. Matthew 9: 30. "See that no man know it." Since the miracles of Jesus were not performed for show, he cares not to have them talked about, as that might simply rouse the masses to wild excitement about him, and gain for him a worldly and selfish sort of admiration which would be of no spiritual benefit either to him or the admirers. We have noted elsewhere, however, that Jesus values the testimony of believers, when there is need of it. Silence may have been imposed on these blind men for another reason. When a person has obtained great mercy from the Lord, it is proper for him to retire and commune within his own heart upon the kindness and greatness of his Lord. The spiritual effects of divine blessings may become dissipated by undue exhibition of them to the worldly. In the solitude of grateful contemplation the gifts of God are better studied and appreciated than in animated conversations, how it all happened, what the believer did, and what the Lord did next, etc. Such conversations may prove a danger to modesty and humility. We must never boast, least of all about the successes of our faith.

FRIDAY, April 24. Luke 4: 21. "This day is this Scripture fulfilled in your ears." This text takes us back to Nazareth, where our great High Priest had spent the years of his childhood, youth, and early manhood in faultless obedience to the law of God, which he fulfilled for our redemption. He is come now to discharge the office of prophet to his fellow townsmen. In a very august manner, on a Sabbath day and at their house of prayer, he declares his Messiahship in a sermon of such gracious import that all marvel at him. He had chosen a grand text, Isa. 61: 1, and he expounded it with great force. He tells his audience that the great preacher whom the ancient prophet had foretold is now before them and the prophet's message is on his lips. It is a message brimful of comfort to every sin-stricken heart. The Gospel which he brings attacks every effect and form of sin and works a complete reversal in the many-sided misery of man. Jesus and his gracious message is the center of the entire divine revelation; in him all lines of prophetic and apostolic thought and discourse converge. He is the fulfilment of what the prophets foretold and the theme to which the apostles ever come back. To know Jesus is to understand the whole Bible.

SATURDAY, April 25. Luke 4: 23, Mark 6: 4. "Ye will surely say unto me this proverb, Physician, heal thyself: whatsoever we have heard done in Capernaum, do also here in thy country." "A prophet is not without honor, but in his own country, and among his own kin, and in his own house." The result of the preaching of Jesus at Nazareth is very humiliating. The congregation had been carried up to the sunlit heights of God's love to bask in the favor of their Redeemer God, and then was hurled into awful disgrace because they received not the Lord who had come to his own. Our Lord's gracious speech turns to stern rebuke as he sees their contemptuous looks and hears those sneering remarks about "the carpenter's son." "You low-bred son of toil," they say in effect, "will have to bring us stronger evidence to establish your claims than honeyed words. Do some miracle here, as we have heard of your doing at Capernaum." At bottom, it was jealousy that would not permit them to acknowledge that their humble townsman was greater than any of them. And so it has ever been: jealousy and envy blind persons who are thrown into the closest relations with a great man and prevent them from seeing his greatness and rejoicing unselfishly in his distinction. Jesus was not the first, nor has he been the last man, whom his own people would not appreciate, but in no other case, before or after, has envy, which is always unreasoning and self-destructive, been so base or so fatal to the envying.

convolutions like a serpent's glide! And, oh, with at intensity of hatred did the man hate that canvas! What crimes he would not have committed to stroy it! One day he disappeared. When they nd him, he was lying before the picture, and in hot rebellion he had tried to cut the canvas to gments, and then the verdict that the picture ould be cursed with the record of his sins was anged, and suddenly the picture became young, as once had been, and all the record of his sins was gathered up and focalized upon himself. Lo, on the canvas was the portrait of a beautiful boy, and on the floor lay a worn, faded, ugly, fiendish face, of one prematurely broken by excess and sin.

And this is the picture of Herod's life. This is the epic of every sinner's career. God keeps his books for remembrance. The body with its brands of sin is a book of remembrance. The memory is a book of records. The intellect itself, and the habits, are books of remembrance. Oh, all ye young hearts, be warned in time. Make no mistake. Do not deceive yourselves by listening to the voice of pleasure. Lay not up the harvest of retribution and anguish. When sirens sing, the voice of conscience and memory may be dulled. But the time will come when the siren's voice will dull, and when only the voices of conscience and memory will be heard, and their voices, sounding on, will sound forever.

ENGLAND CALMING DOWN

OUTWARDLY the tremendous situation created in Great Britain by the Irish Home Rule question has assumed a less disquieting aspect, despite some sensational developments. As a result of ministerial representations about non-service in Ulster, afterwards in part repudiated, the chief of the imperial general staff, Sir John French, and Adjutant General Sir John Spencer Ewart resigned from the army council and refused to reconsider their decision. The resignation of War Secretary Seely was then accepted and Premier Asquith assumed that portfolio and resigned from the House to submit himself for re-election by his constituency. This extraordinary situation, in which the government is practically without a prim minister and without a leader in the House of Commons and also without a active head of the army, is significant of the seriousness of passing events. Th latest suggestio in the House o Commons, where th Home Rule bill is ap proaching its thir reading and pass age, is made by Si Edward Grey, secre tary of state fo foreign affairs, wh proposes a federa system of govern ment for the Britis Isles as a solutio of the whole matte The suggestion ma lead to renewed ne gotiations. It seem that the Home Rul bill with others wil be passed with th understanding tha a general electio will follow in June

ULSTER VOLUNTEERS DRILLING ON ESTATE OF THE DUKE OF ABERCORN

THE TEN-DAY BATTLE AT TORREON

IF ANYTHING has happened in Mexico anywhere but at Torreon during the week just closing, the facts have been withheld from the world. And the world has not been greatly enlightened as to events at Torreon. The only definite thing is that neither side in the sanguinary conflict which has raged there for ten days has been able to announce a decisive victory. And on such a victory appears to depend the fortunes of both Provisional President Huerta and the interests represented by General Villa.

As early as Monday, when Villa was reported as having renewed his assault upon that important railroad center, it was said that over 3,000 had fallen.

Despatches that reached the public by way of Juarez, Chihuahua and Mexico City were highly contradictory, so that it could not be known which side at any time was in the ascendency. It was evident, however, that a great deal of fighting took place in the streets of the town, where at times the rebels forced the defenders of the place to seek hiding in the buildings and again were in turn repulsed. It was stated at one time that Villa had been seriously wounded while leading his men in a fierce attack, but this was later denied. Wounded rebel soldiers reached Chihuahua and other points by every train, but many hundreds were left to die upon the battlefield. To the terrific fire of the rebel batteries stationed on high places about the town was added the havoc of dynamite hurled from house tops in attempts to blow up the buildings that sheltered the Federals. Each day brought its quota of news telling the progress of the long battle. At one stage a requisition by Villa upon Juarez for field-guns and ammunition led to the belief that he was being sorely pressed. The same day a report alleged that General Carranza was in receipt of an offer of surrender from General Velasco, the Federal commander at Torreon. Heavy fighting was kept up between bands of rebels and Federals in outlying sections. Telegraph lines were cut, and the railroads from the east were said to have been put out of commission t prevent the approach of Federal reinforcements.

General Carranza arrived in Juarez at the end o March and his presence was made the occasion o much celebrating in the midst of disquieting report from the front. On April 2 a long message fron Villa to General Carranza admitted a decided check to the rebels, according to reports, but at the same time declared that Villa still expected to triumph

In Mexico City the news left n doubt as to the ultimate tri umph of the Federal forces, and th complete rout of Villa's army wit a loss of over 5,000 in killed wounded, and prisoners was gen erally credited. The Mexican Con gress convened on April 1, an President Huerta in his address de clared it to be his political faith that the peace of the country a any personal sacrifice was a para mount issue. Analysis of the mes sage in the press indicated that i reflected confidence on Huerta' part of remaining at the head o the government. During the prog ress of the war it is said tha Huerta has brought about many long-needed reforms, both in th administration of justice and in th development of uncultivated lands

The stubborn and thus far seem ingly successful resistance of th Federal forces at Torreon has sur prised others besides Villa, and ha tended to create considerable publi sympathy, if not indeed support, fo the Huerta régime. Conditions i the beleaguered town are said to b indescribable. The battle has prac tically been a hand-to-hand fight and it is thought that the cessatio of hostilities may come only witl the annihilation of both armies.

MAIN STREET OF TORREON WHERE BATTLE HAS RAGED

A LITTLE ANGEL OF THE MOUNTAINS

BY CYRUS TOWNSEND BRADY

ILLUSTRATED BY GAYLE PORTER HOSKINS

Which Little Olaf Tryggvesson Picks Flowers by the Roadside and So Gets Left Behind.

LOVE of the beautiful is a most commendable quality. Pursued too ardently, however, it sometimes works harm rather than good. It certainly did in the case of little Olaf ryggvesson. Neither in the grand yet sterile up- nds of his far northern birthplace on the cliffs of torfiord in rocky Romsdal, nor in the more sterile nd infinitely less attractive lowlands of his more ecent domicile in New York with skyscrapers for añon walls—the one made by God and the other y man!—had little Olaf enjoyed much opportunity indulge his fancy in its particular bent for beau- ful blossoms, to cultivate his passion for color nd fragrance.

Sometimes, in the small gar- ens of the richer people of his ative landand more frequently, ough still rarely, by flattening is little Norwegian nose against ie plate-glass shop-windows of ie metropolitan florists, he had en flowers. And when he could, e had looked his fill—well, not iat exactly, for the gardeners the one place and the police the other generally made him ove on after an all too brief ntemplation of the things he lored. When humanity old or ung would fain linger to look n the beautiful, the authorities life are usually on hand with ie imperative command, "Move !"

But little Olaf had got out of ie city at last. He had left, too, s crowds and its pavements far ehind forever. Other things ame into his ken as he surveyed ie passing world from the rail- ad train. Never before in the even years of his hard life had e seen such a riot and wealth of lor as grew in confusion, as ell as profusion, beside the rail- ad track on that late spring orning in Colorado—a far call om New York, indeed. That ie flowers were wild and that gh society would have turned its nose at them, if high ciety could ever descend to a ing so undignified, made no fference to him. He looked, he w, he was conquered.

He stood alone on the rear atform of the train and gazed long as he liked. Neither liceman nor gardener nor ainmen nor even the gentleman whose care he was being per- nally conducted to what was ped to be a good home in the r West molested him, or even ticed him in the least degree. obody sought him out, nobody en seemed to have missed him.

The train was going very owly. He had the better op- rtunity to observe the blos- ms adorning the right of way that account. He ventured to ramble up on the criss-crossed on gate that closed the end of e sleeping car and hang over it and peer down that which his soul loved and coveted. It was trancing. Never had he been so delighted. eaven itself, in color, in beauty, in glory, marched the track.

Presently the little narrow-gauge train came to abrupt stop. Why, it does not concern us to now, nor did it enter into Olaf's mind to inquire. hatever the cause, the stop was unduly prolonged. the pause, temptation tried this small passenger. With every moment of waiting his desire to ndle the blossoms on which he looked so appre- tively grew in his breast. Why not? When mptation and opportunity were so seductively mbined what could a poor forlorn little Norwe- an waif do?

The personally conducted party of orphans was merous and at times inclined to be troublesome. e presence or absence of one more or less, save roll call and meal times—for which last there as always a prompt attendance—was scarcely no- ed by the harassed conductor. No one came to seek him. No hand drew him back. No voice whispered warning in his ear. Suddenly he resolved that he would do it.

The train, to the mind of the little Scandinavian, seemed to have stopped forever. Why should he not venture? He was a hardy lad. He had climbed every crag within sight of his home before he was six years old, and subsequent years spent in New York had not deprived him of sureness of footing or athletic ability.

To climb over the gate, to cross it, to climb carefully down to the platform on the other side, to drop thence lightly to the ground via the bumpers, to stray off the right-of-way down the bank, to clasp his little arms full of blossoms with all the speed in which he could pluck as many as he could carry, to bury his face in their cool, soft, fragrant petals, took but a little time. If he had not stopped for that last riotous indulgence of his nose, for that last look at the earth whence his treasure had been uprooted, he might have returned to the train in safety, and, save for the betraying evidence of the blossoms' presence, for which he would have to account, none would have been any the wiser as to his escapade.

But it was not to be. It is often the last rather than the first blow that counts. The sudden sound of the slow grinding of wheels along the rails recalled entranced Olaf to his senses. He looked up to see the train slowly beginning to move. Indecision was not one of his characteristics. He leaped for the embankment and scrambled up it with all his speed. He might have gone faster, although the result would not have been different, if he had dropped his flowers; but to let go of what he had seized was not one of his characteristics, either, and he held them tightly clasped to his breast. The train was going faster with every second. It was late anyway. The engineer had to make up time and the train fairly leaped into full speed in a few moments, and although Olaf shouted and yelled with all the strength that his lusty little Northern lungs permitted, and ran frantically up the track after the car with all the strength of his little legs, he was left behind—marooned in a mountain pass one springtime years ago in western Colorado!

Little Olaf had been alone many times before. He knew by repeated experience the sickening sensation of abandonment. He knew what it was to be forsaken—left behind. The consciousness had come to him first, when they took him into the quiet room of the little peasant house where he had been born, and showed him his beloved mother lying on her bed, all the red of life and health faded forever out of her cheeks. He had called her, but she had not answered. He had laid his hand upon her, he had pressed his lips to her cheek, but there had been no response. She had been as cold to his touch as the snow in the winter. Ah, that was a never-to-be-forgotten hour even by a very little lad such as Olaf. Curiously enough, he remembered it vividly this morning. He felt the same inclination to weep that he had given way to then, but he had grown years older, and he felt it would be scarcely manly to indulge in tears, at least not yet.

There had been people in his house in that hour of bereavement to take him by the hand and to say kind things to him. There had been strong arms that had encircled him and broad bosoms on which he had cried. Now he was quite alone, with no one to sympathize with him or even to comfort him.

Circumstances had been somewhat different at the second sad parting, he recalled. That had taken place in the great emigrant ship upon which he and his father had been passengers. Death, inexorable, had most unkindly claimed his sole remaining protector. He had stood by the gangway, a tiny tot, while the people, rich and poor, first cabin and steerage, sailors and passengers, gathered about to listen to the captain read the prayers and watch while the white canvas shot-weighted hammock that held all that had been his on earth, his father, flashed over the side,fell through the sunlit air, and splashed down into the great blue sea. He remembered that the ship had not even stopped for so great a tragedy, to him, as that!

Other kind-hearted emigrants from his own neighborhood had taken him in. They had boldly claimed him as their own. He had passed through the experiences of Ellis Island and he had been forthwith plunged into the maelstrom of the great city. The people who had befriended him had fought the battle of life against poverty and indifference in the purlieus of the town for a while, but the tide of fortune had turned against them. Drink and the devil got the breadwinner at last. Little Olaf Tryggvesson, the latest comer, had been the first to go. He had been driven out of the tenement, and thereafter lived, as thousands of other children, God help them, live, on the streets. But he had drifted into a rescue mission before it was quite too late. A "Big Brother" had taken an interest in him; a kindly woman had taught him; one of the charitable organizations had taken him up; he had enjoyed a year's schooling as the more or less restrained "guest" of an institution where the good religious training of his infancy had been revived and supplemented—so far, that is, as any institution can do those things.

The cry for children that still comes out of the West, and which was greater then than now, had caused him to be sent thither with a select group of orphans. The long journey across the continent and over the Great Divide had been safely made. His

The Church and Its Critics

IN THIS latitudinarian age, when the utmost freedom is accorded to criticising things sacred and secular, the church is coming in for its share of observation. Much is made of the fact that in the ranks of our evangelical reformers are to be found not a few leaders who have left the orthodox ministry to take up the ministry of humanity—the cause of the humble classes. In an article published by a contemporary, the writer cites a number of able and earnest men who occupied denominational pulpits in the past, having risen for what they regarded as the wider field. This was right, if we accept the principle that one does right to follow his convictions. Proceeding, Mr. George J. Anderson, the writer referred to, makes the point that those who have left the ordained ministry represent "a revulsion from theology to sociology in present-day Christianity" that is world-wide; that the church to-day is realizing that it has been blind to the deeper teachings of Christ and drawing itself largely to Pauline philosophy, forgetting meanwhile the practical aspect of the mission of Jesus.

If we regard the teaching of Jesus, however, we find little basis for such an arraignment of his church. He designed it to be a spiritual body, not an aggregation of agitators. His doctrine pointed to the establishment of a spiritual kingdom and the Gospel he taught related to this kingdom. Speaking before Pilate, he said, "My kingdom is not of this world; for if my kingdom were of this world, then would my servants fight." While he recognized the wrongs and the sufferings of the poor, and the grievous injustice inflicted by their oppressive masters, he pointed them to the divine remedy: "Seek ye first the kingdom, and all these things will be added unto you." If the church has been faithful in proclaiming the Gospel of the kingdom, it has been faithful to its Founder.

But the church is doing vastly more than this. In the last half century it has expanded and multiplied its activities in a way that blunts the weapons of its critics. There are few churches now that are not in the progressive line, with social and philanthropic auxiliaries and, in some cases, with educational and industrial annexes. Whether these augment the spiritual force of the church is not now in question; the point is the fact of their active existence, and that they are helping to break down the barriers between the classes and infusing the spirit of sympathetic Christian co-operation wherever they have been established.

But we are not averse to criticism of the church when it proceeds from a sincere source. The church itself ought to welcome it. There are many problems facing it to-day in the solution of which it must take its part sure to perplex and embarrass. They are of a nature that cannot be dissociated from the church's duty as the great exponent of human rights. It must help those who cannot help themselves, champion the cause of those who need a strong ally, rebuke the powerful who oppress the weak, fight for righteousness in the nation, the civic community, the state and the nation. In a word, it must stand for everything that Jesus himself would have stood for, and condemn what he would have condemned. It is not, however, as a foe to society, but as a conserving and transforming power among existing social inequalities that it can work most effectively. Jesus was not the founder of a political club, though he took note of the human faults and errors of his time. To bring men of all classes into line with the spirit of Christ, and to lead them to express that spirit in their daily lives, is the real mission of the church to-day.

The House Repeals Tolls Exemption

IT WAS the closing scene in a dramatic battle in which the President found himself opposed to a considerable faction of his own party, when the House bill, repealing the exemption provision of the Panama Canal Act, was passed by the House of Representatives on March 31 by a vote of 247 to 162. The debate, which lasted nine eight hours, frequently became exciting, though lacking sensational. An impressive incident was the reading of a letter from ex-Secretary of State Hon. Richard Olney, in which he approved the President's contention that "the repeal of the act which raised the issue is absolutely essential to our good standing with the great Powers of the world, and the proper conduct of our foreign relations."

But the real drama in the debate in Congress was furnished by Speaker Clark, who talked for an hour in the afternoon. He disclaimed having any quarrel with the President, denied that the ship subsidy interests had plotted to defeat repeal, denied that he would be a presidential candidate in 1916, and declared that he was content to end his political career with the fight he had made for the party platform. He had done what he did because he could not be a "rubber-stamp" Speaker. Yet, while disagreeing with the President on the tolls question, he believed him to be "actuated by the highest patriotic motives." He, the Speaker, would rather "see the canal walled up than give the English any control of it." Rather than surrender our complete sovereignty over every foot of our domain, he believed "we would cheerfully and courageously face a whole world in arms." These and similar salvos enlivened the debate and pleased the galleries. But the result was foreseen, and the majority of 85 for repeal was conclusive. How long the measure will now remain in the hands of the Senate is a matter for conjecture, but the vote will probably be close.

When Abraham Lived in Ur

IT IS a very rare opportunity which THE CHRISTIAN HERALD lays before its readers, in extending to them the privilege of becoming possessed of some of the Babylonian tablets, as explained in the proposition which appears on another page. They have a threefold value: First, as genuine memorials of a long-past age; second, for the light they shed on social and religious conditions in the center of the world's civilization at a time concerning which secular history is silent, and almost all we have hitherto known is gleaned from the Old Testament record; and third, because they come from the ancient city of Abraham, Ur of the Chaldees. Further, their writers were practically contemporaries of the patriarch, living in the same age and under the same kings. The cuneiform or wedge-shaped characters on the tablets give us occasional glimpses of the idolatrous splendor and wasteful extravagance of the heathen civilization of that time, over 4,000 years ago, when Abraham, the "Friend of God," dwelt there, probably the one man in a vast heathen population to be so specially distinguished. Every pastor, Sunday school superintendent and class teacher, Bible student and lover of the Scriptures should strive to possess one of these precious tablets. Professor Clay's signed attestation goes with each tablet. Their genuineness is thus placed beyond the shadow of doubt.

Courage and Conscience

IT IS reported that a Jewish rabbi, Hyman Setsky, of Yonkers, directed in his will that one hundred and fifty dollars of his property be paid to two men in Odessa with whom he had quarreled forty years ago over the purchase of a quantity of eggs. The will stated that he was not certain whether or not he still owed the money, but wished to make restitution because of the possibility that the debt existed.

Such an item of news is refreshing and stimulating in this age of dull consciences and greedy hands. The picture of an old man, engaged in sacred work reviewing his life as it drew near its close, remembering a quarrel almost a half century old and determining to set it right, is impressive and beautiful.

Shakespeare said that conscience makes cowards of us all. But conscience makes some men courageous. It is not cowardly to acknowledge the sovereignty of conscience; we must bow down to it or it does not pay, either in this world or the next, to do otherwise. To yield to the right of conscience will make a man truly and magnificently brave. One cannot think of this brave old rabbi without ransacking one's own past. Are there unpatched quarrels, unrighted wrongs, unjust gains back there? Set them right now. Confession and restitution require courage, but it is a sort of courage worth possessing and worth strengthening. To flinch now will mean greater loss and greater terror later on.

Smoke and Wax

THE forces of evil seem multitudinous, and very strongly intrenched. We set ourselves grimly to work against them, and often are overwhelmed with fatigue from past and present conflicts and almost dubious about the conflicts of the future.

That is because we are not looking at God. When we look at him, all the evil in the world seems very small. And when we look at him much of our effort as well as all of our anxiety, seems mistaken. His method is so very different from ours; his point of view so different; his hope so different.

"Let God arise! Let his enemies be scattered. Let them also that hate him flee before him! As smoke is driven away, so drive them away! As wax melteth before the fire, so let the wicked perish at the presence of God!"

Smoke is at times very thick and very annoying, but only a breath of wind is needed to drive it away. Wax might be built up till it looked like a mountain, but the steady shining of the sun would make the mountain perish. All the united evil in the world is only so much smoke and so much wax before the power of God.

How shall we fight, then? We must use weapons that are appropriate to our foes. Not with swords. Jesus said: "They that use the sword shall perish by the sword." Not with books. Jesus, though there were books in his day, was so indifferent to the power of the printed page that he is never known to have written a line, except one line in the dust of the street. Not with money. Money has been, instead of the church's greatest blessing, sometimes its greatest curse. Not with numbers. David was severely punished once for numbering his people, and Gideon's force had to be reduced from twenty thousand to three hundred before God could use it.

These methods might do against foes of substance and stability. But what are our foes? Smoke and wax. How shall we fight them, then? With wind and fire. The breath of God's Spirit, the fire of his power. The lightning of his truth. These are the things the church needs to-day to make it triumphant. One glimpse of God, one touch of his power upon us, one baptism with the mighty wind and the blazing fires of Pentecost, and the church shall begin to know new and bewildering victories.

The truth applies to conflicts great and small. In overcoming our temptations, in the efforts of our own churches against the indifference and the iniquity of our communities, in righting social wrongs and conquering the nations for the Saviour, what is needed is the real presence of God. If his power and fire are in our souls, in our churches, in our organizations, in our denominations, we shall find the forces of iniquity scattered and melted before us like smoke before the wind and wax before the fire.

Dr. Stryker Slain in Korea

PHYSICIANS and missionary society officials in New York were shocked, on March 30, by the news that Dr. E. de Mott Stryker had been killed by an insane Japanese in Holkoi, Korea. The telegram was sent by the doctor's wife to her father, Mr. Edward H. Loud, in Brooklyn. Dr. Stryker was born in Raritan, N. J., was graduated from Rutgers College in 1897, and from the College of Physicians and Surgeons in 1901. After studying medicine in Germany, he took extensive hospital service in New York and vicinity. For five years he has had charge of a large, finely equipped mine hospital in Korea. "His work in Korea," said one of the officers of the mining company, "was more than that of a doctor; it was that of a missionary." The native medicine or witch-doctors would boil up the feet of dogs for medicine, and give the concoction for every kind of disease, according to the custom of centuries. They were very angry at Dr. Stryker for his innovations. The Japanese doctors in Korea were also jealous of his popularity. As many as 70,000 patients passed under his treatment, and people outside of the mine, as well as inside, were treated as free patients. The question is considered whether a governmental request for an official investigation of the murder will not be made. It is a pity so brilliant and useful a man should have been cut down in so untimely a manner. Slain among those to whom he had brought health, physical and moral, and probably by an insane and irresponsible agent, we are reminded of the prayer of One who was crucified by the ignorance and prejudice of those he came to save:

Father, forgive them; for they know not what they do. (Luke 23: 34.)

Bear Tears Girl's Hand

A FOURTEEN-YEAR-OLD schoolgirl climbed an outer railing around the polar bear pen at the Central Park Zoo, New York, the other afternoon, and thrust a loaf of white bread through the bars at Alice, the largest female bear in the collection. Alice seized the girl's left hand. The child screamed and a keeper and several policemen ran to her rescue. They had to beat Alice over the head many times before she would release her grasp. The girl was taken to the hospital, where the torn hand was treated. She had been accustomed, in going to and from school, to feed the bears each day. The child had the best of intentions, and up to that time the bears had received her favors gratefully; but the savage instinct in the creature broke out in the attack. Girls have to be very careful of physical dangers, and even more so of moral perils in the city. There are dens of wild beasts ready to pounce upon and destroy them. The slums of poverty and the great white way of luxurious indulgence are crowded with human beasts that prey upon the young. It is the imperative duty of the church to save such from ruin. The divine deliverance from beastly destroyers David thus expresses:

The Lord that delivered me out of the paw of the lion, and out of the paw of the bear, he will deliver me out of the hand of this Philistine. (I Sam. 17: 37.)

Pass Anti-Dueling Bill

BY a unanimous vote of the Reichstag, a bill providing that when a duel or a challenge to a duel has been provoked by dishonorable conduct, the offender shall be liable to imprisonment in a penitentiary instead of confinement in a fortress, lately passed its second and third reading. It gives discretionary power to the courts to deprive the offender of his civil rights. This is the first occasion on which all the parties in the German Parliament have been united on a measure tending to discourage dueling. It is to be sincerely hoped that the Imperial Chancellor, in behalf of the government, will concur in this action of the parliament, and that a positive, unequivocal official frown and protest will be put upon this relic of barbarism. It might be a good idea for the German and all other national parliaments to discourage war as well as to forbid dueling, and settle questions for the individual and nation on the principles of righteousness and peace, remembering these words:

Vengeance is mine; I will repay. (Rom. 12: 19.)

Compulsory Public School Attendance

THERE are now only six States in the Union which have not laws compelling children under a specified age to attend school. It has been with difficulty that the passage of such laws has been secured, as so many parents think that they interfere with the principle of personal liberty. But the courts have not so held. To compel the attendance of children whose parents are too poor to keep them in school, some States have taken decided steps. In Michigan, if a parent cannot support a child of compulsory school age, the Board of Education may grant such relief by an appropriation for the whole school year, not more than three dollars a week to be granted for one child, nor more than $6 a week for the children of any one family. Oklahoma also has a law providing for similar compensation. The successful enforcement of compulsory education has long been an enviable feature of the German school system. Out of 5,754,000 children of school age in Prussia, in 1901, only 548 evaded attendance. The instruction of the child is of paramount importance to the individual and the nation. This fact is recognized by Moses:

And these words, which I command thee this day, shall be in thine heart; and thou shalt teach them diligently unto thy children. (Deut. 6: 6, 7.)

THOMAS A. EDISON JOHN BURROUGHS HENRY FORD

EDISON AND HIS GUESTS

THOMAS A. EDISON and family are spending a few weeks at their winter home at Fort Myers, Fla., having as their guests John Burroughs, America's much beloved naturalist, and Mr. and Mrs. Henry Ford. It is Mr. Edison's first visit to his Florida retreat in four years, and none of his guests has ever been as far south in the United States before. When asked if he was having a good time, Mr. Edison turned to his guests, saying "How is it, boys?" "We are having the time of our lives," replied Ford. "Never had so good a time," said the veteran Burroughs. "Even the alligators seem to know that Ford and I are strangers and are doing their best to amuse us." These men all came up from the bottom of the ladder to usefulness and honor, by lives of tireless industry. Having been enormous workers, they are illustrating the fact that rest and play, as well as work, are a law of life. Christ recognized the necessity of a period of vacation after incessant toil when he said: "Come ye yourselves apart into a desert place, and rest awhile: for there were many coming and going, and they had no leisure so much as to eat." (Mark 6: 31.)

Notable Shipment of Bibles

A THOUSAND Bibles, costing $1,367, and printed in the Gilbert Islands language, were sent from the Bible House of New York on a voyage of fifteen thousand miles to Sydney, Australia, there to be re-shipped to Ocean Island and Apaian in Micronesia. The preparation of the Gilbertese text was the loving labor of a lifetime devoted to the task by the famous missionary translator, the late Rev. Dr. Hiram Bingham. The Bibles are a free gift from the American Bible Society to its far South Pacific Mission. The books were soldered up in tin packages holding twenty Bibles each and these were put in fifty stout wooden boxes for protection on their long journey. The binders put poison in the covers to kill the insects. It would be well if some means could be devised to destroy the insects of doubt that gnaw and mutilate the text. Fortunately, the Bible in missionary lands is widely believed and faithfully taught. The great missionary success in the islands of the far-off Pacific fulfil the prediction of the apostle:

Be it known therefore unto you, that the salvation of God is sent unto the Gentiles, and that they will hear it. (Acts 28: 28.)

Pig's Eye Gives Sight

IT IS claimed that sight has been restored to the left eye of David Kane, nine months old, of Gettysburg, Pa., by the transfer of the cornea of a pig's eye to the eye of the child, at one of the hospitals in Baltimore. The cornea of the pig's eye was selected because it is said to more nearly resemble the human eye than that of any other animal. The child and the pig were placed under an anesthetic and the outer covering of the animal's eye was removed. It was quickly placed on the eye-ball of the child, and in a week's time the child's eye was clear and free from inflammation. When the bandage was removed from the eye, it was declared that the child followed the course of a lighted candle which was moved in front of him. Another test bringing out the fact more clearly is that the child winks his eyelid if a finger or small object is waved close to the eye. The movement of the eyelid is a natural one. It is likely that this restoration to sight will be permanent. There is apparently no end to the marvels of modern surgery. The Great Physician gave sight to the blind and spiritual vision to those whose moral maladies he had healed.

Unto many that were blind he gave sight. (Luke 7: 21.)

Four Saved by Boy

FOUR men started in a launch the other evening to cross Jamaica Bay, New York, from Canarsie to Rockaway Point, when their engine stopped and their boat was turned upside down in a terrible sea. Fred Schepper, twelve years old, of Sands Bay Inlet, called his mother to the window of their home and pointed to the men clinging to the bottom of the upset boat. They both ran to the dock, and, urged by his mother, the boy started out in a small flat-bottomed row-boat, into the boiling sea to the rescue of the imperiled men, half a mile away. The mother cried from the shore: "You can make it, Fred. There's four of them hanging on yet." One of the imperiled men swam to the boat and aided the boy in getting the other men into it. The rescued men wanted to take the oars, but Fred told them to sit still and trim the boat. Slowly he pulled his little, overloaded craft to shore, where his mother, father and a crowd welcomed the rescued. The gallant action is worthy of a place in the records of the highest heroism. This rescue has in it the spirit of the One who laid down his life to save others from the wreck of sin on earth's stormy sea:

For the Son of man is come to seek and to save that which was lost. (Luke 19: 10.)

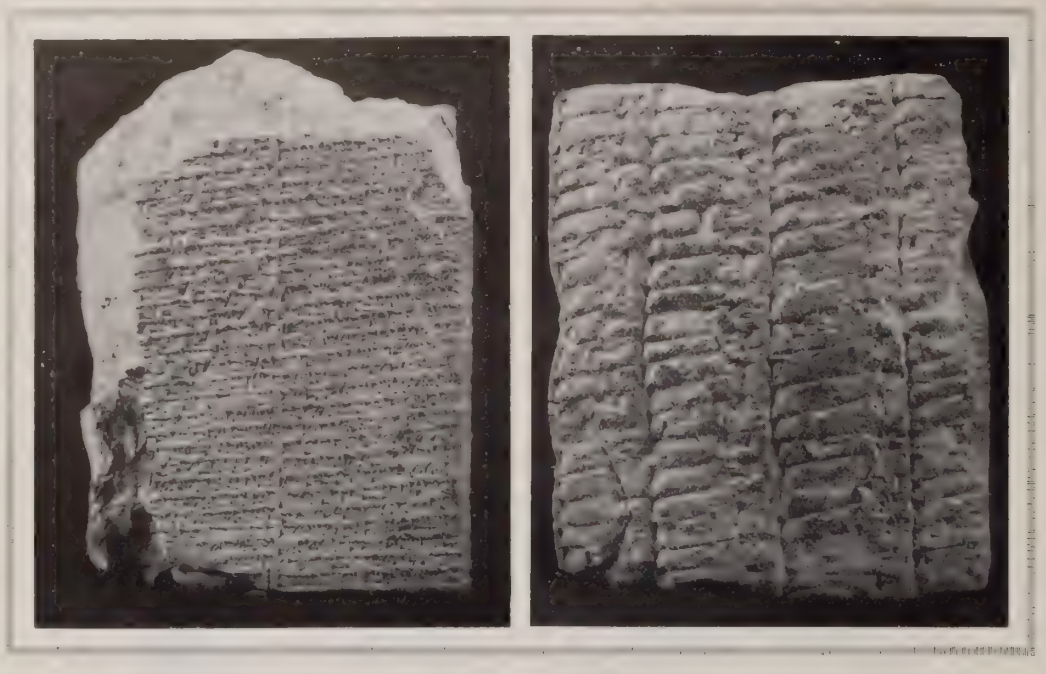
NIPPUR YIELDING ITS SECRETS

THE REMAINS OF A GREAT LITURGICAL AND SCHOLASTIC LIBRARY 4,500 YEARS OLD

BY PROFESSOR STEPHEN H. LANGDON, OXFORD

DURING the recent months of September and October, I had the opportunity of examining the collection of cuneiform tablets in the Museum of the University of Pennsylvania, the greater number of which were excavated at Nippur. The university had already caused to be published several volumes of the Nippur texts, all of which I had carefully studied, and these specimens showed that the university possessed the remains of a great liturgical and scholastic library.

Nippur, situated nearly at the geographical center of ancient Sumer, the Shinar of the Bible, was one of the oldest cities in the world. It was probably the first capital of the Sumerian people, and certainly their most important center of religious teaching. We know that the daily temple services of Babylon and Nineveh originated in these ancient Sumerian temples, for the collection in Philadelphia possesses the original litanies. We know, too, that a cloister of liturgists and theologians was attached to the great temple of Marduk in Babylon, a school which conducted the daily services, edited the liturgies and did other learned work from the 6th to the 1st centuries B.C.



A LITURGY FROM TEMPLE OF EN-LIL

SCHOOL LESSON WRITTEN ON TABLET

There can be scarcely any doubt that the great temple of En-Lil, the earth god, at Nippur possessed a cloister of this kind, perhaps as early as 3000 B.C. At any rate, we have the remains of such a theological school in the tablets of Philadelphia, most liturgical texts of which belong to the centuries 2500-2100 B.C. It would be difficult to overestimate the influence which this temple cloister has had upon religious theory and practice, particularly in Babylonia and Assyria, and surely more or less upon Judaism, Greek religion and Christianity. Here the forms of all subsequent litanies, hymns and chants largely originated. Here the great doctrines of the Word or Logos, the Mater Dolorosa and her dying Son, the divine character of the sacred writings and many other principles later universally accepted as the foundation for great beliefs, were anticipated.

I found the collection particularly rich in unpublished material of this kind. It seems to be especially rich in liturgical panegyrics, sung in the temples in the cults of deified kings of the dynasties of Ur and Isin. Emperor-worship forms, so far as I can see, the most important group of religious texts in Philadelphia. From this numerous group of liturgies, chanted in the temples in honor of the deified reigning king, we learn that the doctrine of a royal Messiah was highly developed and passionately believed in by the Sumerian nation. The element of prophecy is lacking, it is true; but the divine birth and mission of their kings are chanted in long, melodious services. The Semitic peoples who received this heritage of doctrine and belief and passed it on to Western nations did not adopt the doctrine of the divine birth of kings; nor did they continue the liturgies of the emperor-worship. Still, a considerable body of this doctrine did persist in Babylonia and Assyria.

I was surprised to find in the Nippur collection a large number of grammatical texts, tablets on which children had written their lessons in phonetics, orthography, geography, natural science and botany. The temple cloister evidently kept school also, or at any rate certain of the order were designated as ordinary teachers of boys. It is altogether remarkable to see how these schoolmen of forty-two centuries ago had already reduced the human voice to a phonetic system and reproduced it by signs.

All the essential elements of an alphabet are found there, and can be exemplified by numerous tablets. One of the tablets reproduced here shows on the obverse a boy's spelling lesson, part of which he has erased while the clay was still soft. His lesson for that day consisted of words for jewels. On the reverse the boy has written his alphabet in the somewhat cumbrous fashion of those ancient scholars. Thus we have mu-ma-mi, lu-la-li, bu-ba-bi, etc. The second tablet shows a liturgy chanted in the worship of a deified king.

BISHOP WARNE ON "DR. SHASTRI"

A CONCLUSIVE REPLY TO THE LATTER'S ATTACK ON FOREIGN MISSIONS

IN NOVEMBER last, the attention of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD was called by a correspondent in Columbus, Ohio, to a published report of an interview in Minneapolis with Dr. Keshava Shastri, of Benares, India, in which the latter was represented as saying: "If Americans knew how much money is being spent by missionaries in India and how little is accomplished, the donations would stop at once. . . . Christianity has gained no headway in India. . . . The missionary lives like a lord with a retinue of servants!"

These extraordinary charges, which were widely circulated at the time, were referred by THE CHRISTIAN HERALD to Bishop Frank W. Warne, of the Methodist Episcopal Church of Southern Asia, with headquarters at Lucknow, India. We requested the bishop to consider the charges and to send such an answer as was justified in the light of his own knowledge and experience. Our letter reached Bishop Warne in the midst of the Annual Conferences; but on their conclusion he took the matter up and has now forwarded to this journal an account of the actual condition of things as they are in India at the present time. It should be added that the bishop's extensive personal acquaintance with missionary work throughout Asia qualifies him eminently as an authority, and his reply to the hostile criticisms of Dr. Shastri can therefore be accepted as conclusive. We give his letter in full without comment, as it speaks for itself:

"DEAR EDITOR CHRISTIAN HERALD: I have received your letter setting forth the criticisms that are being made in America by Dr. Keshava Shastri, of Benares, on missions and missionaries in India. First, as to Dr. Keshava Shastri: I sent both your letter and the one you enclosed to one of the best known citizens of Benares, and asked him to let me know about the doctor's career in Benares. I have received a reply saying, 'I have never heard of Dr. Keshava Shastri and have inquired and have not found any one else who does.' The doctor who is posing in America as a great doctor from Benares, India, is to this extent unknown in the city from which he claims to come. Missionaries, who are driving the Gospel plowshare through customs, traditions, prejudices and falsehoods that have hardened through the centuries, like other reformers, expect to be misrepresented by those opposed to their efforts and they assume that their friends and supporters understand that.

"It should, however, be understood that as long as American audiences pay large sums for the privilege of listening to lectures by strangers from India of whom they know nothing, except what the lecturers claim for themselves, so long will the missionaries be misrepresented. That kind of lecturing will go on so long as there is money in it for the lecturer, for the English-educated Indian is usually a very fluent talker, and to deliver such lectures in America is an easy way to make money. It would be the 'shoe on the other foot' if such American audiences could hear what such lecturers say about them and Christianity and Christian civilization in America when they return to India.

"Mission Houses in India.—The millions of India live in little mud huts with a roof of thatch. Many missionaries and several societies have tried to have their missionaries live, in India's heat, in such huts as does the average Indian villager, but the loss of life has been appalling—so much so that practically all missionary societies have concluded that it does not pay to have their missionaries die about the time they begin to use the vernacular of the people among whom they are to work. It is an established fact in missionary experience that a good missionary's influence increases in proportion to the years of his service, because the people learn to love and trust him, and a body of Indian workers gathers about him and adopts his spirit, and he multiplies himself increasingly with added years.

"I have in mind one such missionary who, not knowing how to care for himself, almost died in his first term of service, but his life was saved by being sent home and kept there for several years. On his return with restored health, he was sent into a district, largely alone, and has now been there over a quarter of a century and has baptized from among the people over fifty thousand converts. There is a mass movement on now in his district which looks toward hundreds of thousands of Christians in the near future. During all these years he has cared for his health by living in a comfortable house, suited to a white man in an Indian climate, and is therefore now in vigorous health, going on with his work. Because of his long experience, he is creating a Christian literature suited to the needs of the Indian church. Would it have paid to have saved the price of a suitable house and to have compelled that man to live in a village hut and let him die?

"On the other hand, I have in mind a young man, whom I knew well, who had an exceptionally strong constitution but who attempted to live as does the Indian, and in less than three years left this country so broken as to never return. I could fill your paper with stories of long-service missionaries, and I could also fill it with stories of short-service missionaries, living in unsuitable houses, ignoring the dangers of the Indian climate to a white man. Is there any question about which is the wiser course?

"The British Government has experimented long and at great cost of life on how to keep white people well in India's heat. Most missions have profited by its experience and experiments. Our houses are usually built of brick, which is cheap in India, with large rooms and high ceilings, to keep the heat from the head. The roof, in northern India, is usually made of cement and flat, and we sleep on it the greater part of the year. The floors are made of broken brick, beaten solid from the ground up to the plinth; and no wood is used in India for mission houses, except for doors and windows, because the wood that will withstand the ravages of the white ants is more expensive than steel. Therefore steel beams are used in the newer houses. The sides of a house most exposed to the sun are usually surrounded by a veranda to prevent the walls from becoming heated when the thermometer stands in

New Banking System Districts

THE organization committee of the new federal reserve banking system has announced the twelve districts and cities in which reserve banks will be located. They are in order: Boston, New York, Philadelphia, Cleveland, Richmond, Atlanta, Chicago, St. Louis, Minneapolis, Kansas City, Dallas and San Francisco, the districts being contiguous to these cities in areas from 39,865 square miles about Philadelphia, to 693,658 about San Francisco. The banks within each district must provide a minimum capital of $4,000,000 for the central bank. The total capital that has thus far been subscribed is over $100,000,000. The administrative board will next be appointed.

Panama Canal Zone Organized

WITHOUT special ceremonies, Colonel George W. Goethals inaugurated the new régime in the Panama Canal Zone on April 1, the Panama Canal Commission, of which Colonel Goethals was chairman, going out of existence. The new and permanent form of government includes seven departments, each with a chief officer. All employees of the commission were retained. On the same date Colonel Goethals's co-worker, General William C. Gorgas, who, while abroad, was made surgeon-general of the army in recognition of his services as chief health officer of the Canal, arrived home from an extensive tour of investigation of sanitary conditions in South Africa.

Destructive Fire in Florida

AT. AUGUSTINE, Fla., was swept by a fire, April 2, which destroyed two blocks in the heart of the town on the bayshore. Hotels, the court house, a theater, and many residences were burned, the loss being estimated at nearly one million. Guests of the hotels barely escaped with their lives, many being rescued by voluntary life-savers and firemen; some were injured. It was necessary to summon the State militia to prevent looting.

New York State's Floods

THE annual flood in the Hudson Valley caused by spring freshets has done much damage at Schenectady, Amsterdam, Troy, Albany and other points. Merchants on the river front have removed goods and many families vacated their homes. Ice jams that carried away bridges have been reported at several points. The waters were still rising on April 3, causing widespread apprehension.

The Tolls Repeal Fight

THE fight to repeal the exemption clause in the Panama Canal bill engaged the Senate on April 1, after the House had passed the repeal by a vote of 247 to 162; 23 Republicans in favor, 93 opposed, 7 not voting; 220 Democrats in favor, 52 opposed, 16 not voting; 3 Progressives in favor, 17 opposed, and one Independent in favor. The debate in the House attracted immense throngs. The bill has become a political issue, and it is predicted that it will influence the coming congressional elections. Attacks upon the President's integrity were indignantly resented by him, and intimations of truckling to England are not seriously received. The Senate is inclined to delay action and to insist on being informed by the President on his reasons, outside of the treaty itself, for insisting on the repeal as referred to in his address to Congress urging this action. The opposition in the Senate is strong, but the passage of the bill is confidently expected.

Three Centuries of Manhattan

NEW YORK CITY is remaining calm in the midst of a mammoth 300th anniversary that may continue through next August. The long event commemorates the granting of the first commerce charter to this port. On March 27 last two full-blooded Indians and two descendants of the first Dutch settlers, dressed for the parts, enacted the original sale of the island of Manhattan by the Senecas three hundred years before to Dutch traders for twenty-four dollars' worth of trinkets. In the brief ceremony last month, watches, lockets, and beads changed hands, and likewise a facsimile of the original deed given by the Indians. Thus was begun the elaborate anniversary which the New York Commercial Tercentenary Commission has planned for the city.

New Plan to End Wars

A CHURCHMAN of Sweden, Rev. Albert Wickman, is said to be touring that country enlisting everybody in a "White Army," whose operations on the field of war will consist in hurling itself between opposing forces. As no army would fire upon such a body, the battle thus invaded would at once cease. Thus war will become impossible. General Wickman has not yet given out all the details.

England's Labor Troubles

IN THE excitement attending the Home Rule question, the recent grave labor troubles in South Africa and the consequent deportation of ten strike leaders by Prime Minister of the South African Union, General Botha, a former Boer leader, have been somewhat overlooked. It is probable, however, that labor organizations in England will press the government for a complete investigation of the circumstances of the deportation, which aroused widespread criticism at the time. General Botha represented that a labor uprising amounting to a revolution impended and could be met only by his drastic act. The question of the employment by the government of armed forces enters into the subject; in connection with the army's attitude toward Ulster comparison was freely made between liberty of conscience to officers in a political crisis and the reverse condition as regards privates in case of strike disorders.

Sailors Perish by Freezing

LATE on April 2, word was received of the loss of the sealing steamer Newfoundland, crushed by ice drifts off Belle Isle, and the possible death of most of her crew of 150. Some escaped on ice floes, from which they were rescued by steamers, which also picked up several bodies. It is feared that other vessels of the fleet may have met with a similar fate. Survivors were exposed to a terrific gale and blizzard until rescued, and many are expected to die from the effects.

Women May Advise Parliament

TO GIVE women a direct voice in British legislation, irrespective of the suffrage, a committee is advocated by Mrs. Humphry Ward and others, according to the New York Times, to be composed of members of Parliament and representative women social workers, to advise upon all proposed legislation especially affecting the welfare of women and children, woman suffrage excluded. The committee will be nominated from members of the leading political parties and from both suffrage and anti-suffrage women's organizations. The plan has been developing all winter and an early public announcement is looked for.

Methodists Consider Their Aged

EFFORTS are being made within the Methodist body to create a retired-minister fund by taxing pulpit salaries of $1,000 and more. The annual conferences held at the close of March were favorable to the fund but not to the tax, the majority of delegates believing a voluntary proportionate contribution would be best. The New York East Conference abolished its evangelistic commission in favor of more local initiative in evangelism.

SAVING OTHERS THE SUPREME JOY*

SUNDAY SCHOOL LESSON BY DR. AND MRS. WILBUR F. CRAFTS

JESUS was not afraid of putting too many stories in his sermons and lessons. This lesson contains two of four stories that Jesus used in one sermon to proud Pharisees to teach them God was more pitiful than they for the men and women who had "lost" their manhood and womanhood but were repentant and willing to be brought back to right living. First comes the story of the lost sheep, then that of the lost coin, then the prodigal—all these picturing lost men and women saved by the Father.

"What man of you having a hundred sheep, if he lose one of them." Here we see one of the most characteristic doctrines of Christianity, the sacred individuality of every human being. In a Christian home, though there be many children, how fondly the hearts of parents go out for the one that is weakest mentally or most wayward morally? How many mothers, with good children about them, are weeping their hearts away inwardly, and seeking far and wide, regardless of expense, for the girl who has disappeared! Surely one lesson to learn from the story of the wandering sheep is that parents should guard their sheep, and especially the lambs, more carefully, by warning them of the wolves that will prowl about them, seeking to destroy them. Many a boy or girl goes wrong through ignorance of the perils ahead, but more because parents allow children to go forth unguarded as lambs far beyond the range of parental watchcare.

"And when he hath found him he layeth him on his shoulders rejoicing." The emphasis of Christ is on the Christlike passion to save the lost. The March number of Association Men gives several new stories that exactly represent the thought of those parables. Mr. John W. Ross of Montreal tells of a rich man who subscribed $10,000 for a Y. M. C. A. building and gave the following explanation of his generous gift:

"I left this city where I was brought up some years ago determined to make my future in the West, but I ended up in Chicago, and there fell on evil days. Through my own fault I lost all my friends and finally my position. I was disheartened, down and out, and knew not where to turn and in a condition hardly to care what happened. When hope had almost gone a young man took hold of me; he brought me what I needed—encouragement—and the Gospel of a new start. He stayed with me until I was in condition to work; he secured employment for me and watched over me until I had a new grip of myself. You know the result: I came back to this city and I have made good. That young man was Walter T. Hart, then of the Chicago Young Men's Christian Association, and later the general secretary of the Winnipeg Association. I made up my mind that if I was ever in a position I would try to repay in some small way the association for what it has done for me. That is why I signed that card, and I am glad of this opportunity."

And Sherwood Eddy tells the following two stories of bringing in lost sheep: "On a recent railway journey on the Pennsylvania Limited I went into the barber shop. As he was cutting my hair the barber told me he was in a wreck recently. I said: 'So was I.' He said: 'I nearly lost my life.' I said: 'So did I,' and added, 'Were you ready if the end had come?' 'No,' he said, 'I was not.' I said: 'Are you ready now, are you right with God to-day?' 'No,' he said, 'I am not.' I said: 'Will you not decide to-day? You have been drifting and postponing the issue for twenty years and you stand to-day within one step of the kingdom; two words would make you a Christian. Simply say, "I will" to God.' He wavered, but did not seem ready to take the step. After I had returned to my berth the barber followed me through the train and said, 'I cannot get away from it. God has spoken to me and I have come to say "I will" and I say it now.' Then and there he gave his heart to Christ. We said goodby and parted. Since then I have been receiving letters from this man. He is growing so fast in his Christian life that I can hardly keep pace with him. Witnessing in the missions of New York and Chicago, at both ends of his run, he is winning others for Christ. Though an ignorant man, with little education, and though his letters are fearfully and wonderfully made so far as grammar, punctuation and spelling are concerned, they overflow with joy.

"Here was a man saved by two words. But I heard only this week of a man who was saved by one word. Three men were selling tickets here in the city of New York. They were all quite young men. One was an agnostic, one was a slave to liquor, and the third was a Jew. My friend, the secretary, began speaking to the agnostic through the bars of the ticket window. At last this agnostic fought his way through his doubts and gave his heart to Christ. His whole life was transformed by his new relation to Christ. The man who was a slave to drink saw the change in his life. He had been out on an all-night spree. Under deep conviction of sin he, too, was longing for this new life. As they were selling tickets at the window to the crowd that was pouring into the train these two men were talking together. The man who had been on the spree asked the converted agnostic if he would stay down that night and show him how to become a Christian. 'Frank,' he replied, 'I have to attend a prayer meeting, but I do not need to go and spend a night with you. Say "Yes" to Jesus Christ. Do not wait till to-night; do it now right while you are selling the tickets, even in the midst of this rush.' 'All right, Will, I do it now.' Then and there he became a Christian. Within a month this man's life was so changed that all were marveling at the power of his life. Both these men longed to enter into Christian work and resign their positions on the railway. But the railway officials refused to let them go, saying that they were the most successful men on the line in selling tickets. The official did not know the secret of their success. Inside the ticket window, invisible to the other passengers, the former agnostic had placed this verse, 'Who being reviled, reviled not again.' These men did their duty and never returned an angry answer to irate passengers. Here was the secret of their success. This was why the railway would not spare them. But at last for the higher cause they were released. The converted Jew is still witnessing to Christ as his Messiah. The agnostic is a religious work director and has won hundreds of men to Christ. The former slave to drink and sin has won his thousands and is to-day a well-known State secretary of the Associations."

THE LOST PIECE OF SILVER
By Sir J. E. Millais, Bart., P.R.A.

Studying with this parable of the lost sheep the other parable of the Good Shepherd in John 10, we see Christ as both the Door to the sheepfold by which the sheep enter and the Shepherd who goes out to seek afar those who will not come but must be brought. The church is called to follow Christ in both ways: not only to open its doors without any aristocratic bars to all souls, but also to "highway and hedge them." The "Go-to-Church Sunday" of these days will not be much of a success unless it is preceded by Church-go-to-men days. Dr. Carroll's church statistics for 1913 make a better showing than previous recent years, but the total gain of members is only "one and eight-tenths per cent.," which means that it takes more than a hundred shepherds to bring to the fold two wandering sheep. The Bible speaks of one chasing a thousand, but in some churches it takes a thousand to bring in one. Oh that we might get such a passion to save men from sin as the St. Bernard dog had who went forth after every snowstorm in the Alps to save men who had been buried in the snow, until he died in saving the thirty-seventh. It was his supreme joy to save men. It is doubtful if any man can be saved who desires only to save himself. Our appeal should be, Be saved yourself that you may save others. "Saved to serve!"

"What woman having ten pieces of silver, if she lose one doth not light a lamp and sweep the house?" All through the Bible a light symbolizes the Holy Spirit. (John 1: 9; Acts 2: 3; Rev. 1: 12.) And all through the Bible a woman symbolizes the church. (Ps. 45; Isa. 62: 5; Matt. 25: 1; John 3: 29; Rev. 22: 17.) The Spirit-filled church will seek and save lost souls, symbolized, in their immortal preciousness and because they bear the image of God, by the coin that is of precious metal and is stamped with the image of the emperor. Silver coins are used as head ornaments by Oriental women, and for this reason especially the loss of one coin was serious, as the beauty of the whole ornament was marred. It mars the beauty and harmony of God's world to have one soul out of place. "God has a plan for every man," and to fail to fit into it means sin and sorrow. The Spirit-filled church must seek for every lost soul.

Here is another story from Association Men that exactly interprets the story of the lost coin recovered, in terms of modern Christian work for boys: The Juvenile Court judge of Detroit, a man so keenly eager with boys that he has taken youngsters in the rough into his home for weeks to give them a start, said to his friend, a secretary of the Association, "No, it's no use. That boy is bad, he is a liar. He will have to go to the reform school." This particular boy of the streets had been arrested and given so many chances that even this judge had lost all hope for him. He said it with the sadness of tone that we can imagine the Master used when he said, "How often would I have gathered you—but ye would not." But the secretary said, "No, let me have a try at him." Working with the secretary was a man who had offered to give a complete outfit to any boy who needed "a chance." So he took this "street brat" into the bathroom. It required several scrubbings with hot water to remove the caked dirt. When he was given a hair cut, new, clean, fresh, everything, no one would recognize that gamin of the streets who had lied and stolen and run away, hectored policemen, slept in barrels and defied all authority. The secretary felt for this boy as a son and the boy understood. The love driven out of this boy's life by a drunken father and hounding police soon rose responsive to love. One day in a burst of affection and tears the youngster threw his arms around the secretary's neck and kissed him as his own son might. In the Association's boys' day-school where he worked day by day (the public schools had refused him) the teacher noted a card on the corner of his desk, which read, "Leave me alone, don't bother me, this is my chance." That was four years ago. The intervening years have been spent in an English school where the boy worked on the farm as well as at his desk.

He is a Christian, an athlete and a winner. He has worked vacations in places of responsibility where he saved every cent but car fare and is now at a preparatory school. He is using "his chance" to the limit. That is better than the reform school, but it cost blood. It was no machine reform business.

Both these parables of lost souls recovered by those who have Christ's passion to seek and save the lost recall the beautiful poem of Walter Malone, correcting the false parables of opportunity:

They do me wrong who say I come no more
When once I knock and fail to find you in;
For every day I stand outside your door,
And bid you wake and rise to fight and win.

Art thou a mourner? Rouse thee from thy spell;
Art thou a sinner? Sins may be forgiven;
Each morning gives thee wings to flee from hell,
Each night a star to guide thy feet to heaven.

CO-OPERATIVE LIFE-SAVING IN CHINA

IF FIVE men carry a woman from a burning building, which man saves her life? But what does that matter? Each man does his duty and a life is saved. We have a proposition regarding the saving of lives in China to lay before our readers. First, however, a few words about those lives.

The lives of missionaries are not under consideration. True, their very lives are daily in danger. Writing from Hinghua, Fukien, Rev. F. S. Carson recently said: "After more than a year of bandit outbreaks we have been enabled to return to our work. When I left here last July, I expected to be gone only two weeks, for a little rest on the mountain to which Mrs. Carson and Baby Lewis had gone. Ever since the first of August we have been trying to get a settlement of the bandit situation, and to get from the government some assurance of future protection both for ourselves and for our Chinese Christians. Only last week (February) did we succeed."

But missionaries are little concerned for their own safety. Their great and constant effort is to bring others into the peace that comes to those who trust the Christian's God. When dangers gather about the mission and threaten the native converts in their homes, the missionary's first thought is for the stability of the faith of those who have put their trust in that God. And what a heart-weight that must be when all around are fearsome men and women who have turned from their former gods, forsaken their native customs, and now, endangered, hold out imploring hands to the messenger of this new God—so new and even yet so strange.

It is not so bad when the missionaries have men and women to deal with, but when their charges are little children who cannot reason, who can only trust; and when the danger that threatens is that of being thrust out of the sheltering arms into which they were drawn, being orphans, thrust out in helplessness and hopelessness to face a heartless world alone; when that is the situation—would you care to be the missionary who daily prays and waits, prays and waits, still desperately putting off the awful moment when these trustful little ones must be abandoned, unless help from the homeland comes in time? Do you think that you would care to be that missionary?

Just try to picture yourself in that situation. Here is your mission station. Perhaps your staff includes your own family, one or two other Americans, and several native helpers. You have had what you considered the good fortune of receiving some ninety or a hundred orphan children, rescued from famine, from bandits, from the cruelty of heartless relatives, to be trained by you for Christian service. They are of different ages, for all did not come to you at the same time. A few are already reaching the age of self-reliance, and show every sign of having given their hearts to Christ. Most are still bright little tots prattling their daily happiness and making evident progress toward intelligent young womanhood and young manhood.

The support for these children has been undertaken by various agencies: your church board or some local church society; perhaps twenty have been taken up by the CHRISTIAN HERALD Family. You apportion your income as equitably as possible—thankful that a number of the children have individual patrons—but every month, every week, perhaps in some periods every day you face the terror of being obliged to say to one or three or a score of those trustful, eager, ambitious young hearts: "Children, our friends in the great happy land of America do not understand how much we need their help in taking care of you, and try as we will we find we cannot make their gifts of money pay for the care for so many of you. So to-day after breakfast a number of you will have to say goodby."

Just picture yourself in that position, won't you?

There are many thousands of orphan children being reared for Christian lives by missionaries in China. The CHRISTIAN HERALD Family has provided for a great many during the years that are past, and many such children have left the missionaries' care to prove themselves worthy disciples of Christ in the midst of their heathen surroundings. The number now dependent upon the CHRISTIAN HERALD Family is a thousand and five. It costs twenty dollars per annum for the maintenance of one child. A host of readers have helped to keep up a fund for general distribution in this work by their gifts of a dollar, two dollars, five dollars. There are several hundred patrons providing annually for individual children.

Despite the always generous response, we are falling short of the needed amount to keep all these children under missionary care. And now we wish to suggest a huge co-operative effort for the training of these lives. This is a call that can be answered by Sunday school classes, young people's societies, ladies' sewing circles, and other organizations.

It is a proven fact that nothing is so stimulating to organized Christian work as having a representative in the missionary field who regularly reports to that organization. Here is an opportunity for educating a child who may otherwise be lost to Christian influences, for active Christian work in a heathen land. All that is needed is that a number of people, each of whom feels unable to do much in such a work, shall co-operate in providing for the maintenance of one child by combining their smaller gifts and sending them as a unit in the name of their society. Wherever such a sum amounts to $20 one child by name will be designated as a ward of that society. And regular reports of the child's progress will be made by the missionary in charge to that society as long as the annual maintenance is provided.

And where societies are unable to do as much as that, tremendous good can be done by canvassing members for even very small sums and sending the total gift as a unit from that organization even though it be but a few dollars. Individual gifts of any sum are warmly welcomed in this cause, but many may take more satisfaction in helping to make possible one good-sized gift from their circle of Christian friends after this manner. We wish to encourage all our readers to have a part in this splendid work, and are hopeful that this co-operative plan will meet with wide acceptance. Address Chinese Orphan Fund, THE CHRISTIAN HERALD, Bible House, New York.

UPON HIS THRONE

LORD JESUS, in the garden,
With Easter glory fair,
Poor weeping Mary's pardon
Forever sealing there;
For pain at sad defection,
For many a broken vow,
Joy of thy resurrection
Bring nearer to us now.

By Galilee appearing
At breaking of the morn;
Thy sad apostles cheering
With life and hope new born;
To us, with spirits tired,
Who fruitless efforts know,
Jesus, our hearts' Desired,
Thy risen glory show.

Through Olivet's cloud broken,
Ascending far in air;
Thy last commission spoken
To thy disciples there;
From mortal sight though parted,
Thee conquering Lord we own;
How can we be faint-hearted,
With thee upon thy throne?

Look at These Tempting Grains

These toasted, steam-exploded grains—crisp, brown, inviting—puffed to eight times normal size.

Shaped as they grew, but changed, by this strange process, into thin-walled, airy bubbles.

The very sight of Puffed Grains is enticing.

One wants to taste them. Then these fragile morsels, with their almond flavor, reveal an unforgetable delight. The taste is like toasted nuts.

Mark Their History

Then think that each grain was puffed in this way by a hundred million steam explosions.

Inside of each granule a trifle of moisture was turned to super-heated steam. This was done in huge guns, then the guns were shot. And every food granule was thus blasted to pieces.

Not to create these myriad cells. Not to make grains which fairly melt in the mouth. But to make every atom digestible. That never was done before. And that is the sole object of this curious process invented by Prof. Anderson.

Beyond all their fascinations lies the fact that these are the best-cooked cereal foods ever created.

Puffed Wheat, 10c
Puffed Rice, 15c
Except in Extreme West

Note the facts which make these foods unique.

They are whole grains made wholly digestible. One may eat them any hour without tax on the stomach.

Served with sugar and cream, or mixed with fruit, they have delicious crispness and a nut-like taste.

Served in bowls of milk, like bread or crackers, they are dainty wafers, toasted, porous, thin.

And they are used like nut meats in a dozen ways—in candy making, in frosting cake and as garnish to ice cream. Or, crisped in butter, children eat them dry like peanuts.

Every day, in some way, let your folks enjoy one of these two delightful foods.

BISHOP WARNE ON "DR. SHASTRI"

the sun at from 140 to 175 degrees. Such a house built of burnt brick with steel girders may last for a century, requiring little repairs. Long experience has proved this to be much better business management than cheaper houses, requiring constant repairs. Mission houses are usually built larger than is necessary for the resident family because in all our out-stations there are no hotels, and in the city their cost is entirely beyond the purse of the missionary. Therefore, each mission house needs to have extra room to care for missionary visitors to the station, visiting friends from home, who are always more than welcome, and to provide accommodation for all our conference gatherings, Epworth League, Sunday school, and others.

BISHOP FRANK W. WARNE

"The reason for the compounds, or enclosures around the missionary's house, is often misunderstood by tourists. Often the missionary house is built not in the heart of the village or native town but apart a little by itself. If those who may be disposed to criticize were here all the year as are the missionaries, and had families and lived where leprosy stalked abroad and where at any time there is liable to be an outbreak of smallpox, cholera, plague, Indian fevers, dysentery and other diseases, would they not want to have a little protection? Then, if you add to that the thing often happening in India, namely, finding centipedes and snakes in the rooms and bathrooms, is some such protection too luxurious?

"As to the furnishing of the houses: I have spoken with three missionary ladies who remind me that these dusty, boardless floors are usually covered with grass matting or a cotton print carpet, costing about four or five cents a yard. In short, they say, if the whole furniture in the average missionary's home, including carpets, were sold it would not bring one hundred dollars. Nevertheless, surrounded as we are with tropical flowers and foliage and with compounds around our houses, we have some compensation unknown to the average family at home.

"The house in which the missionary lives is not the real problem. Does it not cost something to be absent from loved ones at home? To surrender ambition, and work on unknown to friends in India's climate, surrounded by the ever-present opposition of heathenism, even inside hot, large, bare, red brick walls? I am reminded of a story of a missionary on furlough talking with an old classmate, and the classmate said, 'I was called to be a missionary and I wonder why I am not.' The missionary answered, 'The explanation is easy.' 'What is it?' 'You didn't go,' replied the missionary. May I suggest that any good conscientious soul, who has been led to believe the missionary lives too well, shall say goodby to all at home and 'go,' or else trust the consecration and wisdom of those who have gone?

"The Servant Question.—It is the custom in India to have servants and caste distinctions, making it necessary to have several, but they do not cost any more than one servant at home; and let it always be remembered they are not paid for by a special appropriation from the Missionary Society, but out of the missionary's salary. To keep the house as cool as possible the cook house is usually a small building some distance from the house, and for a white woman to daily do her cooking, thus exposed to the heat, would soon cost her life. Further, does the church send women, either married or unmarried, to the non-Christian world to spend their time peeling potatoes, washing dishes and dusting houses? Servants doing all this, give the lady missionary all her time for the real work. After over a quarter of a century in India, and because of the servants who help, it is my deliberate judgment that missionaries of both sexes put in more hours daily at their real work than can be done at home. Shall we dismiss our servants and do their work and not be able to give all there is in us, and of us, to the study of a strange language and our legitimate work? What say those who send us?

"'Wasted Work,' 'No Headway,' is what Dr. Shastri is reported to have said about mission work in India. Is this wilful ignorance or misrepresentation? The fact is that our Methodist Episcopal Church alone has over 300,000 baptized Christians in India, and is now refusing more applicants for baptism for lack of teachers and preachers than she is baptizing. Taking all missions together, according to the census of 1911, the Christian community in India as a whole increased during the preceding ten years by thirty-three and one-third per cent., or to be exact, from 3,000,000 to 4,000,000, whereas the population of the country increased by only thirteen per cent. In the Punjab Christianity increased 350 per cent. in a decade.

"Further than this, the social and religious life of the Hindus is built on the caste system. Now, the great movements are among the lower castes, but it is my confident expectation that the movement will extend up through the castes. In fact we have in our mission alone already converts from over seventy higher castes, and over sixty workers in our mission who are Brahman converts, and over six hundred workers not Brahmans, yet from the castes higher than those from whom we have the great mass of our converts. Note that the above figures represent only those who have become workers, which would approximately give us a Christian community of over six thousand from the higher castes; that is, by estimating that one out of ten have become mission workers from among our high-caste converts.

"Not only so, but we have now in our mission alone, in India, from Mohammedanism over one thousand converts, and over one hundred workers, and some of them have proven themselves to be our most effective Indian preachers, and have been the means of bringing thousands to Christ. I have seen, in twenty-six years, our mission grow from under ten thousand to three hundred thousand, and the outlook is brighter than ever. What more need be written?"

LORD'S DAY SUNDAY

APRIL 19 is "Lord's Day Sunday." The week beginning April 19 has been set aside by a number of the leading religious bodies for prayer in behalf of a better Sabbath observance. Many pastors will preach upon this subject at some time during that week.

This Lord's Day Sunday was first observed more than a quarter of a century ago in response to a call issued by the Society for Promoting the Due Observance of the Lord's Day, which is recognized as representing the Established Church of England. All ministers were invited to present to their congregations the subject of Sabbath observance, on the Sunday after Easter. The suggestion meets with growing favor, and will undoubtedly be more generally observed this year.

A LITTLE ANGEL OF THE MOUNTAINS

haven had almost been reached. The welcome was ready for him, but he himself was not there. Now, instead of being adopted by some childless family of pioneers who might have loved him and cared for him, Olaf was alone on an unfrequented railroad track in the mountains of western Colorado.

What a dot of humanity it was down by the railroad track among the great peaks towering toward the distant sky on every side! He had suffered more in his previous abandonments, but he had never been so lonely in the course of his whole life as at that very moment. For, save the trees and the flowers and a bird or two floating far overhead in the clear sunshine, he was the only living thing within his own ken. Little boys, at any rate, do not find the loneliness of the crowd so great as the loneliness of nature. It has been said by philosophers, who have as a rule enjoyed but a one-sided experience of the matter, that to be alone in a crowd is to be more solitary than to be alone in a desert. Little Olaf had never heard that saying, but if he had he would have disputed it that morning.

It is usual with the marooned to take stock of earthly possessions. He had with him the clothes that he wore; a few pennies which he had sedulously retained, resisting all sorts of temptations to spend them by the way; a four-bladed jackknife with three broken blades. That was all, except—the flowers in his arms.

"Well, anyway," said Olaf aloud with a slight yet charming accent it is not necessary to reproduce here, "I got these."

As stout and brave a heart beat in his little breast as had throbbed beneath the armor of the great old seaking whose name by odd chance he bore, or had been enjoyed by his boldest viking ancestor. And that little heart was backed by a clean soul. For all his years were but eleven, he had enjoyed abundant opportunity to dabble in wickedness. Chances for that come early and in plenty to the waifs of the streets. And the bigger the city, the more crowded the streets, the greater the opportunity. Perhaps the memory of that white-faced mother and of that white-shrouded father had stood him in good stead. He was soul-wise beyond his years, as is every city boy thrown on his own responsibilities, but pure and sweet almost beyond the possibilities of his life.

Like flower, like child! You could see that in the frank blue eyes that would look straight at you, not furtively, from under his tousled head of bright blond hair. There was a little humorous curve to his firm lips, a pleasant homeliness to his ruddy, freckled face that won hearts.

Olaf's absence was not noticed until the train had proceeded for an hour or more on its winding way. The head of the party was indeed just taking stock of his numerous charges when the accident came. The train wreck enters not into our story save as a detail, and its causes and consequences need not be particularly inquired into, save to note that the unfortunate guardian of the miscellaneous lot of small boys was sent swiftly into eternity together with some of the personally conducted little folk. The list of names of all in the party was lost in a burned car, and when long afterward the band was traced from the home office and an endeavor was made to account for all of them, there were no tidings of the little Norseman who had stopped to gather flowers by the wayside. Some effort was made to locate the missing boy, but it proved utterly fruitless. It was abandoned presently and the lad was completely forgotten. How often do we stop in life's progress to pick flowers by the wayside and are forgot!

He had stopped running and shouting after a very brief indulgence in those futile practices. He had stopped moving at all. He had stood in silence on the track staring wistfully until the train disappeared around a curve in the cañon, leaving him entirely alone. He had breakfasted heartily—a small appetite was not one of his failings—therefore he was not yet hungry. It was early morning, it was spring time, the day was fair, but these things were of trifling significance in his present dilemma.

What should he do? He thought presently that he would soon be missed and that the train could come back for him. If so, he would go on to meet it. He started again, accordingly, trudging down the railroad track until he came to the bend, perhaps with some vague idea of catching sight of the returning train which was his only link to civilization. But, alas, the cañon curved like a ram's horn and the track perforce followed its course. The mountains rose precipitously on either side. He saw nothing ahead. There was nothing to do but go on in hope. After all, is there ever anything much to do but go on—thanking God if so it may be in hope?

Little Olaf Tryggvesson knew little about railroads, especially far Western ones, but he had noticed that the country through which they had passed was wild and uncultivated, that the stations were long distances apart, and that inhabitants were few and far between. What if the train did not come back to him? He was used to being forced to shift for himself. But this was a different situation. This was no city with its opportunities for food, shelter, and above all fellowship on every hand. His heart sank at the thought. He wondered if he would get anywhere if he wandered along all day. He wondered where he could find a place to sleep and when he could get something to eat. He did not have to wonder where to get a drink, for water there was in plenty and at hand. A clear cold mountain brook dashed fascinatingly down the cañon which widened here and there into meadows filled with blossoms. To quench his thirst was a delight. He would have played, or, if he had the implements, fished in it, but he had to press on.

Somehow the scenery, massive and grand, reminded him of what he recalled of his northern land. There were great rocks and huge precipices. Sometimes the cañon walls rose sheer for half a mile. Sometimes the sides of the gorge fell away in gentle slopes verdant and beautiful. He wondered if there were bears or wolves in the pine-clad mountains. He wondered if there were wild Indians lying in ambush for him, or any hunter or traveler! Well, whatever would betide, something about the boy, some spirit of courage in his breast, kept him on his feet and moving.

It was a little-traveled railroad, like all railroads in those days in Colorado.

When he judged it to be noon the boy rested a little, refreshed himself by the side of the stream, taking off his shoes and stockings and dabbling his feet in the clear, cool water, washing his face and hands, and wishing the while that he had something to eat as well as to drink. By this time, too, the wild flowers clasped in his warm little hands had wilted and faded. He had sacrificed himself for nothing. Sadly he cast them one by one into the stream and watched the swift current bear them away. He did not pick any more, although he came upon several places where they grew abundantly, for he had learned that to pick them was to wither them, and so long as they grew everywhere he could enjoy them without killing them. "Most men kill the thing they love," says the pessimistic poet, but little Olaf had not traveled so far in the way of the world. He was still tender-hearted and considerate even of a wayside blossom.

In the late afternoon, tiring of walking along the railroad's interminable ties which seemed to lead nowhere, and attracted by a fairly well-defined trail, big enough for a wagon, which crossed the track sharply as it followed the endless river cañon, he turned aside; moved by what spirit of exploration and adventure who can tell? The same wandering blood which sent Red Eric to Iceland and Greenland and thence drove Leif, Eric's son, down to our own shores centuries before, flowed in his veins. The railroad was monotonous, the trail inviting. Wagons, horses, a trail, these meant men!

He was very tired now and very hungry. He had heard of lost travelers who had lived a long time on different sorts of wild fruits and berries, but there did not appear to be anything of that kind available for him. Still the trail must lead somewhere, and people had to travel it on foot, or on horseback, or in wagons. Besides, the railroad was hot and sunny, and the trail was tree-covered and cool.

Whistling to keep up his courage, the sturdy little adventurer pursued his way through the remainder of the long afternoon. He met with but little more success than before, so far as finding anybody. And finally he stopped, tired out. He judged it to be about half-past five or six o'clock. He had walked miles; he had eaten nothing. He sat down forlornly under a huge pine tree, the carpet of pine needles which had been accumulating for centuries making a comfortable resting place, and had a good cry. There was no one to see but God, and little Olaf Tryggvesson had an idea that God would understand and pardon the weeping of so small a boy. He certainly would make allowances for lonely little lads lost in these wild and mysterious mountains. And he would not think him unmanly because of his tears.

Presently his sobs ceased. He was so tired. He laid himself down to rest a little, peering up at the bright blue sky through the overshadowing pine branches. The tears still glistened on his cheeks, but he did not wipe them away. He closed his eyes once or twice to shut out the light, wondering again where he was to get anything to eat or some place to sleep, when Nature suddenly solved one problem; for, after a little space, his blue eyes remained closed. His long regular breathing, broken by sighs, showed that he was sound asleep.

How long he slept he could not know. It was twilight when he awoke. He opened his eyes to see bending over him a tall man with a reddish-brown face and long black hair in which was thrust carelessly an eagle's feather. A many-colored blanket was draped over the muscular shoulders, its folds clutched over his breast by one hand, while in the other he carried a Winchester rifle.

Little blond Olaf stared up at the silent bronze-faced figure, utterly uncomprehending for a moment where he was and who that was. Then with a shriek that woke the echoes of the canon the boy sprang to his feet with the quickness of a coyote and started to run. The hand that held the blanket of the spectator released it, and before he had taken a step the Indian caught him by the shoulder.

Olaf Tryggvesson, somehow conscious that he had not lived up to his idea of manhood, ceased to struggle. He turned and confronted his captor with white lips and whiter face and with a heart that throbbed wildly, and waited his malign pleasure.

—thinking of life insurance?

MOST people are; for insurance protection is an ever-present proposition: it safeguards the home; takes care of the mortgage; educates the youngsters and provides old age independence.

It's on the minds of most people—the thoughtful, humane kind: they're thinking about it good and hard and some 20,000 life-insurance agents are helping them.

The agent, of course, is bent on earning a commission and, incidentally, on beating his last year's record under urgent pressure from his company.

But don't let him do it at your expense, for if you take a policy through any agent, his commission will come out of your premium—the first year and thereafter.

This, of course, will make your insurance cost you more than though you applied direct to the one American company that operates without agents, namely:

2d. Renewal-Commission Dividends and Office-Expense Savings covered by the guaranteed dividends go to Policyholders in subsequent years.

3d. The Usual contingent policy-dividends, based on the Company's earnings, still further reduce the cost each year after the first.

AGENTS of all the other companies—the 20,000—find it hard to compete with the Postal Life, and it is therefore best not to believe what such agents say about the Company or what they show you in some easily-influenced insurance periodical.

The Postal Life is a highly accredited institution and has the confidence of all thoughtful insurers who take the trouble to find out about it for themselves.

They find that the Postal gives all that other companies give and much that they do not or can not give.

For example: the Postal's Health Bureau performs a most important service in health-conservation by issuing timely Health Bulletins for the benefit of its policyholders and by providing for those who so desire one free medical examination each year—a privilege not accorded by any other company. It will thus be seen that the Postal

For the reasons here stated and others, the POSTAL LIFE is justly designated "The Company of Conservation"—of money and of health.

'Twill pay you to find out just what you can save on any standard form of policy—Whole-Life, Limited-Payment Life or Endowment.

Just write and say: "Mail full insurance particulars as per advertisement in Christian Herald, April 15." And be certain to give your occupation and the exact date of your birth.

The Company will then send you (by mail only) exact figures for your age with the amount of dividends, guaranteed and otherwise, now being paid.

THE FUTURE OF EVANGELISM

BY REV. W. E. BIEDERWOLF

General Secretary of the Commission on Evangelism of the Federal Council of Churches

RELATIVE to the discussion contained in the columns of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD some months ago in regard to the d and practicability of some kind a Federation for the study and pro- tion of the work of evangelism, it l doubtless be of interest to your ders to know something of what been accomplished. Not a few of leaders of the various denomina- is have been giving serious thought the subject discussed frankly and help- ly in the columns of E CHRISTIAN HER- , and the most re- t development in the ere of evangelism is appointment of a nmission on Evan- ism by the Federal ncil of the Churches Christ in America. Prior to this, there l been organized a y years ago a volun- y association known the National Feder- d Evangelistic Com- tee, with the same pose in view as that the Federal Coun- s Commission, name- greater co-operation l efficiency in the field of evan- istic work. It numbered on its Ad- ory Board many of the leaders, both tors and laymen, of the various ominations, and the writer was sen as its secretary. A number of ngelistic campaigns, including city, nty and State, were put into opera- n, and a number of sub-committees ame busy with serious study of the ngelistic situation in general.

EVANGELIST

ollowing the appointment of the nmission on Evangelism by the leral Council of the Churches of ist in America, steps have been en which have culminated in the ging of the National Federated ngelistic Committee into the Fed- l Council's Commission. We are in the world to perpetuate commit- s, and inasmuch as the Federal ncil's Commission on Evangelism ries with it the sanction and to e extent the authority of the rch, it became evident at once that evangelistic situation and problem ld best be handled by a committee king on this vantage ground. se who are watching with keen and yerful interest the evangelistic vements and work of the day will rove of this further step toward nging this important work to the ce of highest efficiency.

What now of the future? It is utter y for any one to talk about the day evangelism or the day of the evan- ist being past! This sort of work here to-day as never before, and sent-time conditions, with their re- tant problems, which have been and apparently increasing in serious- s and perplexity, are calling the rch to such a task that she can glect this special form of Christian erprise only at her peril.

Christianity has never yet really e to its own in this land of ours, l our country is waiting to see what l can do when the church gives to sacred and divinely appointed office the evangelist her best thought, her est sympathy and her most earnest ention; and the pastors and the ngelists whom the church approves united in a determined, well-con- ved and untiring effort to win the ple of the cities, the towns and the ntry for Christ.

t is premature to talk much at pres- of extensive and thoroughly de- oped plans. The very nature of the ation and the seriousness of the blem with which the Commission st deal make this altogether evi- t and demand that the policy pur- d be a conservative one. An en- deavor will be made to secure the appointment by each of the various co-operating denominations of a National Committee on Evangelism, where such committee does not already exist, for the purpose of superintending the evangelistic activities of its own denomination and of co-operating in any general work throughout the country which the Commission on Evangelism of the Federal Council may inaugurate. The majority of the constituent bodies of the Federal Council have already appointed such a committee, and the wisdom of such action has been amply manifested by what the various committees have accomplished.

One of the important initial activities of the Commission ought to be, as it doubtless will be, an endeavor to secure the appointment, by the various co-operating denominations, of Credential Committees in the different Synods, Conferences, Conventions and other ecclesiastical units, the studied business of which will be to acquaint themselves fully as to the fitness of the men of their own denomination who desire to engage in evangelistic work.

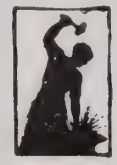
If the pastors are not to be left in embarrassing uncertainty as to the general fitness of such men for success in this important and difficult and delicate sphere of Christian ministry, some such endorsement as that mentioned is absolutely necessary. If the method of allowing any one to do this work who feels for any reason that he would like to do it, or ought to do it, has imposed upon the church irresponsible, incompetent and sometimes erratic men, then surely as long as the church makes no studied or organized effort to preclude the possibility of such a thing, some of the blame must lie at her own door for any ill effect which may come from the work such men undertake.

We are referring more especially to what is known as union or federated evangelistic work, because it is here that the greatest problem lies; here, we believe, where the greatest results are to be achieved, they are not in evidence as they ought to be.

It is earnestly hoped that the different ecclesiastical bodies of the country will give careful attention to this matter. The mere fact that a man is a licensed or ordained minister is not sufficient evidence that he is fit for the work of an evangelist, although some ministers contend that such ordination is all the endorsement that can be given or all that is needed. But the fact remains that some men seek the evangelistic field because they are failures as pastors, and usually their failures are quite as conspicuous in the field of evangelism. On the other hand, a man may be largely successful as an evangelist and make an utter failure of the pastorate, should he attempt it.

There is an interest in evangelism to-day which is of a character hitherto little known. It seems as though the hour has struck, and with it comes an opportunity for the church which, if not improved, will leave the Kingdom of God waiting still for the vision, for the faith, for the initiative, for the holy determination which, under God, shall yet one day bring to pass a method of aggressive evangelism which in its operation shall mightily quicken the laggard spirits of the people of God and sweep this land with a tidal wave of revival grace. Then the church of God shall, as Bishop Berry has said, "cease to be an army of occupation and become an army of conquest."

FINAL DATE FOR SUBSCRIPTIONS BEFORE THE ADVANCE IN PRICE WILL BE MAY 28TH



"Strike while the iron is hot" and "Make hay while the sun shines"—the two old sayings which preach promptness, take it for granted that everyone knows how soon iron cools and how soon rain comes. But some people are surprised when the spirit of these adages is expressed in the suggestion that it would be judicious to purchase the new Encyclopædia Britannica today.

End of the Direct Sale to the Public

Plain rules of business, as inexorable as the laws of nature, make it inevitable that the terms upon which the new Encyclopædia Britannica will be sold after the next few weeks shall be such as to yield a profit commensurate with the very large investment ($1,500,000) which the production of this new summary of all human knowledge necessitated.

It could not have been so good a book as it is if it had been made with so small a capital investment as to warrant its being permanently sold on the present terms.

The STORY of BEN HUR

Twenty-one years after the visit of the Wise Men to Bethlehem at the time of the birth of Jesus, we are introduced into the house of the Prince of Hur, where we meet the son, Ben Hur, a young man of seventeen, and his widowed mother and sister. A regiment of Roman soldiers is marching by the house and Ben Hur rushes up to the roof to watch them pass. As he leans on the parapet his elbow touches a loose tile and it falls off, striking the Roman governor, Gratus, who is riding at the head of his soldiers. Messala, a Roman officer, formerly Ben Hur's friend but now his enemy, falsely accuses him of trying to assassinate the governor. Without trial Ben Hur is condemned to toil for life as a galley slave. His sister and mother are thrown into prison. The great fortune of the house of Hur is confiscated and divided between Gratus and Messala.

In a sea battle a few years later, Ben Hur saves the life of a rich Roman tribune, Arrius, who out of gratitude frees the galley slave, takes him to Rome and adopts him as his own son. Soon after, Arrius dies, leaving Ben Hur the heir to his great wealth. For a long time the youth has sought in vain for his mother and sister. He finds his father's old steward Simonides, who, with his gentle daughter Esther, is living at Antioch. Esther at once falls in love with the handsome Ben Hur, now a man of twenty-three; but he at that time has eyes only for an Egyptian girl, Iras by name, whom he has recently met at Antioch and for whom he feels a strange infatuation.

At Antioch, too, Ben Hur discovers his old foe and accuser, Messala. His opportunity is at hand. A great chariot race is to be run within the next few days. Messala, a famed charioteer, is looked upon in advance as the certain winner. Ben Hur seeks out sheik Ilderim, a Bedouin who is encamped near the town, and wins the sheik's permission to drive the latter's four matchless Arab horses in the race.

The race begins, there are six competitors. The race soon narrows down to Messala and Ben Hur. Messala has fouled one of his opponents and left him dying in the arena. Now he viciously strikes and terrifies Ben Hur's gentle Arabs. But the mighty strength gained at the galley-oar enables Ben Hur to control his frantic steeds, and little by little he gains upon Messala. The Roman has reached his utmost speed. The amphitheatre rings with the shouts and screams of the onlookers, Messala's partisans going mad as they howl and wave his colors. At the last turn Ben Hur leans forward and gives the Arabs the reins. Gradually they reach the Roman's car. Within five hundred feet of the goal Ben Hur forges ahead. Suddenly there is a crash as Messala's chariot loses a wheel and goes to wreck, leaving its driver entangled in the ruins. The duel is over, the race is won, vengeance is satisfied!

Ben Hur makes his way to Jerusalem, still in search of his mother and sister. He is safe from punishment on the old charge, for Gratus is no longer in Jerusalem, Pontius Pilate having succeeded him as governor there. At the Holy City Ben Hur sees Jesus of Nazareth, the Messiah. Straightway he enrolls himself among the Saviour's followers, even raising a legion of soldiers in the idea that Jesus is going to cast away the Roman yoke from Judea by force.

The closing chapters, in which the Christ is a prominent figure, are singularly beautiful. The thrilling events they narrate and the closing of the tale, which has long been acknowledged one of the world's few really great novels, must be left for the reader's own discovery.

BOUGHT by the thousand and always read, talked of and forgotten, has Ben Hur become the most famous religious romance and only enduring novel of the past quarter of a century. [illegible] Our publications have never had [illegible] —$1.50.

the message. He may with profit study voice culture, rhetoric and some elocution—though this last is dangerous, as it is apt to make a speaker affected, which is fatal to real success. He must study the Bible and should study theology, church history, general history, literature, sermon-making, church management, sociology and psychology. Special emphasis must be laid upon understanding people. A technical theological education sometimes lifts a man away from the people he must help instead of putting him into closer touch with them. He must understand how people live and work and suffer and think and must be sympathetic with and well informed about the movements they are making toward greater liberties and better social conditions. This understanding of people, individually and in groups, will help him to convince them of their need of Christ for their souls and for society. It is also helpful to possess some knowledge of business affairs so that in the conduct of his church he will not fall into financial and legal snares.

R. M., Makinack, Man., Canada. Gen. 3 tells all that we know of the "tree of life," although a vast amount of speculative literature has appeared on the subject. Various references to the "tree of life" elsewhere in Scripture show that it was regarded as the means provided by divine wisdom as an antidote against disease and bodily decay. Access to it was conditioned upon our first parents obeying the injunction against eating the forbidden fruit of the "tree of knowledge," which was the test of obedience. Certain Hebrew writers have called the two trees "the trees of the lives," holding that the wondrous property of one in perpetuating physical life and conferring perennial health was in direct contrast with the other, the "tree of knowledge," which was sure to occasion bodily disorder, suffering and death. "The tree of life was, in short, a sacramental tree," writes one commentator, "by the eating of which man, in his state of innocence, kept himself in covenant with God."

T. S., Elyria, Neb. The hiding-place of the ark of the covenant, which disappeared when the temple was plundered and destroyed by the Babylonians, is unknown. It may have been taken away or destroyed by Nebuchadnezzar. The Jews believe that it was concealed and will be among the hidden things which the Messiah is to reveal. Jewish writers agree on the point that the ark was not contained in the second temple, and that no new ark was ever made. There have been various reports of its discovery, but they were unfounded.

Miscellaneous

Mrs. T. F. H., Payne's Creek, Calif. We know of no source of information regarding Paul's income before his conversion, which would enable us to state it in figures.

A. J. C., Albany, Ore. Where a man is convinced that the business he is engaged in is a bad one, the sooner he leaves it the better. This would apply to both mentioned in your letter.

C. C., Hastings, Neb. You will no doubt find the information you seek in the published lives of famous missionaries, or in some good religious encyclopedia. We know of no compilation which gives their famous sayings.

B. F. G., Bucksport Center, Me. Within the last half century, improved sanitary methods and the general advancement of medical knowledge and skill in combating contagious diseases have tended to lengthen the average of human life.

Reader, Pittsburg, Pa. 1. Many of the best expositors hold that the "unpardonable sin" was attributing to Satanic agency the work of the Holy Spirit. 2. Salvation is open to all who, truly repenting of sin, come in faith and ask forgiveness in the name of God's dear Son, who "saves to the uttermost."

Reader, Harrisburg, Pa. Cain's wife was probably a sister or a relative. There are indications that the posterity of Adam had increased considerably (see Gen. 4: 14, 15). Cain's wife's name is not stated in the Bible, but Arab traditions have preserved it in two forms, i. e., Save and Azura.

Mrs. M. McC., Stone, Sashkatchewan, Canada. The Philippines are under the United States Government, but there is still a very bitter opposition on the part of the Roman Church to the work of Protestant evangelization, especially in remote districts.

Geometry teaches that a straight line is the shortest distance between two points. The efficiency engineer tells us that direct selling, with its elimination of extra handling, is a short cut to low prices. Study these charts:

The Regular Way

There are at least three groups of men whose profit must come out of the price you pay for a suit purchased in the regular way. First—the manufacturer (M); secondly—his salesman (S); and third—the local dealer or agent (D). Each plays his part in getting the suit into your hands (Y), and each performs a service for which he is paid and which cost in the end is added to the price you pay.

The Bell Way of selling clothes is the direct way—straight, direct, from us the tailors (B), to you the wearer (Y). Only one profit added to the cost of production—no in-between handling costs to add to the prices you pay.

Our only representative is our catalog, which is sent to you free of charge and draws no pay for its service. You serve yourself, but you save yourself many dollars on your suit.

r Tongues for Christ*

HY is it that we consider it so difficult to surrender our tongues to Christ? We are willing to do other kinds of ds for him, but to speak for him hard. We read the story of 's denial, and blame him for his dice and disloyalty, yet we often Christ by our silence just as as Peter denied him by pro- g that he did not know him.

e trouble is deeper than our es. It is in our hearts. The n we find it so difficult to speak esus is that we have not yet al- him to touch and change and y our hearts as he wishes to. of the abundance of the heart outh speaketh." Any cause that eart is in finds support in our es. It is easy for you to shout asketball, or football, or baseball , when your school or college or team is playing another. Why? se your heart is in it. You love school or your town, so it is easy out.

for our best Friend means that we shall get the most and the best out of all these things. There will be pure and helpful and merry conversation and laughter and song upon our lips, as well as praise and testimony and prayer, when we have given our tongues to Christ.

Missions and Sunday Schools*

THERE are two sides to this subject. We consider what the home Sunday schools may do to promote the work of missions, and also what Sunday schools planted on the frontier and on the foreign field may do to establish the Gospel in these new fields. Every home Sunday school ought to have some direct connection with a specific mission field. It ought to help support some missionary who will send personal letters to be read; or it should support a native worker or some native boy or girl student who will send letters. Emphasize all the time the human note in missions. It is needy people, men and women and boys and girls, whom Jesus has called us to help and cheer and save.

Multitudes of churches, on the home and foreign field, have grown out of Sunday schools. It is easier to start a Sunday school than a church. It is easy to get a small group of children together and tell them, Sunday after Sunday, the Gospel story. Mrs. William James Ely, writing for the April Service, tells of a missionary in southern India who established twenty-seven village Sunday schools, with a total attendance of three thousand heathen children. The result was a great movement Christward throughout that district. In our home mission work we find that immigrant children can easily be gathered into Sunday schools. They are eager to learn of American ways and the American spirit, and as they are led to a knowledge of Christ in the Sunday school, they will bring their parents, and before long a church is established where the Sunday school began its work. In lumber and mining camps also the Sunday school has been the forerunner of the church.

Miss Ely relates two incidents which strikingly illustrate the power of the home Sunday school to produce missionary results:

Cyrus Hamlin, who founded Robert College, in Constantinople, declares that he was made missionary by the contribution-box. One day the little fellow was starting out for a good time, and his mother gave him seven cents, telling him to stop at his teacher's and put one or two pennies in the mission-box as he passed. He debated with himself as to how much he should leave, for he did not like to keep five cents for himself and give two to the Lord. At last he said: "I know what I will do: I will just give it all and not be bothered any more."

In a little town in Kansas is a woman who thirty years ago went there apparently withdrawn from the great currents of the world. She formed a mission band in the Sunday school, from which one has gone to work in Africa, one is the head of a great missionary school in this land, another is in the Philippines, another is in Alaska. That woman is teaching in three continents.

The great missionary leaders of the future are in our Sunday schools now. What a great responsibility upon the teachers, young and old, to give their pupils adequate information and awaken true inspiration, which will fit them for the great opportunities for service which lie just ahead.

4 burner high frame Florence Automatic

Florence Told All the Neighbors

"You come in and see my Florence oil cook stove work just once—and you won't be happy until you have one.

"You can have a slow, simmering fire on one burner at the same time you have a quick, hot fire on another—and the other two regulated exactly to any work you want done. Just set the levers as you want them—and you can go away for two hours and find all the burners at exactly the same heat when you come back. That's because the oil supply is automatic and there are no wicks.

"It's so simple, so clean, so convenient, so cool, that I don't know what I should do without it.

"My husband has tested the FLORENCE with other stoves and he says it produces a wonderful amount of heat for the oil consumed and that it costs only about two cents an hour to run all four burners."

At last—the turning point in oil stove history. At last. The right idea!

Gone are the days of balky, smoking, unreliable, sooty, greasy oil stoves. For the Florence kind is dependable — absolutely safe. They have no wicks. There are no valves to wear out—nor clog—nor leak.

THERMOS

"Yes, it Saved Baby's Life Last Summer"

MANY a grateful mother has said this of THERMOS. It is the new, the scientific way of keeping Baby's milk free from contamination.

Bacteria cannot develop in milk kept cold, which means at 40 degrees or under. Milk poured into a THERMOS Bottle at 40 degrees retains that temperature for many hours. Exposed in an ordinary bottle, it takes up heat by radiation in a few minutes —and bacteria thrive in warm milk.

Then, too, THERMOS protects Baby's milk by the double closure of cap and cork, from the deadly house-fly. THERMOS has a thousand uses. Ideal for picnic, motoring, yachting, hunting, fishing, office and factory luncheons, sickrooms, etc.

A SONG OF LOVE

BY MARGARET E. SANGSTER, JR.

TO EDITORS and artists the young poet with his lay is quite the joke of springtime, with its April sun and showers. And yet a poem of summertime is in my heart to-day—a poem full of rainbow tints, of song-birds and of flowers. Shall I begin "O Springtime"? No, for that is obsolete; or shall I say "The robin red is swinging on the branch"? Or shall I say, "The perfume of the gentle breeze is sweet"; or that my heart is "full of light and joyousness" perchance? O poets all, in thought and deed, how shall I sing my song? The sun is sinking in the west, the shadows tremble long. And I am sitting at my desk, with nothing much to say; while on the wall the clock is letting minutes slip away.

You wonder why they speak of it as "ringtime"? Because the blue of tender skies above, and all the gentle breezes of the springtime are murmuring a million words of love. And when the April twilight has descended and fireflies are flitting through the air, the meaning of the word is comprehended, for lovers fill the country everywhere. They linger by the pasture bars, confiding, or in the crowded city parks they walk, with never thought of subterfuge or hiding from others all the sweetness of their talk.

Long, long ago, when all the world was youthful; when dragons roamed the forest and the plain; when knights were brave and happy, fierce and truthful, and followed in the monarch's golden train; when ladies dressed in satin and in laces, and diamonds held their long and lovely hair, when witches walked abroad with solemn faces and tried their best to make the world less fair; there lived a little maiden in the wildwood, a little girl with lovely eyes of blue, with spirit that was brave, and heart so mild, good, and tender that the sunshine filtered through. She lived alone, for she was poor and humble, and blessed with little of the world's great store; and yet she wore her rags without a grumble, and never wished aloud for any more. She was a friend to all the beasts that rambled through forest dales or over mountain plain. She even loved the little snakes that scrambled beneath the leaves, and never wished them pain. She lived alone, contented in her hovel, and never craved the beauties of a court, where ladies danced and read the latest novel, and never did the thinking that they ought. And yet, untaught, unkempt, her very beauty was brighter than the glowing of the stars; for very often sweetness, care, and duty, will triumph where a thoughtless life brings scars.

It was the springtime and the ground was soggy; the flowers peeped beneath the crumbled moss. The morning air was dull—a little foggy, and in the brook the fish began to toss. For it was springtime and the earth, awaking, was filled with joy and perfume and with love. The trees themselves, once bare, were now partaking of certain sweetness from the air above.

A tall young knight was riding through the valley. His bridle hung quite limply in his hand. His mind was far from any fight or sally, or any tournament on sea or land. And as he rode along through trees that thickened, he fingered with his hand a broidered glove, and somehow, in the wood, his pulses quickened. "In spring a young man's fancy turns to love." He did not heed the horse's troubled walking; he did not know that pitfalls lay before; for in his ears a fairy voice was talking that said, "Go on, adventures lie in store!"

The wood grew darksome; it was thick and scary. And suddenly the horse, with snort of dread, tripped in a hole that lay 'neath grasses hairy, and threw the knight on his uncovered head. And then for him, the joy of all the forest grew black. And as he drifted far away, there came a voice does more than cleanse the skin

Almost any soap will cleanse the skin and hair and many toilet soaps are pure enough to do it without injuring these delicate textures. But those who want a soap which not only cleanses but actually helps the complexion and hair naturally turn to Resinol Soap.

In every way an exceptionally pleasing toilet soap, the soothing, antiseptic properties which it derives from Resinol Ointment enable it to protect the skin and scalp from annoying affections, keep the complexion clear, and the hair rich and lustrous, as soaps which are merely pure and cleansing cannot do. Resinol Soap is excellent for baby's bath.

All druggists and dealers in toilet goods sell Resinol Soap, twenty-five cents. For a guestroom-size trial cake, and miniature box of Resinol Ointment, write to Dept. 33-C, Resinol, Baltimore, Md.

Resinol Shaving Stick also contains Resinol, making it most agreeable to men with tender faces. Trial on request.

(he thought it was the fairy), and "Are you hurt?" he thought he heard it say. He fell asleep and dreamed (for he was fainting), and in his dream felt water on his brow; so with his fevered fancy he fell painting the reason for its being there, and how it reached him. Then with unclosed eyes and gasp of pure delight, he saw a vision of surprise; a dream so gleaming bright, that in a voice quite tremulous he said: "Are you a magic vision, lady fair? I seem to feel your touch upon my head, and on my cheek I feel your waving hair. Are you alive or do you come to haunt me? Or can you be an angel from the sky?" "Oh, no," the lady answered, "do not taunt me. I am a little woodland maiden. I am not an angel or a vision grand; it was my touch you felt upon your forehead. And on your cheek 'twas my unworthy hand."

And then the knight, his weakness all forgotten, sat up upon the mossy forest floor. He noted that her dress was made of cotton, and ragged where the grasping briars tore. And then he took her hand in his quite softly, and whispered gently in her shell-like ear, "Come back with me unto my lonely castle, because my heart is crying for you, dear."

(The legend tells us that the little fairies, with all the magic that their wands could bring, had made the marriage of the knight and maiden. But I'm inclined to think it was the spring.)

O sun so golden bright with joy of morning, and heaven blue with angel shining eyes and song-birds that awake us at the dawning with music that is rising to the skies! O little blossoms creeping up, so tiny, and trees with sap of life that flows anew; and stars that gleam at evening time, so shiny that fairy tales seem very nearly true. O springtime, see the old stuff I am using! A while ago I called it obsolete, and yet the words are hardly wrong for choosing, when all the world is radiant and sweet.

Let wise ones say that I am young and foolish and that my words stream onward in a flood. The golden world is lying all before me, and oh, the joy of spring is in my blood!

Your Vacation

"ARE you making any plans for your vacation?"

Perhaps you think it is too early to be making plans; but time passes so quickly that before you realize it summer will be here. Then you may be obliged to give up a trip, or some other pleasure, because you suddenly realize, when you come to consider the cost, that you cannot afford it.

Doesn't it seem a pity to spoil your pleasures, when it all might have been avoided? That is why we speak of the matter so early that you may have plenty of time in which to earn the money you need for your summer outing.

To all this you will probably say, "Yes, that's all very well to start early to earn money; but how am I going to earn it?"

This question is going to be answered by another: "Have you written to us for particulars concerning the Money Makers' Club?" You probably haven't, because if you had, you wouldn't be asking that question. The club members will only need to be told to begin working for their vacation fund now.

But you who are not members, you are the girls we want to reach. We want you to know that the club is ready to help you solve the problem of earning money. Don't wait, but send for one now. The club doors are wide open, ready to receive all who wish to enter and become members.

The Howard Watch

THE predominance of the HOWARD Watch among yachting men illustrates some interesting conditions in American business and professional life.

There is in this country no exclusively yachting class as such. Practically every American yachtsman is a man of affairs, who finds his greatest relaxation on the water, and who takes his HOWARD Watch with him when he goes aboard.

The thing that makes him a yachtsman and an American disposes him to like the HOWARD Watch—with its fine traditions, its trim, racy lines, and its way of showing its clean American heels to the talent of the watch-making world.

The wonderful character of the HOWARD Watch is that it meets men of so many different kinds and occupations on their own ground. Men in commerce, in the technical industries, in the professions, in official life.

A HOWARD Watch is always worth what you pay for it.

The price of each watch is fixed at the factory and a printed ticket attached—from the 17-jewel (double roller) in a Crescent Extra or Boss Extra gold-filled case at $40, to the 23-jewel in 18K gold case at $170—and the EDWARD HOWARD model at $350.

Not every jeweler can sell you a HOWARD Watch. Find the HOWARD jeweler in your town and talk to him. He is a good man to know.

Admiral Sigsbee has written a little book, "The Log of the HOWARD Watch," giving the record of his own HOWARD in the U. S. Navy. You'll enjoy it. Drop us a post card, Dept. W, and we'll send you a copy.

AMONG THE WORKERS

SUPERINTENDENT ISHII DEAD

SUPERINTENDENT ISHII, of the Orphanage of Okayama, Japan, where many of the children supported by CHRISTIAN HERALD readers since the last great famine are sheltered and educated, died on January 30. Missionary James H. Pettee writes from the orphanage under date of February 12: "Superintendent Ishii's lifelong illness was patiently borne, and his radiantly glorious death made a great impression on his countrymen. On January 5 he thought his end was near, so he called his special friends together and they—Japanese fashion—spent the night in or near his sick chamber. The next morning he said farewell to each in turn and to the graduates who were living as colonists on the farm, with a peculiarly appropriate message for each. Five thousand people attended his funeral down on the orphanage farm in Southern Japan. Two memorial services were held, one privately in my house and one publicly in the Okayama Church, both on the day of the funeral. The Emperor was pleased to promote Mr. Ishii to the junior rank of the seventh grade just before his death. One of the best Christian laymen of Japan, the founder of this great orphanage, a disciple of George Müller and Dr. Barnardo and above all of Jesus Christ, Mr. Ishii will be greatly missed. The orphanage work will be continued along existing lines."

—LONDON IS TO HAVE a great American church, the building to be erected at a cost of $1,250,000. There is already an American church known as "The Church of the Stars and Stripes," in the very heart of the city, the pastor of which is Rev. Len Broughton, formerly of Atlanta, Ga.

—REV. JOHN R. GUNN, pastor North Baptist Church, 243 West Eleventh Street, New York, has established a theological night school, the sessions of which are held in the lecture rooms of the church. In connection with this school a plan has been arranged to secure for out-of-town students business positions in the city through which they can support themselves while attending the night school. The night school is not attempting to provide a short cut to the ministry, but will maintain the same high standards as other schools of theology. It is primarily for ministerial students, but provision has been made for training evangelists, missionaries, Bible teachers, and Sunday school superintendents. The school is free to all without regard to denomination, the only requirement being good credentials as to character and worthiness.

—THE SCANDINAVIAN ALLIANCE MISSION of India is conducting a most deserving work among the Bhil tribe. The mission at Khandesh is supporting fifty orphan children as one branch of its work. The alliance has seven head-stations, a number of out-stations and schools and an industrial work.

—UNION MEETINGS at Coquille, Ore., were attended by crowds, many walking miles through forests and mud, and some actually moving into town to attend. There were remarkable conversions, and the civic atmosphere has been changed. The meetings were conducted by Evangelist George W. Taylor of Los Angeles, assisted by Mrs. Taylor, cornetist.

—THE MISSIONARY COLLEGE at Hangchow, China, is desirous of obtaining a laundry outfit, to be operated by the students of the Self-Help Department. Rev. J. H. Judson, president of the college (now in this country on furlough), writes asking friends of the college who are interested in native student life to help.

—WHEN NORTHFIELD SEMINARY celebrates the thirty-fifth anniversary of its founding by Dwight L. Moody in June, there will assemble a larger number of the school's former students than has ever been together before. An attendance of nearly 1,000 former students is expected as the guests of the school. The commencement and anniversary exercises will open on Saturday evening, May 30.

—THE UNION TABERNACLE campaign with all the churches in Rocky Ford, Col., conducted by Evangelists Hart and Magann of Madison, Wis., stirred the whole community. Sunday crowds were so great that people were unable to get into the tabernacle. Some came thirty miles to the meetings. Hundreds of men accepted Christ. The evangelists recently closed a very successful union tabernacle campaign with all the churches of Sharon, Pa. Many conversions and a huge attendance marked the work.

—AN UP-STATE FARM is planned by officials of the West Side Young Men's Christian Association, New York. The branch owns several hundred acres of ground on which the experiment is to be worked out. In the summer months the branch conducts a camp for city boys. There is a farmhouse on the property and twenty acres are tillable. The plan is to put a practical farmer in charge of the farm and let convalescent city men board there until able to return to the city, paying enough to cover the cost of food.

—REV. LUTHER P. LUDDEN, D.D., of Lincoln, Neb., recently broke all church attendance records when he completed his fifty-first year without missing a Sunday service in a church of some denomination. He is a member of the Lutheran Church, and is fifty-nine years of age. He is traveling secretary for a Lutheran board of missions and has attended church services in nearly every State in the Union. Rev. Mr. Ludden commenced to attend church in Berne, N. Y., although he was born in Virginia. Nothing to approach this record as an attendant at church services has ever been brought to light. When inquiry was made it was found that a woman in St. Louis had attended church every Sunday for twenty-one years. She was given a reception and was made the recipient of presents and many honors.

LEAD ME

LEAD me, O Saviour dear!
Lead me in love.
When darkness hides my path,
Lead thou above.
Suffer me ne'er to fall—
Be thou my all in all;
Lead me in love.

When tempted sore to swerve
From plumb and line;
Hold me by thy right hand,
Saviour divine!
Ward off the tempter's power;
Be near in that dark hour:
Mercy is thine.

Give me the strength I need,
More grace and love.
Send thou upon my path
Light from above.

Take thou my hand in thine,
Then I shall know thee mine,
Lead me in love.

When sorrows try me sore,
When joys depart,
Oh then be very near;
Keep thou my heart.
Ward off despondency,
Keep me from doubting thee,
Keep thou my heart.

As down the mountain side
Thy love I prove;
Down toward the setting sun,
Lead me in love.
Onward at thy command,
O Saviour! take my hand,
Lead me in love.

HAYNES
AMERICA'S FIRST CAR

Exposition Chief Buys Haynes Car

Chas. C. Moore, President of the Panama-Pacific International Exposition, has purchased a Haynes four-cylinder car equipped with the Vulcan Electric Gear Shift.

Worthy of note is the fact that this car is the twenty-seventh owned by Mr. Moore. It is in constant use—much more so than were any of its twenty-six predecessors, and, due largely to its simplicity of control, Mr. Moore frankly admits that only now is he deriving the real pleasures of motoring. No doubt about it—the hand shift method suffers by comparison.

Before you buy, look over other cars at the price you want to pay, compare the specifications, part for part, with those of the Haynes. Here are a few facts regarding the

HAYNES
America's First Car

The Haynes motor has a bore of 4¼ in. and stroke of 5½ in., cylinders cast in pairs; L-head design; valves enclosed; with a dynamometer rating of 65 and 48 horsepower on the "six" and "four," respectively. Ignition is provided by the American Simms Dual High Tension Magneto; carburetion, by the Stromberg device; electric lighting and starting, by the Leece-Neville separate unit system; and cooling by centrifugal pump, pressed steel fan and cellular radiator.

Other Haynes specifications are the splash and gravity lubrication system; contracting band clutch; Timken and McCue full floating rear axles; twenty-one gallon gas tank on rear of chassis; motor-driven tire pump; extra demountable rim; and Collins curtains. Shock absorbers on the "six."

The Haynes "Four" . . $1785 and $1985
The Haynes "Six"
130 inch wheelbase . $2500 and $2700
The Haynes "Six"

THE ROAD TO FAITH IN GOD

BY CLAYTON S. COOPER

A CERTAIN man outside the Christian Church said to a prominent missionary worker in China who was constantly worried and troubled about trifles, "You are not a Christian. You ask me to believe in your God and you really do not believe in him yourself. If he is the God who gives peace, and protects his people from care and anxiety, why don't you trust him?"

A fitting question for every person regardless of his profession would be in all sincerity to ask: "Do I really believe God? Is there anything in my life that would prove to one who did not believe in God that a fundamental principle in Christianity is faith?"

The primal cause of American breakdown has been attributed by a famous physician to those absurd feelings of hurry and care, to that breathlessness and tension, that anxiety of feature and solicitude of results, revealing the lack of inner harmony and ease, without which good work cannot be accomplished. The man who gives us the impression of the old Scriptural motto, "In quietness and confidence shall be your strength," is none too common in these days.

One returns from the Orient, where so much of life lies in the "to-morrow" and where the passive virtues of patience and ability to wait are cultivated far more generally than in the West, to feel, in the midst of our straining waste of energy, frequently over things that are non-essential, a sense of misfortune. It is useless to say to a man, "Do not worry," for if that is all you can suggest to him, he will reply, "I must worry, I cannot help but worry." You must sink his thought into deeper resources, he must discover a fundamental reason for quietude and trust in a Power greater than himself, greater than his own splendid accomplishments, greater than his friends, greater than his money, since there come times in the life of every man when one and all of these are inadequate. It is not necessary that a man should wait for failure and physical breakdown in order that he may learn to believe in a God who is capable of banishing care and the sense of strain from his work and from his life. It is not necessary that a man stop work, for work is helpful, it is the veritable salvation of most men; only worry and fear are the sure forerunners of disease. One meets in travel a goodly percentage of people who are trying to travel out of the reach of their illnesses or their fears, and who are often most in fear of the events and calamities that never occur.

Half of the ills we hoard within our hearts
Are ills because we hoard them.

Have you ever stopped to think that a Christian has the inalienable right to an inheritance of peace? It is his birthright at the hand of Christ, who gave it as his last bequest. "My peace I give unto you; not as the world giveth give I unto you; let not your heart be troubled, neither let it be afraid." It is the Christian's privilege to cast all of his cares and anxieties upon God, who really cares for him. The faithless man should read for a month every morning the eleventh chapter of Hebrews or the fourteenth chapter of John. He should stop to consider that virtually every miracle that Jesus wrought was seemingly for the purpose of instilling in the minds of the people a steady confidence, a faith in God the Father to heal, not only from bodily but also from spiritual ills.

Do we really believe God? Are we actually accepting the heritage, the divine possibilities of our lives? Do we claim enough for ourselves? The faith in God which eliminates fearfulness and terror from life, replacing them with unfaltering and unhesitant progress, is the indispensable accompaniment to all success that is worthy of the name. This implicit belief that somehow, somewhere, clouds will break, that God and not Satan is running the world, and that all things do actually work together for good to those who believe in him, this casting all your care upon one who is capable and willing and waiting to assist us, this is faith, and there is no fear while you have faith.

But faith is more than the elimination of fear. It has a positive side and an active test. Belief in God is not complete in the minds of men who wall themselves as in a citadel, calmly and supinely trusting Providence to save them from their enemies; it is an element driving men forth from their fortresses to combat with their obstacles and their enemies, saving not simply their citadel, but the surrounding country as well.

Belief in God calls out our best, our greatest action. "Show me your faith without your works and I will show you my faith with my works." When in that striking and picturesque event narrated in Isaiah, the conqueror from Edom overcame Israel's foe, it was for a purpose. It occurred that the shadow of her enemy should no longer haunt the chosen nation, it occurred in order that Judah might be free to go forth and work out her destiny and become what she never could have realized without the assurance of God's care and strength behind her. Religious belief is for the purpose of making a religious life formidable. Its final test is that it works.

It is for this daring to enter upon difficult things in the world's work that the vision of God through faith comes to men. Such belief makes men "eccentric," as Henry Drummond used to say. They begin working from a new center with a new vision. People of his time called Jesus beside himself. The boys pointed to their heads when Columbus walked along the streets. Paul was called mad. Newton and Morse, and even in later days our pioneer aviators, have received uncomplimentary titles for their rashness and their daring. What have men ever accomplished when they have not been borne out to their goal upon a great wave of personal vision and conviction regarding their work and their power to accomplish it?

When Livingstone went down into Africa, the ostensible object which his countrymen saw was a wild, adventurous plan of exploration. They did not see the hand invisible, and perhaps Livingstone himself rather felt than saw it, the hand which not only guided but supported the messenger of civilization and progress. It was said that although the black men could not understand the language of this white Englishman, they nevertheless did understand his life, and their dark faces changed when he moved in and out amongst them. They felt his faith. It magnetized conditions.

What have we ever really dared that we could not do alone? Have we attempted great things and have we expected great results? Have we had faith enough in the final outcome to plod along patiently at routine tasks? In order to have a great result in any department of life, one must have a great task, and in order to accomplish great tasks in the larger sense, one must possess the assurance that there is a God, and that he has made to individuals definite promises, promises that he will surely fulfil.

You may lose your friends, your money, your health, but if you keep your faith in Almighty God, your Helper and Deliverer, if you never say die but plod persistently, ever invincibly, on—on—on—then you are unconquerable, the world will make way for you, you will reveal to modern life another man who believes God.

"If God be for us, who can be against us?"

"I know that Sanatogen will help you"—

THE man who has watched and felt the revitalizing power of Sanatogen is the man who with sincerity and enthusiasm will recommend its use to others, because he knows that Sanatogen is a true reconstructor of a nervous system weakened by worry, overwork or disease. He himself has felt the benefits of its use, has felt its wonderful tonic action, its upbuilding, rejuvenating effect and its remarkable power to regenerate digestion and assimilation.

Over 19,000 physicians endorsed Sanatogen in writing and it is today the most widely recommended article of its kind because it "makes good." It is able to do so because it is a true food tonic, a union of purest albumen of milk and organic phosphorus—two vital essentials of nerve repair.

Add to the endorsements of all these physicians the grateful praise of scores of famous men and women who have written to tell of Sanatogen's help—then consider if YOU too should not place your confidence in Sanatogen as the way to better health.

Sold by good druggists everywhere in three sizes from $1.00.

Grand Prize, International Congress of Medicine, London, 1913.

Col. Henry Watterson,
the famous Editor, writes:
"I feel I owe it to truth to state that I have made a thorough trial of Sanatogen and that I have found it most efficacious and beneficent. I do not think I could have recovered my vitality, as I have done, without this Sanatogen operating equally upon the digestive organs and nerve centers."

John Temple Graves,
the noted Editor and Orator, writes:
"I am a very good friend of Sanatogen and recommend it continually to my friends from a practical experience of its good effects."

The Right Rev. The Bishop of Southampton, writes:
"It gives me pleasure to bear my testimony to the value of Sanatogen as an invigorating tonic and restorative. It is undoubtedly beneficial."

Ingersoll
The Vision of a Dreamer Come True
"The man who says anything is impossible is interrupted by someone doing it."
THE dollar watch was the "vision of a dreamer" until Robert H. Ingersoll crystallized the idea into an accurate and reliable timepiece.
He sold it for a dollar because he wanted to sell millions instead of millionaires. He packed so much value, quality, dependability of service into that dollar watch that BOTH millions and millionaires wear Ingersolls—and are proud of it.
Thirty-five million wearers prove the soundness of his judgment and the timekeeping qualities of the Ingersoll.
The five leading Ingersoll models are:
"The Watch that made the dollar famous" $1.00
The Eclipse, thin model for men 1.50
The Junior, medium size, thin model . . 2.00
The Midget, model for ladies and girls . 2.00

You Can Weigh Exactly What You Should

You can be Strong, Vigorous—full of Life and Energy.

You can be free from Chronic Ailments—every organ of your body strong as nature intended.

You can have a Clear Skin.

You can have a Good Figure—as good as any woman.

You can increase or reduce your weight.

I no longer need to say what "I can do" but what "I HAVE DONE." I have helped 65,000 of the most cultured, intelligent women of America to arise to their very best—why not you?

No Drugs—No Medicines

My pupils simply comply with Nature's Laws.

What My Pupils Say:

"Every one notices the change in my complexion it has lost that yellow color."

"Just think what you have done for me! Last year I weighed 216 pounds, this year 148, and have not gained an ounce back. I am not wrinkled either. I feel so young and strong, no rheumatism, or sluggish liver. I can breathe now, too. It is surprising how easily I did it. I feel 15 years younger."

"Just think! I have not had a pill or a cathartic since I began and I used to take one every night."

"My weight has increased 30 pounds. I don't know what indigestion is any more, and my nerves are so rested! I sleep like a baby."

"Miss Cocroft, I have taken off my glasses and my catarrh is so much better. Isn't that good?"

"I feel as if I could look every man, woman and child in the face with the feeling that I am growing—spiritually, physically and mentally. Really I am a stronger, better woman. I don't know how to tell you or to thank you."

Reports like these come to me every day. Do you wonder I want to help every woman to vibrant health and happiness. Write me your faults of health or figure. Your correspondence is held in strict confidence. If I cannot help you I will tell you what will.

My free book tells how to stand and walk correctly and contains other information of vital interest to woman. Every woman is welcome to it. Write for it. If you do not need me, you may be able to help a dear friend. I have had a wonderful experience and I'd like to tell you about it. I am at my desk daily from 8 until 6.

PULLETS ARE THE BEST FOR EGGS

LATE hatching of the chicks which are to grow into next season's layers is a bad habit, chiefly due to countless generations of farm hens not coming to laying maturity till the winter is half (or wholly) gone. Then there are no hens broody till late in the spring and again no early-hatched chicks. When hatched late the drying heat of summer comes upon them, worms and insects have gone into hiding, making this excellent supply of animal food unavailable, then the withering heat grips them and they seem to stand still for some weeks.

It is a mistake to hatch the chicks too early, say in March; if hatched too early the pullets mature too early, lay a few small eggs and then molt. The best time to hatch chicks for fall and winter layers is the first half of April for the American varieties—the Plymouth Rocks, Wyandottes and Rhode Island Reds, and the last half of April for the Leghorns; brought out at that time they have the best weeks of spring in which to make their start in life, and they can be kept steadily growing so as to reach laying maturity in October.

A poultry grower who understands his business can prevent a too early maturity and the consequent molt by moving any that show signs of beginning to lay from the colony coop into a vacant pen of the poultry house and keeping them there a few days, then moving them out onto the range again, into a different coop from the first one, and so "keeping them on the move." By thus moving them about from place to place, each move being some five to seven days apart, pullets can be held back from laying for from four to six weeks, and they will gain in that time an additional pound to a pound and a half in weight.

The converse of this "retarding" is equally important, because we can help the backward pullets along to maturity by cosseting them a little. This "pushing along" of the later hatched pullets must be done with judgment, else we may push a little too hard and weaken them to the verge of the danger point. To stimulate the pullets to come to laying, a slight increase should be made in the quantity of animal food fed. This may be beef scrap, meat meal, cut fresh bone or milk albumen, all good animal foods for encouraging the pullets to begin egg production and then to continue it.

When feeding a rich ration keep careful watch of the condition of the droppings on the roost platform; the droppings hold the key to the health of the birds. If there are soft droppings, if they do not stand up fairly well and retain their round form, and if the grayish-white termination is missing, look out—and slow down a little. When there is such evidence of overfeeding of a rich ration the best thing to do is to reduce the meat food and increase the wheat middlings by about a fourth.

It should be kept in mind that other foods than animal foods will scour the birds; too great a proportion of wheat in the scratch food will cause loose droppings; too much green food or vegetable food may be another cause, and in cold weather frozen vegetables, especially frozen cabbage, will most assuredly upset the bowels. It is evident, then, that we must have our judgment with us when feeding the flocks, and especially so when we are stimulating the later hatched pullets to encourage them to begin egg production. Such stimulating is always at the risk of making the birds tender and delicate, of bringing them into such a condition that they will be susceptible to colds, which, when the birds are "off" (tender), is almost certain to rapidly develop into roup.

October is the month in which to bring the pullets to laying maturity, early in October if possible, but in October; then the laying habit will become confirmed before the severe cold weather comes in. A. F. HUNTER.

WHERE WE TAKE THE RISK

A CHRISTIAN HERALD subscriber, who lives in a beautiful country place about two hours from the city, dropped in upon us the other day.

"Some time," she said in course of conversation, "I suppose an enterprising advertising man will 'discover' me and 'write me up' as a living example of how to save time, money and strength by shopping at home."

"You see, after we moved out of town I became so tied down with home duties and the children and sickness that for the past two years I have practically furnished the house and dressed myself and the youngsters by mail. Of course, at first, I spent heaps of time writing to all sorts of manufacturers for information about this or that and then wasted hours and hours—I hate to think how many hours—investigating to make sure that an advertiser was honest and reliable. Finally I realized that the best magazines were employing high-salaried experts to the very task I had assigned myself. Now I have mail order shopping down to a fine science:

When I want something I simply look through the pages of my CHRISTIAN HERALD and when I find an advertiser's statement backed by your guarantee, I throw my cares to the winds. That is, I deliberately put the responsibility for everything I buy through advertisements in THE CHRISTIAN HERALD on your shoulders.

How many more of you are "putting the responsibility on our shoulders"? We hope very many.

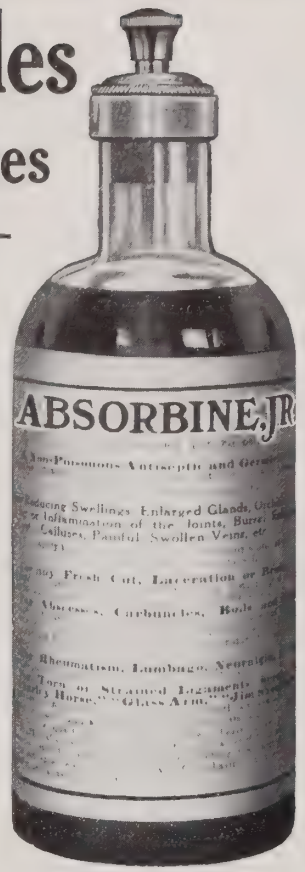
Should any subscriber be defrauded by an advertiser in THE CHRISTIAN HERALD we will make good the claim, provided only that the subscriber—who must be of good standing on our books—has mentioned THE CHRISTIAN HERALD in writing to the advertiser, and has also made the claim to us within two months of the appearance of the advertisement. This guarantee does not apply to investment advertisements.

For Sore Muscles

Sprains, Cuts, Bruises

here is an antiseptic germicide and liniment—

one that is healing, cooling and soothing—Absorbine, Jr., is more than a germicide, more than a liniment—it is both. It means prompt relief from aches and pains—it keeps little cuts and bruises from becoming something more serious.



Absorbine, Jr.
THE ANTISEPTIC LINIMENT
TRADE MARK REG. U.S. PAT. OFF.

is especially good for children's hurts because it is so harmless and safe to use—made of pure herbs and contains no acids or poisons.

It is needed daily in and about the farm—for the numerous little hurts that come through work in the kitchen and about the house, the stable, the garage and the grounds. Use and prescribe Absorbine, Jr., wherever a high-grade liniment or germicide is indicated.

To reduce inflammatory conditions—sprains, wrenches, painful, swollen veins or glands.

To reduce bursal enlargements and infiltrations—Absorbine, Jr., is a discutient and resolvent.

To allay pain anywhere—its anodyne effect is prompt and permanent.

To spray the throat if sore or infected—a 10% or 20% solution of Absorbine, Jr., is healing and soothing and will destroy bacteria.

To heal cuts, bruises, lacerations, sores and ulcers.

Absorbine, Jr., is concentrated, requiring only a few drops at an application and retaining its germicidal powers even when diluted one part Absorbine, Jr., to 100 parts water.

IT KILLS GERMS

"Evidence," a forty-eight page booklet, gives positive, clean-cut, emphatic evidence of what Absorbine, Jr., has done and will do. This booklet, together with detailed laboratory reports, is free for the asking. Absorbine, Jr., is sold by leading druggists at $1.00 and $2.00 a bottle, or sent direct, all charges paid. A LIBERAL TRIAL BOTTLE will be mailed on receipt of 10 cents in stamps.

The Waynesboro, Pa., Revival

A VERY unusual and unique sight was witnessed in Waynesboro, Pa., recently, when hundreds of business men marched behind the city band through the chief thoroughfares to the great Gospel tabernacle. This procession occurred in connection with the Biederwolf Evangelistic campaign. Every business house was closed. They came, managers, saleswomen, salesmen, delivery men, cashiers, lawyers, doctors, printers, and carpenters. The campaign lasted five weeks, and 2,784 confessed Christ. Hundreds were received into churches outside of Waynesboro. The great tabernacle, holding between 5,000 and 6,000, overflowed several times; 850 persons pledged to devote not less than ten minutes each day to Bible study and prayer; 320 pledged to establish and maintain a family altar; 675 pledged to regularly attend midweek prayer service; 779 pledged to visit the sick; 712 pledged to give to their churches a stated sum for the Lord's work; 712 pledged to endeavor to lead at least one soul to Christ each year; 626 pledged to regularly attend Sunday school; 844 pledged to confess Christ in public.

THE CASE OF FATHER BARTOLI

(From the Weekly La Cava, Rome, 1913.)

FIVE years ago "Father" Giuseppe Bartoli left the Society of the Jesuits in the Church of Rome. The personality of the ex-editor of Civiltà Cattolica was too well known and it was necessary to find some satisfactory explanation. It was quickly found. Father Bartoli had been many years in India, there the sun is very warm, even Dr. Jekyll fell ill (we do not say he had a "sunstroke." A mere noodle! That is what affected the sentimental faculties of "Father" Bartoli and prompted him to talk and write as a heretic against the Theologians of the Roman Church.

It seemed unnatural. It had indeed an influence on the brain if it caused it to produce such wonderful works as Dr. Bartoli has written in these last five years! That symptom has shown us no less than eight different works, all of value, that cause of Dr. Bartoli a fertile and eminent writer. Here they are:

1. The Passing of Rome (Italian). 2. The Religion of the Italians. 3. Christianity and the Christian Churches. 4. The Primitive Church and the Primacy of Rome (English). 5. Oriental Novels (Italian). 6. Primitive Christianity and Its Scientific System (Italian). 7. The Bible in Relation to the Church of Rome and High Criticism (English). 8. Pratiles of Asiatic Books (Italian).

Dr. Bartoli could have written against each line, but he is a quiet man and does not like polemics; still, lately, a Rochester paper had this item: "Those who heard of the preaching against the Catholic Church of the apostate member of the Company of Jesus, Father Bartoli, will welcome the news of his return to the faith of his fathers. Father Bartoli has according to a well-founded report, already begun a spiritual retreat. In his case there was the excuse for his defection from the church, viz., he resided in India, several years ago, a pestilence, the effect of which was evident for a considerable time."

I don't need many words to state most absolutely that Rev. Dr. Bartoli has never even dreamed of returning to the Roman Church, which he has left by a spontaneous, enlightened and conscious decision. It is true that in these last six months he has lived a most retired sort of life, but anybody could have an explanation of this from Dr. Bartoli himself if he called on him in his study, and were shown the pile of manuscripts which he has prepared for publication.

Yes, "Father" Bartoli has been struck by the "Sun of Righteousness," which brings health in its beams. This same sunbroke me with in all his devotions and exhortations, who will those who him in proclaiming the eternal Truth, as it proceeds from the revelation of God. A. M.

(Translated by Rev. Professor Alberto Del Rabbineo representative in America.)

Bible-Burning in the Philippines

(Religious Telescope, Dayton, Ohio, March 26, 1914.)

REV. E. W. WHITMOES, superintendent of our mission work in the Philippines, was in Vigan a day or two after the burning, and he verified everything by personal investigation. "But that is in the Philippines," an apologist observes, "and an American Catholic would not think of such a thing." Hold on, Brother Apologist. The perpetrator of this act of bigotry was not a Filipino priest, nor yet a much-maligned Spanish friar, but an American Jesuit named ——, who for several years has fought the Protestant missionaries with a fanatic zeal. It is an easy thing to ask what Padre —— would do in his native America if he had the chance—and just as easy to answer. The matter was brought to the attention of the archbishop, who promised to mete out punishment; but one can imagine the severity of the punishment when he understands that an archbishop has no authority over a Jesuit.

What was done in Vigan on January 18, 1914, is an index of what would be done the world over if power were possessed. The Inquisition might have its place in history because of one even more bloody.

Will the authorities in Washington do anything? They will do nothing. Too many "Pan-American" masses have been celebrated on Thanksgiving to expect even a piping voice of protest. We doubt whether Washington would do anything if a Bible agent had been included with the Bibles.

Holy-Land Tablets

ALTHOUGH it is now only a few days since THE CHRISTIAN HERALD published the announcement that it had secured a number of Babylonian tablets, written by the scribes of kings who were contemporaries of Abraham 4,000 years ago, we have already received many letters on the subject, and they are still coming. One of the letters, taken at random from the bunch on our desk, is from a reader in Illinois, who writes:

"I see in your paper of March 25 the pictures of the clay tablets, 4,000 years old. As I have recently traveled near where they were found, I shall be glad to have one of them, and wish you to send me one of the reign of Dungi."

A reader in Cincinnati, Ohio, writes: "Miss ——, a former teacher of mine at the High School, is very deeply interested in such things. I have told her I would give her the little tablet, and I would like you to send it direct to her."

A pastor in New Jersey writes: "I want one of the Chaldean tablets and, if allowable, not one that is mutilated."

Another reader in the same State, evidently connected with church or Sunday school work, writes for a tablet which he desires for exhibition. These are examples of the many letters that are coming to hand from those who have read the notice in THE CHRISTIAN HERALD of March 25, and who appreciate the value of these wonderful relics of antiquity—genuine tablets covered with writing in the wedge-shaped or cuneiform character, which was impressed on the soft clay over forty centuries ago.

There are two points to which we would call the special attention of Sunday school superintendents, teachers, pastors, Bible students and Bible readers everywhere:

1. The absolute genuineness and the age of these tablets are established by the highest authority in this country, whose signed attestation is given with every tablet.

2. The tablets themselves, all of them in an excellent state of preservation, are links that connect the Bible with antiquity, since by the messages they bear they give us an idea of the kind of life the people of Ur lived in the days of Abraham the patriarch. Doubtless Abraham, in his time, knew of the royal libraries or temple archives from which these tablets have been recovered by the excavators. No doubt he, too, could read and write in this strange and wonderful language.

We can imagine nothing more acceptable to lovers of the Bible than one of these tablets. As the quantity at our disposal is limited, and as April 30, when we may have to withdraw this offer, is rapidly approaching, we would urge upon all who intend securing one of these tablets to take advantage of the opportunity at once.

These tablets are not for sale, but THE CHRISTIAN HERALD will give one to each of its friends upon the following condition:

To any person, a member of the Christian Herald Family, who will induce two friends to subscribe for THE CHRISTIAN HERALD for eight months at $1 each, we will send one of these tablets free of all charge: provided we receive the subscriptions not later than April 30.

Each tablet will be accompanied by a facsimile autograph letter authenticating its genuineness, written by Professor Albert T. Clay, professor of Assyriology of Yale University, New Haven, Conn.

NOTICE.—The two subscriptions sent in must be new—that is, they must be in the names and addresses of persons not now on our list.

THE YOUNG PEOPLE'S MEETINGS

and provinces of the opium curse? Not Christian Chinese, but pagans. They feel the shame and horror of the opium habit and traffic so keenly that they are massing together to fight it.

If the pagan Chinese can attack their national curse so bravely, should not the Christians of America at least equal them in their zeal against the curse of strong drink? Why should we sign the Temperance pledge? Just as a Chinese crusader will line up with the opium fighters, so we should line up with those who are attacking the evil of alcohol. The lines are growing more and more closely drawn. The recent spectacle of a thousand serious-minded men marching down a Washington avenue to the Capitol to petition Congress to enact an amendment to the Federal Constitution prohibiting the manufacture and sale of intoxicating liquors shows how far the movement has progressed.
